am fortified by the facts. In 1880 we had an opportunity of arriving at the exact ratio between inhabitants and voters in the Territory of Dakota. An enumeration was taken, taken by the same agencies which took the enumeration in the State of Missouri and in the State of Indiana, and the result is entitled to just as much credit in the case of Dakota as in the cases of the other States and Territories. We have the population given, we have the number of votes that year, and by making a division we find that the ratio of inhabitants to voters was four and eighty-two one-hundredths. Yet for some reason or other the Senator, while accepting this census ratio as applied to all the States and using it in his argument, repudiates the ratio as applied to Dakota, and for the very singular reason that, according to his idea of the course of emigration to Dakota, more women and children went into that Territory prior to 1880 when the only access to it was by the Missouri River or overland, when the travel was not only expensive but tedious and perilous, than have gone into it since, with its twenty-five hundred miles of railway in its own borders, connecting with all of our great east and west lines.

If there is anything perfectly clear, it is that the ratio found to prevail in 1880 instead of being diminished must have been increased from that time till now. The town population of Dakota has increased enormously. Railroads have penetrated the Territory from east to west and some spurs in a north and south direction, so that now there is no reason in the world why an emigrant to Dakota should not take his wife and children with him the very moment he has entered his homestead.

Does the Senator from Missouri think that a ratio of 3 is too much for Dakota? The census showed 4.82. Does he not think that it would be a very stingy arithmetic that would cut them down to 3? If there is a ratio of 3 inhabitants to a voter South Dakota has 165,000 population. I have here the official vote by counties of the Territory of Dakota, with the exception of a single county in Southern Dakota, which was not reported but which is estimated, showing 55,000 votes in Southern Dakota. Is there any Senator on that side of the Chamber who believes that it is an unfair thing to estimate 3 inhabitants to one voter?

I showed in my opening remarks that in some of the Southern States the ratio was 10 to 1; that in the States bordering on Dakota, the States of Nebraska and Minnesota, it was more than 5 to 1—I think 5.17 to 1, as I recall the figures. And it must not be forgotten that in Dakota, as Governor Pierce says in his report, there are quite a number of unorganized counties where the people do not vote, having from one hundred to a thousand population in each. No, Mr. President, no fair argument can be made against the presence in Southern Dakota of a population largely more than the 151,000 required as a basis of representation in the House of Representatives.

But the Senator himself has brought in some witnesses. He indulged in panegyric when he described the character of the gentlemen who brought here a protest against the division of Dakota. He said they were men of great intelligence and of high reputation; that they were men whose statements with reference to sentiment and fact in Dakota were to be accepted with the greatest respect. Did the Senator notice that those very gentlemen declare in their memorial that the Territory of Dakota had then 400,000 inhabitants—the whole Territory? The memorial was presented nearly a year ago. It is conceded that two-thirds or more of the population is in the southern part of the Territory. The very gentlemen whose sentiment upon the subject of division he regards as so influential, and whose character he describes as so high, tell us that at that time there were over 400,000 people in the whole Territory.

The Senator seemed to think that it was a great innovation, a grave departure from precedents, and a most outrageous and extraordinary thing that an artificial line, a parallel of latitude, should be established as a line of division between North and South Dakota. He said there was no great river there rolling like the turbulent Missouri does through his State. Why should it be divided? The Senator is too familiar with the map not to know that artificial lines are the frequent, and even the ordinary, boundaries of States in this country. His reason will show him that it is the best boundary, because it is certain and unfluctuating. It is well for the State of Missouri that she did not border on the Missouri River. That line would have been very difficult to define from year to year. If the middle thread of the stream had been one of her borders, some of her citizens would, very likely, have found themselves in another State without moving out of their houses. The low-water mark, the middle thread of a stream, particularly streams flowing through alluvial beds, is rather a bad boundary for a State, whereas a parallel of latitude is absolutely the most convenient, easily marked, and certain line that could be adopted.

But does the Senator think that it is an unusual thing to divide a Territory and admit one part of it as a State? No; he can not think that, because it was the course pursued with that great domain which we called the Northwestern Territory. It was first placed from Ohio to its extreme borders under one Territorial organization, and when the settlements in that part nearest to the States became sufficiently numerous and the population sufficiently great Ohio was carved out of the Northwestern Territory and constituted a State.

When the march of settlement had gone farther west, Indiana, which had embraced under that name as a Territory much territory west and north, was carved out and constituted into a State. So it will be seen that vast territories, section by section, divided more often upon artificial lines than by natural barriers, were constituted parcel by parcel into States. The same policy was pursued in connection with the great grant which we got under the treaty with France in the purchase of Louisiana. State after State was carved out of it. It never was thought before that because, for convenience in organizing a Territory, a vast sweep was included under one Territorial organization by force of that fact the whole Territory thus organized must come into the Union as a single State. No one suggested it when Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin came into the Union. It was simply a question whether the area of country proposed to be constituted into a State was sufficient to give the State a respectable standing among the great States of the Union. It was simply a question whether the divisions were convenient. It never was thought before to be a reprehensible thing to divide one of these great Territories.

If I were to look for an intimation in Congressional legislation as to what was about the right size of a State I should look at these States which have been thus carved off from a vast outlying country. Just as if I wanted to get the judgment of the carver at the head of the table as to how much venison or turkey would be good for my friend I should look at the work of his carving-knife. We see Congress constituting Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Missouri as States of the Union. They were not stinted for territory. Missouri might have been pushed westward indefinitely when she was admitted into the Union. Ohio might have been stretched westward to the Wabash or the Mississippi, and yet I am pleading here for the admission of a State that is larger than any one of the States thus constituted by the American Congress.

If I were to look for another suggestion in public legislation as to what was a reasonable size for a State I should look to the act admitting the great State of Texas into the Union. It was there provided that that State might be divided into not more than five States, which would give to each an area of about 52,000 square miles, or 25,000 less than the area of the Territory of South Dakota. Texas, California, Nevada, Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, and Oregon would be larger than the State of Dakota, and only those. I do not think the Senator was so definite that I would be justified in saying that he had made the point that South Dakota did not have sufficient area for a State; but if that point is involved at all in his argument, I submit that a State which would be 7,500 square miles larger than the State the Senator so ably represents ought to be accepted as big enough.

But the Senator has a poor opinion of the productive capacity of Dakota. He has great doubt whether if it were divided it would be able to sustain in the divided portions such a population as would enable it to rank fairly with Missouri, for instance, among the States.

The soil of Dakota, he said, was very similar to and its agricultural adaptations very much like that of Colorado and Nevada. I do not think I misquote the Senator, though I do not pause to read his exact words. That certainly was a comparison which came into the mind of the Senator while he was upon his feet, and that he did not have an opportunity to verify by any reference to census tables of production or soil. Nevada is perched on the mountain-tops; Dakota is a great plain. If he had said that as to the great bulk of its lands Dakota was similar in its agricultural adaptation to the States of Nebraska and Minnesota, which border it on the east and south, he would have been nearer to the exact truth. Nevada was admitted into the Union of the States in 1864; Colorado was admitted in 1876. Now I want to show how unlike the Territory of Dakota is to the States of Nevada and Colorado, judged as agricultural States, and I do not mean at all to underrate the capacity at least of Colorado to maintain a great population.

In 1880 the State of Nevada, which was admitted into the Union of the States twenty years ago, had only 1,404 farms; Colorado, which has been a State for ten years, had 4,506 farms, while Dakota had 17,435, or 11,525 more farms than both those States put together. Dakota like those States! The eager searchers for agricultural lands, the restless men who shake off the limitations of a settled neighborhood, sell out their little farms, and go out to look for land, know good land when they see it, and the comparison which I have made between the number of farms taken up shows the judgment of the settlers. It is not a fair comparison to liken Dakota's capacity to sustain population to Nevada or Colorado.

But that is not all. Nevada had a total of land in farms of 530,862 acres, and Colorado had a total of 1,165,373 acres; while Dakota had 3,800,656 acres in farms in 1880, or over 2,200,000 acres more in farms than both of those States combined.

Let us look at their production and see how those States compare with Dakota. In 1880 Nevada raised 69,298 bushels of wheat, Colorado 1,425,000 bushels, the total of the two States being 1,494,312 bushels. In that same year Dakota produced 2,830,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. FRYE. Dakota entire?

Mr. HARRISON. The entire Territory; I am speaking of that now

I should say to the Senator from Maine that of this 2,830,000 bushels somewhat less than half of it was raised in Southern Dakota, but I think Southern Dakota itself—I gave the exact figures in my opening remarks—was very nearly equal to the aggregate production of those two States in wheat. As I stated in my opening remarks, the wheat crop of Dakota for this year is estimated at 30,000,000 bushels.

Nevada produced 12,891 bushels of corn in 1880; Colorado produced 455,968 bushels; an aggregate of 468,859 bushels for the two States. Dakota produced 2,000,000 bushels of corn the same year, nearly all of it in Southern Dakota. So we have here in Dakota 1,400,000 bushels more of wheat and over a million and a half more bushels of corn raised in 1880 than in the combined States to which the Senator from Missouri likens Dakota as to its agricultural possibilities.

But the Senator said that this new Territory had become the abode of the agricultural monopolists; that its farms were great farms; and he alluded to the great Dalrymple farm, which many here have seen perhaps, though I have not. It has been made too much to stand as a sample Dakota farm. Would the Senator believe that the census shows the average acreage in each farm in Dakota to be only 218 acres? It is not a land of Dalrymple farms, where agricultural monopolists have absorbed the entire Territory and bring only in harvest-time fugitive workmen to reap the crop and then send them off. The average acreage of farms in Dakota is only 218. In North Carolina it is 212, and in Oregon it is 260.

I procured from the Commissioner of the General Land Office the statistics of homestead entries in the Territory of Dakota. I do not intend to put in the entire table, for it is not necessary, but I notice that the first homestead entry marked here in North Dakota was in 1871. The original homestead entries in South Dakota go back further than this table, which begins in 1863 with seventy-five homestead entries in South Dakota that year. The total number of original homestead entries in South Dakota is 62,400, and the number of acres taken up is 9,677,463.

The Senator seems to have the impression that the emigration to Dakota in recent years has been composed of amateur cowboys—men without families, who went out to ranches to live in huts on the hills and ride bronchos. Let me show the Senator the number of homestead entries made in Dakota in 1884 in a single year. In Southern Dakota the number was 10,117. I do not mean to say that every one of these implies a family. I believe it is true that some women have taken homesteads in Dakota, and I have seen some remarkable stories of their success as agriculturists. I should not be at all surprised if Miss Bones, whose letter the Senator read yesterday, was a homesteader in Dakota. These homestead entries imply not cowboys, not ranchmen, not cattle-herders on the public domain, but farmers, who have gone there to take up the moderate amount of land allowed by the homestead law and to make homes about which families are to be gathered.

The Senator argued at some length the question as to the sentiment of the Territory on the subject of division. I should be glad to ask the Senator whether if it were made clear to his mind that a very large per cent., largely more than a majority of the people of Dakota, favored division he would favor it. If not, it is idle for him to be arguing the question as to what the wishes of the people are. If that would influence him in the smallest degree, then I invite him to offer an amendment to the bill which shall provide for submitting the question of a division as a preliminary measure to a vote of the people of the Territory, and that the scheme for the admission of the southern half shall be staid unless a majority of the people vote for division.

As I say, there is no use discussing the question of the wishes of the people unless their wishes when they are known are to be in some degree influential with Senators; and yet as I understand the Senator if every voter in Dakota, if every inhabitant, man, woman, and child in the Territory, north and south, were to express here by petition their desire for a division on the forty-sixth parallel he would not vote for it. Then it is not very important to find out what their wishes are; but I want to look at that question for a moment, and I wish to say here that if any Senator would be influenced at all by such a vote as I have described I should not oppose an amendment to the bill which would ascertain in some authoritative way the sentiment of the people on that subject.

The Senator by way of showing opposition in the Territory to a division brought here a memorial presented by a delegation from Bismarck rather than from Dakota, and there is this peculiar thing about the representations of that memorial. It refers to a vote taken on a bill which the Senator from Missouri described as a bill dividing the Territory of Dakota and admitting the southern portion of it. The memorial refers to the bill as having been presented to the Senate in 1876, and it assumes to give the vote taken in the Senate upon the bill. I have had a careful examination made of the Journals of the Senate from 1871 to this time, and the experts in the document-room have been unable to find any trace of such a bill or of such a vote. It may yet be discovered, but up to this time it seems probable that these memorialists were mistaken; but if it is true, what would be its probative effect, I may ask?

The Senator from Missouri proves, if this is to be accepted as a journal record of the action of the Senate, that his own present colleague, my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and that his own distinguished predecessor, Senator Bogy, both voted in 1876 for a division of the Territory on the forty-sixth parallel and for the admission of the southern part of it as a State, and not only those Democratic Senators, but the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and several others whose names I do not recall. Now, in the name of consistency, a jewel which I know my friend the senior Senator from Missouri highly values, for I know how he clings to precedent in the Committee on Military Affairs—in the name of the jewel of consistency, I beg at least the senior Senator from Missouri and the Senator from North Carolina and any surviving members here in the Senate of that noble band of Democrats who voted for the admission of Dakota in 1876 to stand by it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly; with great pleasure.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unfortunately I was not present during the first part of my colleague's speech yesterday, when a paper was read (my attention has been called to it this morning) in which it is stated that in 1876 there was a vote taken in the Senate on this question. I have the paper before me, but I have not examined it very carefully. I believe it states that the question was only on a proposed division of Dakota.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the Senator will find that his colleague, on page 143 of the RECORD, after an interruption by me, says it was a bill dividing the Territory of Dakota and admitting the southern half of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The memorial only refers to a bill to divide the Territory. Now I desire to say simply that if a proposition was ever before the Senate to divide the Territory I should doubtless have voted for it. If there has ever been any proposition before the Senate for the admission of the Territory since I have been a member of it, from the 4th of March, 1875, to this time, I have certainly not voted for it. I am opposed on principle to the admission of new Territories with immense area and a small population, and I have persistently and consistently voted against any proposition for their admission as States in the Union.

I desire to say that I have searched every solitary Journal of the Senate from 1870 to 1883, and I can find no record of any such vote as is stated in the memorial. I can find no yea-and-nay vote upon that question at all. I have before me every bill that was introduced and printed so far as the Journal shows touching Dakota. The first one was in the Forty-fifth Congress. There were memorials presented previously, but this is a bill, Senate bill 144, reported by Senator Chaffee, February 28, 1878, accompanied by report No. 110. It was to establish the Territory of Lincoln and provide a temporary government therefor. I can not find that there was ever any yea-and-nay vote or any division taken upon that bill. That was the first paper in the shape of a bill. Then, in 1879, Senator Paddock, of Nebraska, introduced a bill. In 1880 Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, introduced a bill, and my colleague upon that bill made a minority report.

In 1881 a bill was introduced by Senator Windom to divide the Territory and form a Territorial government, but I do not find any vote taken upon it. I have a recollection that there has been a vote taken in the Senate since I have been a member of it upon the division of Dakota, but I have no recollection of any vote having been taken for the organization of the Territory of Dakota into a State, and I should like very much for the record of it to be found. I have examined the Journals myself. I understand the Senator from Indiana has also had some examination made, and I called upon the gentleman to whom we all look for information, our reporter, and he was not able, in the few moments he gave, to find it; so that there must be some mistake in regard to a portion of the memorial.

Mr. HARRISON. I am very sorry the record can not be found, because it would show that the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from Missouri who has just spoken, and two or three other Senators, perhaps, on that side of the Chamber had given a very creditable vote. The Senator from Missouri who has just taken his seat says that he would vote at any time for a division; he thinks the Territory ought to be divided; he would vote now for a division. There is a conflict then between him and the junior Senator from that State, who turns his batteries most strongly, perhaps, upon the proposition for a division of the Territory, while the senior Senator from Missouri says he is constitutionally opposed to the admission of a State with a large area and a small population, and therefore he is going to vote against the admission of Southern Dakota. The area is large, ample, in his mind, for a State. May I ask the Senator whether he does not think that a population equal to a basis of representation in the House of Representatives is sufficient population for the admission of a State?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; not if it had four times that much. That is no criterion at all.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is frank, perhaps, in that respect; without intending to indulge in any odious comparison, I might say franker than his colleague, because he says he would vote against the admission of Dakota if it had four times 150,000 population. The area in his mind is ample for a State. If a Democratic Territory with 600,000 inhabitants and a sufficient area, and the other necessary incidents of Statehood, were to ask his vote, I think he would change his mind. Mr. President, to refuse Dakota admission is one method of disfranchising men, and when the disfranchisement goes upon the ground of political opinion, and can find no other justification in precedent or reason, it is an outrage upon the rights of a free people.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] fortified himself in his argument to sustain the proposition that the people did not desire admission as a State by two most extraordinary letters. He did not deal with the evidence furnished by conventions and Legislatures. He brought individual witnesses. I must say that I was surprised at the bitterness with which the Senator from Missouri talked about ambitious politicians, and attributed to the presence of a pernicious and pestiferous class of men whom he thus described all this agitation for a division and for Statehood in the Territory of Dakota.

Now, the common men, the grangers of this country, I think would be apt to speak of that large body of friends which the Senator has in his own State, who are active about election times, who are candidates for office and holding office, who forward and support his claims to the position which he occupies here—they would be apt to describe that class of men as politicians, and perhaps some might even apply to the Senator and myself the epithet "an ambitious politician;" so I think we should be a little careful not to let this word get down into the gutter.

Mr. VEST. I never used it in that sense.

Mr. HARRISON. All through the Senator's speech there is talk about the ambitious politicians who are misrepresenting the sentiment of Dakota. He imputes to these the low ambition to hold new offices to be created, and the low motive of seeking Statehood and a division of the Territory simply that they might increase the official list. All through the Senator's speech he was talking of such a class. Now, I desire to ask him does he include in that category, did he mean that these scornful words should apply to that large body of reputable Democrats in the Territory of Dakota who have made themselves very active in seeking this relief.

There has not a delegation come from Dakota to this capital to press her claims to Statehood that has not had in it many influential and respectable Democrats. Does the Senator think those men were after offices? Where did they expect to get them? Did they expect to get them by the popular vote in a Territory which gave at the last election 55,000 Republican majority? Did they expect to get them through a Republican administration here at Washington? No; I must defend these gentlemen of his own political household from the imputation that in asking him as a Democrat and in asking other Democrats on the opposite side of this Chamber to do justice to Dakota they were actuated by any low ambition or by any selfish purpose.

But these letters, the letter from Hon. J. P. Richmond and from Marietta M. Bones, which the Senator produced here, and on which he laid great stress, as showing that the people of Dakota were not really in favor of admission, let us look at them. The Senator said:

I caused these letters to be read because they come from persons who are not members of the party to which I belong, because they are not politicians—

There was some special value growing out of that—but citizens of Dakota, and because they show in my judgment the real sentiment and opinion of the people of that Territory who are not influenced by political or personal considerations.

Mr. J. P. Richmond, whose letter comes first, addresses Hon. David Davis and requests him in a postscript to hand the letter to the Senator from Missouri. Now, I want to look at that letter for one moment. The Senator says the writer does not belong to his political party, but I think I can prove that he does. He says he is a native of Maryland to start with, and that he was a member of the Illinois Legislature before the war. So much for his nativity and history. Now let us look a little at his sentiments. He says:

These—

The people who are urging admission—

These are the self-constituted representatives appearing at Washington urging admission. As far as my knowledge extends, I know of no person of any party besides those mentioned who is in favor of Statehood.

He does not know a man except those who have been to Washington who favors admission. He lives in Bon Homme County, in the Territory of Dakota, and to ascertain how extensive his acquaintance is and how intimate he is with his neighbors I looked at the vote of that county when the Huron constitution was submitted in 1883 to a vote of the people, and I found that about 450 voters in Bon Homme County had voted for the Huron constitution. Yet this correspondent of the Senator does not know a man who favors admission, though there were 450 voters in his own county who voted for a constitution for the State in 1883. But that is only by the way. Listen now at this indication of political sentiment, upon which I base my opinion that he is a Democrat:

The majority of voters here are foreign-born, and do not yet understand the nature of our institutions, indeed not more than the colored people of the South.

Now, I take it that there is a Know-Nothing Democrat. He evidently entirely agrees with a sentiment that is prevalent, if not prevailing, at the South, that the colored man does not understand our institutions and is not a competent or fit voter. And then he declares that Dakota ought not to be admitted because a majority of her settlers are foreign-born. He has a prejudice against foreign-born people. I think he was an old Maryland Know-Nothing; he must have belonged to that old party, and, as my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggests, that old party in Maryland, after some feeble protest, in great part consented to a lasting wedlock with the Democratic party.

But, Mr. President, the statement of this gentleman is just as wide of the truth when he alludes to the ratio of foreign and native born citizens in Dakota as it is when he says that he does not know a man who is in favor of Statehood. According to the census of 1880 there was a majority of over 30,000 of the inhabitants of Dakota that were native born; and yet this intelligent correspondent, upon whom the Senator puts his belief with so much confidence, declares that a majority of the population of the Territory are foreign born.

Now a word or two as to Miss Bones. I can see the bond of union between Miss Bones and the Senator from Missouri. It appears in this letter. She is a woman suffragist and she knows how ably and earnestly on every occasion the junior Senator from Missouri has stood up for woman suffrage. Mr. President, I do not deem it fair to avail of the privileges of debate here to say anything discourteous or disrespectful of any person whose name is brought into debate by the use of a letter. It would be enough for me to show what the argument of Miss Bones against Statehood is. She thinks they do not want any more officers in the Territory and that the number would be increased if the State was admitted to the Union. Hear her plea. She says:

As an illustration of officers to be supported by this poor struggling people in this town (Webster, the county seat of Day County), which has not one hundred and fifty inhabitants, there are nine notaries public; six of these nine have all the following titles: land locating, loan agents, and notary public.

Miss Bones is opposed to the admission of Dakota as a State because she fears it would increase the number of notaries public in the State. Why, Mr. President, these notaries public are not a tax on anybody; they draw no salary; they derive fees from those who come to them for the acknowledgment of any paper or the administration of an oath; and yet this intelligent lady, whose discussion of this question is dragged in here to outweigh the sentiment of conventions composed of hundreds of the leading citizens of all parties, bases an argument on the number of notaries public in Dakota.

Sir, the real ground of opposition on the part of Miss Bones to the admission of the State appears toward the close of her letter. It is said that a lady always puts in a postscript the important part of her letter, and Miss Bones while not making this a postscript yet makes it the concluding paragraph of her epistle. She says:

Yet with all the eagerness of our politicians to rush us into the Union unprepared, at their (not the people's) State constitutional convention, they absolutely refused to acknowledge "as equal before the law" our most sober and industrious citizens—women.

For this and other good reasons herein assigned I pray your honorable body to deny them admission as a State until we are older and they are wise enough to know that a State constitution must be founded upon the true principles of right and justice to her most humble citizen as it does to her highest.

Here is the proposition. While the Senator from Missouri was a little modest in urging it, and while he has held back under cover his motive for opposing the admission of Dakota, perhaps we have discovered it here, and he means that Dakota shall be kept out of the Union until by a constitutional provision she adopts woman suffrage.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VEST. In these and any other facetious remarks my distinguished friend will always find my sympathy. I know what he says can only be used as sarcasm, but I hope he will not permit this to pass without my statement that if any one has ever opposed the dogma of woman suffrage I think it has been the junior Senator from Missouri. With that explanation I have no objection to his remarks going.

Mr. HARRISON. If I should publish my remarks otherwise than in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where, of course, the Senator's will appear, I will put a foot-note or I will embody in the text the statement he has just made; and, if he will allow me, I will add further that I think if he had not been under great stress in his argument against the admission of Dakota he never would have used in support of any proposition that he argued any communication which was tainted with the suggestion of female suffrage or which came from one of its advocates.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, without interrupting him further, it was my duty as a Senator to lay that before the Senate in any event. Information from any State or Territory addressed to the Senate of the United States pertinent to the question under consideration should be communicated to the body. There is in the same communication a recommendation to the Senator from Indiana that he has overlooked. She says she is a Republican.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has not had this letter printed accurately. It begins "Sir," and the address at the conclusion is "Hon. Geo. G. Vest, U. S. Senator." It was a private communication, I am sure, and while the Senator did not, of course, violate any obligation of secrecy in producing it, it seems to have been intended for his own personal use.

Mr. VEST. It was addressed to "the Senate of the U. S."

Mr. HARRISON. It is not so printed.

Mr. VEST. It is so in the original.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, Mr. President, I accept the Senator's explanation, that he offered this under that compulsion which rests upon any Senator, when any citizen of the country, however humble, addresses a communication to this body in respectful terms, to present it, and that he would not have used it in his argument if it had not been for this obligation.

Mr. President, even this lady insists upon division, as does also Mr. Richmond.

Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I propose to leave this question to the judgment of the Senate. I will not repeat the propositions which I have endeavored to maintain. I will only remind Senators that this population, which is entitled to their respect, which is entitled to the care of this body as charged with the enactment of public laws, is, by the testimony of men whose veracity you can not impeach, now hampered, restrained by an inadequate governmental organization; that the business of its courts is so delayed and encumbered as to amount to a denial of justice.

Let every Senator, then, answer to his own conscience. Let him remember that he is making a precedent so far as his vote and influence go that is to be applied in the future. Let him find some reason satisfactory to his own mind why a Territory that would be the eighth in size among the States if she were admitted, that has undeniably a population in excess of the ratio for a member in the House of Representatives, that has an intelligent, educated, Christian population, without an institution or a custom that is in any degree out of harmony with our civilization—let Senators answer to their own consciences and to their constituencies why such a community shall be longer denied access to the Union.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me to introduce a resolution?

Mr. VEST. I will yield the floor to the Senator from Ohio directly. It is not my purpose to detain the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Indiana made an explanation about a letter.

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all. It was a letter that even if addressed to the Senator it was perfectly proper and according to custom to use in debate.

Mr. VEST. I only want to call the attention of the Senate to this letter. The first sentence of it reads:

> Will you please do a Dakota (Republican) citizen the favor of presenting to the United States Senate reasons why our Territory should not be admitted to the Union as a State?

And in conclusion the prayer of the petition, for though in the form of a letter it is really a petition, is:

> I pray your honorable body.

It is really addressed to the Senate of the United States. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask leave now without displacing the current business to introduce a joint resolution, which I will ask consent of the Senate to act upon at once if it meets no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce at this time a resolution which will be read for information.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The Secretary read the joint resolution (S. R. 101) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause to be executed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing such suitable cards of invitation as may be prescribed by the commission appointed by the joint resolution of May 13, 1884, to make arrangements for suitable ceremonies upon the completion of the Washington Monument, and the Public Printer is directed to furnish such necessary programmes and cards as may be required by said commission. And the ceremonies provided for by said commission shall take place on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1885. And to defray the expenses incurred under the provisions of said joint resolution the additional sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to receiving the resolution at this time? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was read twice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORGAN. I would ask the Senator from Ohio why he puts the celebration on the 21st of February?

Mr. SHERMAN. It happens that the resolution passed at the last session provided for it on the 22d, properly, but that happens to come on Sunday, and the commission were unanimously of opinion that it was not right to execute it, and therefore we changed the day to Saturday, the day before, the 21st of February.

Mr. MORGAN. I regret to differ from that opinion, but I think there is no day too sacred for that work of celebration on the part of this nation. I think that this is an event which rises quite as high as a national sabbath, as any other sabbath that may be ordained by law or may be recognized by Christianity.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate will remember that a large number of delegations are coming from different parts of the United States, some of them military in their character, and the commission felt unanimously that it was not wise to put those ceremonies in antagonism to a sentiment among the religious people of the country, and, therefore, it was deemed better to change the time. We did not feel at liberty to do it without the consent of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7577) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the committee on Appropriations.

IMPROVEMENT OF GALVESTON HARBOR.

Mr. COKE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Public Printer is instructed to procure 2,000 copies of the lithographic map prepared by Joseph Nimmo, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to accompany his report on the improvement of Galveston Harbor, and incorporate the same in the majority report of the Committee on Commerce accompanying Senate bill No. 1652.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Senate will resume the consideration of the unfinished business, pending which the Senator from North Carolina moves——

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator defer that until we take a vote on the Dakota bill? I do not know whether there is to be any further debate.

Mr. RANSOM. I make the motion because the debate has been interrupted already.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to have printed an amendment that I propose to offer in the nature of a substitute to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. Did I understand the Senator from Arkansas to offer a substitute for the Dakota bill?

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the Dakota bill. It involves several sections, and I have prepared it under some little confusion while sitting here. I wish, with the consent of the Senator from Indiana, that the bill may go over until Monday, and then we shall be prepared to take it up. This is not an amendment to the framework of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to yielding to the request of the Senator from Arkansas. I suppose we might have an understanding that we shall vote on the question on Monday.

Mr. GARLAND. I shall be perfectly willing for one.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that anything I may say will interfere with that arrangement, but it seems to me that it would be premature now to agree on Monday as the day for taking the vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not ask it if any Senator objects.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it is not at all unlikely that we may come to a vote on Monday or Tuesday, but I should not like to agree now to the vote being taken then.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not press the suggestion if there is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Arkansas as offering at this time an amendment or giving notice of an intention to offer one?

Mr. GARLAND. I give notice of my intention, but I send it up now that it may be printed by Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the order to print will be made.

Mr. CULLOM. I rise more for an inquiry than anything else. Senate bill No. 2112, to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes, was made the special order for to-day. In case the bill is not reached to-day will it follow as the special order after the present pending bill is disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the special orders are to be taken up in the order for which they may be assigned, and not in the order at which the Senate made the direction.

Mr. CULLOM. The desire I have is that it shall follow the bill now under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is his duty to lay the first special order before the Senate on the conclusion of the pending business, the time having arrived when it should be laid before the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 11, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats: Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. NICHOLLS.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the unfinished business coming over from yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Pending the demand for the regular order, the Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with law, an abstract of claims on account of Indian depredations, presented to the Secretary of the Interior since February 20, 1884, together with the action taken thereon and the evidence on which the same is based; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRINTING AND BINDING CODIFIED LAND LAWS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, asking an appropriation of $2,500 for printing, binding, and distributing the codified land laws and history of the public domain of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

OFFICE OF THE SECOND AUDITOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Second Auditor, relative to additional accommodations required for his office, and making an increase of $1,200 in the estimates for rent of buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPRINT OF A REPORT.

On motion of Mr. HUNT, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that the report from the Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, accompanying House bill No. 4984, be reprinted for the use of the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

At the request of Mr. OURY, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw papers in the claim of William Christy from the files of the House, there being no adverse report.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WACO, TEX.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague will, I hope, yield to me for a moment to make a request of the House to which I believe there can be no objection.

I desire to ask consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage Senate bill No. 52, providing for the erection of a public building at Waco, Tex.; and I want to state to the House in this connection what will be remembered by all—if gentlemen will recall the action taken in reference to this matter when it was under consideration—that this bill, or rather I should say another bill, a House bill precisely similar and identical to it word for word, was considered by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and recommended to the House for passage, and is now upon the Speaker's table, no action having been taken upon that recommendation by the House. I ask now that this Senate bill be taken up and passed. There has not been a bill of this character passed by this Congress; and gentlemen will recognize the fact that there is great and pressing necessity for the passage of certain of these bills through the House without delay.

Mr. REAGAN. I shall be very much pleased to gratify my colleague and yield for his request, but I can not consent to do so if the bill which he now calls up is likely to give rise to debate or consume much time in its consideration. It is all-important that speedy action should be taken upon the unfinished business.

Mr. MILLS. If it leads to any debate I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. REAGAN. With that understanding I shall not object to the request.

The SPEAKER. The bill to which the gentleman from Texas refers will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. PERKINS. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill S. 348.

Mr. TULLY. I call for the regular order.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WACO, TEX.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. Is the call for the regular order insisted on?

Mr. TULLY. I withdraw the call for the regular order.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to know whether this is to open the floodgates to all the bills for public buildings.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before action is taken upon this bill I hope the report will be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this is a Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a corresponding bill which has been reported by the House committee. Let the report of the House committee be read.

Mr. BRUMM. I object to the present consideration of the bill. There are many others in the same condition as this. Let them all take their chance together.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 7676) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the House resumes the consideration of the special order, the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce and to regulate such commerce. The gentleman from California [Mr. GLASCOCK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GLASCOCK. Mr. Speaker, in discussing a measure so fraught with moment to the great body of our industrial and commercial interests it is necessary to examine its approaches with some degree of caution. The railroad problem is not easy of access, much less of ready solution, to those who have not been charged with a close, constant, and practical study of its details. The many complexities that invest the latter-day railway transportation existence, the interdependence of its many parts, the delicate adjustment of its complicated machinery, its close connection with trade, and the stimulating and diversifying influence that it exercises upon all forms of industry, commend its careful and skilled supervision to a power that may be used to destroy when it should regulate.

We recognize in it a potential factor of civilization. It binds a continent and practically annihilates space in the diffusion of production. It tunnels the mountain and tracks the desert. It furnishes an outlet for the farm, the loom, and the forge. On the other hand, although itself the creature of trade, by combination it holds trade in an iron grasp, and where competition is wanting imposes its own terms upon production.

Transportation depends upon production for existence, as production depends upon it for profit. The connection between the two is so intimate that an injury inflicted upon one is an injury to the other. This is so manifest that one would suspect naught but the friendliest and most obliging relations between the two. And such would be the case were the millennium come and selfishness eliminated from human transactions. But the shipper must have the highest profit on production, and the carrier will, where not prevented by competition or controlled by law, assess traffic what it will bear. The constant warfare between these two great conflicting interests has given rise to the agitation that has resulted in constitutional enactments in twenty-two States regulating the operations of the railway carrier within State limits and now demands Congressional legislation to regulate commerce between the States.

It is conceded that much of the evil formerly complained of has been remedied. Many sharp angles have been smoothed by the friction of trade. Whether this has happened, as intimated by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Governor LONG] through a realization on the part of the corporations that "the nearer the approach to fair and square dealing the better it pays in the long run," or through the sharp competition that has sprung in the carrying service from improved water ways and the rapid and enormous increase in population with the resultant increase in the area of production, it is immaterial for us to inquire. This might lead to a discussion of ethics and good morals which, although always in order, would at present be altogether unprofitable.

Suffice it that freight rates on the whole have decreased with us to such an extent that our freight is now carried at a less rate per ton per mile than in Belgium, France, and England; that our rates have fallen on the average, in a decade, from 2½ cents per ton per mile to less than a cent; that in the diminution of rate for through traffic, sometimes at the expense of way traffic, the food product of the great West has found its way to the populous East and the mill product of the East has turned to the West by rapid transit and at such cheapened rates that they are brought within easy reach of all consumers.

But with the consideration of these matters, while deserving of praise, we have nothing to do. The efforts of the committee were directed to the formulation of certain rules that would in a general way meet the complaints made and at the same time allow the carrier the fullest liberty of operation compatible with the protection of commerce. Unreasonable charges, taking into consideration the cost of service and the advantages accruing to the shipper by reason of increased facilities in rapid and safe shipment, unjust discriminations between contemporaneous shippers, actual and possible broader combinations between carriers by which competition is virtually destroyed and the power placed in the hands of the carrier to unreasonably tax production—these are the questions that now claim the serious attention of this body.

After much labor of analysis—many, I trust, profitable weeks of discussion by the ablest railroad talent in the country (whose arguments, printed by order of the committee, seem, judging from certain lines of reasoning adopted in the preceding part of this debate, to have found their way to the desks of others besides members of the committee on the floor of this House)—after long and mature deliberation, the committee rejected eighteen bills submitted to it and presented to the House in lieu thereof the bill now under consideration. This bill, I am happy to say, has found a champion in at least one member of the committee, who, while not claiming the paternity thereof, is yet willing to be placed in the category of foster-father to this orphan without dotting a bib or crossing a tucker.

In this diversity of opinion the committee but reflected the thought of the country at large upon this perplexing and fascinating question. Granted certain evils, how can legislation be brought to bear upon them so as to cure without injury? How can we formulate a rule of conduct for the carrier that will not prove harsh and iron-clad and will not fail to meet the shifting demands of a varying trade? We are told that if the Government lays its strong hand upon the carrying service trade will suffer. We learn among other things that a combination of competitors will not prevent competition; that it is just and fair to charge one shipper more than another for similar service, or, rather, to charge the same originally to both, and then by a secret rebate to one to create the inequality complained of.

Noli me tangere is the motto of transportation, to which might be justly added the nemo me impune lacessit, of sharper and truer significance. Is it right? Is it just that production should be tied hand and foot and handed over to the tender mercies of its great servant? Of course transportation is too astute to kill the industry that lays the golden egg; but why should it complain when the moderate though firm hand of authority is laid upon its efforts to force nature by demanding of an already overburdened production that it honor its double, and often treble, drafts for the golden product?

You who live in the East have not felt as we of the West the full measure of this evil. Nature has provided you with abundant water ways. Inland seas and magnificent rivers are the natural competitors of the railway. These water ways, furnishing a naturally cheaper means of transportation, control and fix the rates of carriage by land as well as on their own element Besides this, a growing and restless people, stimulated by example and eager to acquire wealth, have dug costly canals and constructed other railways, until now the East is rife with competition in the carrying service. The supply of transporting agencies is in excess of the local demand, and in consequence transportation must stretch its arms to the boundless prairies and fertile valleys of the West.

There, however, the conditions are changed. With a population sparse in proportion to territory, the railway holds sway undisputed, save by rivals of its kind. We have no inland seas, no majestic rivers, to dictate terms of transportation to these gentlemen. We have no canals except those used for purposes of irrigation—adjuncts to production, not of transportation. When these railway carriers combine, pool, confederate, as they can and now do, what mercy can production expect? The farmer must, to get ahead in the world, ship his surplus product. Neighborhood consumption is soon exhausted and with small returns. If it be fed to live-stock, that in turn must be marketed.

In any event transportation must be had at any price above the cost of the article shipped. True, the carrier must live. He has a valuable and costly property in which his money has been invested and from which he must make a reasonable profit. This he is entitled to, and of this no reasonable man would deprive him. I would be the last to counsel or sanction the divorcing of any man from the legitimate fruits of his industry. It is the illegitimate fruits of unchecked power that we object to, and furthermore to the power itself that enables capital by combining to pluck the fruits of others labor without let or hinderance from lawful authority.

When a carrier under corporate authority invests his money in a carrying plant he dons the livery of public service, becomes an agent for the public, and renders himself amenable to public supervision and authority. His plant is his private property. He can give it away, sell it, destroy it. It can not be taken from him except by the laws of eminent domain upon full compensation paid. But so long as he uses it in the performance of the powers and privileges flowing from his charter, his service is a public service and he to that extent becomes a public servant, invested with the obligations of full and fair service for an adequate remuneration.

Is the public to sit idly by and see its servants confederating and combining with the intent and obvious result of exempting themselves from their proportionate share of the burdens of service? But, say the friends of the pool, unless the carriers are permitted to combine, competitive strife, cuts in rates, railroad wars, fluctuations in business, and unsettlement of securities will be the inevitable and disastrous result. It might, and the contingency is to be deplored. But we can not do evil that good may come of it. We can not permit the power given by combination to throttle production. Railroad wars occurred before the divine intricacies of the pooling system were evolved from the mental consciousness of the railroad expert. They have occurred since the pool has been in active operation, and the country still lives. They will occur so long as human cupidity backed by corporate soullessness holds the reins of the carrying power. There are no doubt many who conscientiously believe in the efficacy of the pool to cure the evils that so frequently result from sharp competition. But the fact is, in my humble judgment, no human power can prevent the precipitation of the conditions just mentioned so long as avarice and selfishness dominate the commercial world.

Trade will find its level wherever carried on, and railway as other corporations must render obedience to the law that dominates it—supply and demand. Railways spring from the necessities of the people, and like all other pursuits so originated offer a fair field to the investor. It is the effort to make them monopolies that proves baneful to the public and ruinous to the investor. The business that outrages the public by its charges must give way to some other in which the investor is satisfied with smaller returns, or it must absorb the new enterprise, and this can be done only at a price above cost. Every new absorption must be attended by increased fictitious capitalization to enable it to meet and conquer the next competitor. Either the process of absorption must continue or crushing must be resorted to. Either event is disastrous to the business public and to investors.

And right here lies the chief danger to be apprehended from this pooling system. The great pools are monopolies within their jurisdiction. If they are allowed to live and increase they will absorb or crush their weaker rivals, and the result will be the inthrallment of industrial enterprise and the establishment of a business oligarchy which will hold despotic sway over land transportation and practically control the waters of our country. This may seem visionary, but it is within the limits of possibility. When we reflect that forty great lines are pooled between Chicago and the Eastern seaboard, that the Mississippi Valley and the Southwest are under pool, and that the West is in similar condition, it does not appear such a remote contingency that some master hand may in the not distant future weave all these threads into the warp and woof of a great railway transportation personality, that will be a standing menace not only to the liberty of production but to the free institutions of our fair land.

Considerable has been said in the course of this debate concerning the English policy of railway amalgamations, and the impression has been conveyed, whether designedly or not, that in England pooling is recognized as lawful. Not so. On the contrary, whenever a pooling contract has come before the courts it has been declared void. The common-law doctrine that all contracts between companies to pool their earnings and divide the profits on other than a natural basis are void has been steadily adhered to, and is still the rule. One citation will answer for a dozen. There are two lines of railway between Rugby and Shrewsbury. These roads as to competitive traffic entered into a pooling contract. This contract came before the courts in the case of the Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railroad Company vs. The Northwestern Railroad Company (4 De G. & Macn., 134), and was held unlawful, on the grounds that it provided for an alienation by one of these companies of a portion of its traffic to the other, and that it was against public policy.

Mr. Gladstone's action in acting as an arbitrator to divide certain traffic from London among the roads, as evidence of the lawful estimation in which pooling contracts are held in England, has been cited with approval. But the citation is at fault. His arbitration was upon the division of traffic reaching a certain station, not upon a pooling contract which divides earnings.

Mr. Albert Fink, the great railroad authority, acknowledges the illegality at common law of pooling contracts when he asks us "to legalize the management of railroad property under this plan and to abandon the antiquated notion that a government or combination, as it is called, of this kind is against public policy."

In this country, wherever pooling contracts have been submitted to judicial investigation they have been uniformly held void, as against public policy. Notably the case of the M. R. R. Co. vs. Barclay Coal Mining Co. (68 Pa. St. Rep., 173), the careful perusal of which is commended to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], and the famous case of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company pool with the Denver and Rio Grande, by which the earnings of the roads were to be divided and all trespassers upon their territory crushed. The opinion was delivered by Judge Hallett, Judge McCrary concurring, and declares that it is enough to say that it is a conspiracy to grasp commerce and to suppress the building of railroads in two great States, citing decisions from Pennsylvania, New York, and other States in support.

Railway corporations are formed as free and independent entities for public service. How long would any legislative body tolerate a proposition to permit them to go into partnership? Yet the proposition involved in pooling is tantamount to such permission. The evil involved in a partnership of corporations is inherent in corporate combination for the purpose of dividing earnings, to wit, the power to oppress by aggregation of capital and to prevent fair and free competition among breadwinners. Thus the common law has always set its face against combination. An individual may set the price of his commodities at what rate he pleases, but when two or more enter into a combination to raise or lower the price of an article it becomes a conspiracy and is indictable. So men are allowed to join their fortunes under corporate law for the transaction of legitimate business. But here the line must be drawn. It should not be extended to the union of corporate power and wealth. The results upon public business would be too far-reaching, and public policy calls a halt. It is manifestly in the interest of the American shipper that the pooling system should be abolished and the carriers left to compete for traffic under the recognized and legitimate laws of trade.

This power is prohibited by both the committee bill and the Reagan substitute; the committee bill, however, does not seem to feel fully assured of its position, for it commends the subject to the careful investigation of the commission that it creates. The main differences in the bills lie in the questions of the short and long haul, the rebate and drawback section, the posting of schedules, and the establishment of a commission clothed with inquisitorial and quasi-judicial powers.

The second section of the Reagan substitute is as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as aforesaid directly or indirectly to allow any rebate, drawback, or other advantage, in any form, upon shipments made or services rendered as aforesaid by him or them.

The third section of the committee bill adds to the section just cited the words "which under similar circumstances are not allowed to all other persons," thus allowing rebates and drawbacks, but making them applicable, where circumstances are similar, to all alike. Gentlemen who have addressed you in support of the committee bill have deprecated rebates, but have claimed that there are certain circumstances under which rebates are not only justifiable but are necessary to equalize and forward trade. I have listened with attention to the arguments used in this behalf, but am unable to subscribe to the doctrine there enunciated.

Mr. Depew, in his argument before the committee, stated that the system of rebates and drawbacks was resorted to by "one railroad for the protection of its customers against the attempt on the part of other railroads competing with it from the same point to the same point, giving low rates to their customers." And this refreshing declaration was made almost in the same breath with the statement that the efficacy of the pool now existing lay in its ability to prevent competitive strife and cutting of rates. If the pool does prevent cutting of rates, why the necessity of a rebate to provide against a contingency that can not arise? If the pool does not prevent competitive strife, then it stands convicted on its own testimony.

It is further contended by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] that conditions of great business depression may be sprung upon us, some great calamity may happen; a glut in the market may occur; and he asks why, under these circumstances, should not an allowance on transportation be made by the carrier to the shipper? For the very reason that railways are not run on the sentimental basis. Charity has no place in a business creed. Rebates are purely matters of business. If the company desires to open up new lines of carriage or to increase those already developed it will sacrifice a little to gain more. The rebate is given not with the idea of conferring a boon upon humanity, but with the expectation of increased profit to the carrier. Take the case cited by Mr. Depew. The rebate is there given not to protect shippers, but simply because the system has become so universal that each carrier has to contend, in competing for traffic, not only with the open rates but the secret rebates and drawbacks of his rival. Destroy these special contracts, rebates, and drawbacks as nearly as you can, and according to the measure of success in that direction will trade return to the channels of legitimate competition.

Let us recur to the illustration on this point used by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Governor LONG], namely, the inability of the American stave-maker to compete with his Norwegian brother in the English market by reason of the refusal of the carrier, enforced through the enactment of the Reagan substitute, to allow a rebate on the charges of transportation sufficient to meet the expense of the ocean carriage. I refer thus often to the remarks of my brother on the committee because they are always interesting, always instructive, and nearly always correct. But in this instance he is at fault. His claim is that the enactment of this section of the Reagan substitute would compel the railroad to refuse the rebate so necessary to the exportation of American staves, and thus inure to the disadvantage of American production.

In the first place, the railroads are carrying the staves to New York for six-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. This we learn from Mr. Fink is very little above the actual cash cost of service. Very little additional reduction would reduce the price of carriage to the cost of service. Is the carrier to transport without compensation merely for the pleasure of seeing a foreign trade built up for a certain American product? Does he hold the same financial views as the party who expected to become wealthy by selling at cost price, simply from the enormous sales he made? Or does he expect to assess on other shippers the amount that he has failed to charge this particular one?

In this case competitive service does not enter into the problem. There are no natural advantages or disadvantages that would tend, by decreasing or increasing the cost of service, to lower or raise the carrying price. It is a case of pure patriotism or pure favoritism, and from our knowledge of the fact that railroad men are human, very human, we must incline to the latter view.

Who gives to the carriers the right to say to one man or one product, "We will build you up and exalt you above your neighbors, and your enemies shall become a footstool under your feet?" Who invested them with the power to determine what American product shall be exported and what shall not?

Besides, even under the committee bill how will the stave-exporter fare? No rebate, drawback, or other advantage can be extended to him which is not granted to all others under similar circumstances. Suppose a hundred stave-makers live in the same vicinity. One could not enjoy an advantage not possessed by all. The words "under similar circumstances" are broad. Would not shingle or shake makers come in this category? Must the "similar circumstances" apply only to shapers of wood? Would not iron and steel be included? In fine, are not the words broad enough to cover all articles manufactured or grown and susceptible, under the laws of supply and demand, of export? When this point is reached and all articles capable of exportation are brought within the sacred circle of this clause it is obvious that the stave-maker will stand small show of competing with his Norwegian brother in the English markets. This omnibus clause carries us back virtually to the letter of the Reagan substitute. Being surplusage, it should be stricken out.

The full measure of the evil of this system is felt nowhere so keenly as in sections where little or no competition exists. There it holds imperial sway. It builds up and tears down private business. It has its favorites to reward, its enemies to punish. It controls a host of spies and informers. Its special contracts are systematized and graded. The books of your merchant are subjected to examination and his private affairs laid bare to prying eyes that his good faith with the carrier may be verified.

This power is too great to leave in the hands of the carrier. It is secret, sly, and insidious. Its very secrecy—the fact that it works in the dark and dreads the light—carries with it a warning of a danger too imminent to pass unheeded. It should be met at once with the strong curb of the Reagan section.

The fourth section of the Reagan substitute provides that no more shall be charged for a short than for a long haul, and reads as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as provided in the first section of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation for a similar amount and kind of property, for carrying, receiving, storing, forwarding, or handling the same, for a shorter than for a longer distance on any one railroad; and the road of a corporation shall include all the road in use by such corporation, whether owned or operated by it under a contract, agreement, or lease by such corporation.

The enactment of this section into law would, in my judgment, tend to impair rather than facilitate trade. As has been said, the proposition that no more should be charged for a short than for a longer distance looks well in the abstract and on paper. It would seem that, the carrying service being a public service, all men have a similar interest in it and are entitled to like benefits from its exercise under any and all circumstances. So they would be if the carrying charges are to be based on the cost of service alone.

But such is not the case. There is another element that enters into the proposition, namely, the value of the service to the shipper. The carrier guarantees and should be held strictly to a reasonable charge for service; but a reasonable charge is not a fixed quantity. It changes with the conditions of each case. The service rendered to a shipper living on a water way is less valuable to him than to others less fortunately situated. He has ready and cheap transportation at his door. The railway carrier is here thrown into competition with a rival whose right of way and road-bed has cost him nothing. He must of necessity refuse to extend his service to that point, or, having so extended, must enter into competition with his cheaper and more easily equipped rival. This he can only do by putting his charges at a paying minimum. Who is injured? Certainly not the shipper at this point. He has now two strings to his bow, where formerly he had but one.

The introduction of a new and more rapid competing service has, in all probability, resulted in lowering the rates by water. Who complains? The shipper who lives a hundred miles inland, and who up to the time of the extension of the carrying service to his door has been compelled, at an expense of say 10 cents per ton per mile, to rely upon ox-team transportation. Now by rail he ships at a cost of 2 cents per ton per mile. Yet he is loud in denunciation of the outrage practiced upon him by the carrier in charging him 2 cents a mile while his friend at the competitive point a hundred miles away is charged only a cent. And this in the face of the fact that he has gained by the railway service 8 cents a ton over the team charges, while his so-called more fortunate friend has paid in all probability from a quarter to a half cent more per ton to the railway than would have been exacted of him by the water carrier in order to effect a more rapid transit of production to market.

Let us shift the conditions a trifle. Suppose the competitive point just mentioned to be a railway and not river point of competition. The case now becomes stronger. The inland shipper still maintains his 8-cent margin; but the shipper at the competitive point instead of paying a little more for his shipment pays a little less, as the competing carriers are of the same ilk. Before the introduction of the competing road his transportation charges were at the same rate, though by a different route, as those of his inland friend. Now, under the influence of competition, his charges are reduced say 50 per cent., and he pays a cent per ton per mile. His cost of service to market is less than that of the inland shipper by the same road. But can the inland shipper be heard to complain of an injustice done him? He saves 8 cents per ton over his previous hauls, while the shipper at the competitive point saves only a cent.

Of course the figures used are arbitrary; but they are not far from accurate, and serve to illustrate the principle for which I am contending.

But my honored friend from Texas [Judge REAGAN] stoutly maintains that these inequalities result from the railway carrier's reaching out for business that does not legitimately belong to it. With due respect to his judgment—and there is none that I hold in higher estimation, especially upon a subject that has been his close and unremitting study for many years—I submit that he is in error. And this error lies in his confounding the natural advantages and disadvantages of the locus of the shipper with the inequalities of capricious and arbitrary railway exactions.

The carrier has an undoubted right to extend his lines of service to any and all paying points and to tax his carrying capacity to its full limit. Who is injured by his so doing? Certainly not the shipper. If he open up a new field of production the country at large is benefited, as are the producers along the line of service. The shippers at the competitive points will not complain—more roads, more competition; more competition, cheaper rates.

One of the mistaken ideas attending this question is that through freights are often taken at a loss which is made up on the way freight. In some few instances this may be true; and where it occurs it is generally traceable to some sudden and violent interruption of the ordinary course of business, such as virulent railroad wars, &c. The rule is to establish tariffs for long distances, which give the carrier less remuneration than for short distances; but they are paying tariffs. As long as any profit can be thus made it is proper, to meet the competition of water rates and other competing railways. These tariffs are proper as between the communities and the carriers as long as the carrier makes even a slight profit, for trains must be run, and it is better to run them at a minimum profit than that they should run empty. To quote Mr. Depew:

> It is a well known fact that it is only the revolving wheel that makes a profit. There is nothing so dead as an idle car.

The terminal charges for shipment are the same whether the distance be a thousand or twenty miles. The road-bed is there, the plant is there, cars must be run at a loss or profit. Every ounce of through freight at minimum profit is just so much gained toward the relief of local rates, for it is the local traffic that must pay the expenses of the road, the taxes, and maintain and equip stations every few miles along its line.

We of the West have no reason to complain that through traffic is taxed less than local. It is this that has brought the extremities of our great country together. It sends our grain to the East and thence to the markets of the world. It has been the prime factor in the settlement and cultivation of our great prairies and valleys. It has made a common market for the North and South, East and West. It has made us a commercial unit, and in the mutual exchange of our varying products to meet reciprocal wants has, through its silent influence, done more to bring our people into a common brotherhood than could otherwise have been effected.

The fifth section of the Reagan substitute requires the posting of schedules by the carrier:

> SEC. 5. That all persons engaged in carrying property as provided in the first section of this act shall adopt and keep posted up schedules which shall plainly state:
>
> First. The different kinds and classes of property to be carried.
>
> Second. The different places between which such property shall be carried.
>
> Third. The rates of freight and prices of carriage between such places, and for all services connected with the receiving, delivery, loading, unloading, storing, or handling the same. And the accounts for such service shall show what part of the charges are for transportation, and what part are for loading, unloading, and other terminal facilities.
>
> Such schedules may be changed from time to time as hereinafter provided. Copies of such schedules shall be printed in plain, large type, at least the size of ordinary pica, and shall be kept plainly posted for public inspection in at least two places in every depot where freights are received or delivered; and no such schedule shall be changed in any particular except by the substitution of another schedule containing the specifications above required, which substitute schedule shall plainly state the time when it shall go into effect, and copies of which, printed as aforesaid, shall be posted as above provided at least five days before the same shall go into effect; and the same shall remain in force until another schedule shall as aforesaid be substituted. And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in carrying property on railroads as aforesaid, after thirty days after the passage of this act, to charge or receive more or less compensation for the carriage, receiving, delivering, loading, unloading, handling, or storing of any of the property contemplated by the first section of this act than shall be specified in such schedule as may at the time be in force.

This section has encountered violent opposition both in the arguments before the committee and on the floor of this House. Yet the idea contained in the section is good. The provisions that a schedule showing the kinds of property to be carried, the places between which the carrying service shall be had, and the charges for such service is eminently proper, fitting, and just both to the carrier and shipper. It puts the shipper on notice of matters that he is desirous of knowing and that he ought to know. It may inflict some inconvenience on the carrier, it may work some at first at the point of competition on the interstate carrier and better the competitive status of the State and water carriers. But there is more cry than wool in the fear so loudly expressed. The State and interstate carriers are closely allied in business, and there are very few State roads that are not also interstate. Still fewer are the State roads, that do not engage in interstate commerce. As to the Canadian roads, the Canada Southern is under the control of the New York Central. The Grand Trunk line, through its connections at Detroit and with Boston, can indirectly be reached by laws governing interstate commerce.

Why are gentlemen so alarmed at the thought that the rates of the companies should be published and thus the shipper be partially at least exempted from the danger of unjust discrimination? Is five days' notice too long? If so, cut it down. It is a matter of detail. But give the shipper some notice; twenty-four hours at least. Let in some light upon this darkness.

The committee bill calls for a commission consisting of three commissioners, one of whom is to be a lawyer, one a railroad man, and the third anything you please. The latter has no business nor professional qualification annexed to his tenure of office. He is simply to be the third man on the commission. This mighty overshadowing commission, that is to make the transportation companies tremble when it nods its triple head, that is to be so flexible that it will fit the railroad question like a new glove and yet will be strong enough to grapple with our giant corporations—what is it? Is it a court? No. It has none of the elements of the English commission so potent to regulate railway abuses in Great Britain. It can not render a decision, can not enjoin, can not punish for contempt. It is not automatic. It can not be brought into even the most distant relations with the companies it is supposed to regulate, except through the medium of a petition and a quasi-investigation prosecuted through either itself collectively or individually or under delegation of full powers by a stranger who may not possess a single qualification required by law of the commissioners. The stranger delegate is not required to report in writing the result of his investigation into the matters of fact with which he has been charged. But by some means (incidental mention is made of a report) the commission acquires the information so gathered. It then makes out a report, with its findings of fact, and within twenty days thereafter serves it on the offending corporation, with a notice to the company to desist, and at the same time serves upon the United States district attorney another copy of said report and findings. Here the commission as a redressor of wrong apparently disappears; thenceforward the matter is prosecuted through the instrumentality of the district attorney and the Federal court. Various other powers and duties are laid upon the commission (not necessary to be enumerated) which properly belong to it as an inquisitorial body.

This is the body before the shake of whose gloved finger the great transportation companies of the country are to bow in humble submission. It might work wonders as a remedial agent; it probably would with the God-fearing carriers of Massachusetts, but the corporations of the Middle and Western States are made of sterner stuff. A little less of the dude and more of the man is required to meet and redress the wrongs complained of.

The committee bill, divested of its Reagan attributes—the penal and remedial clauses of the original Reagan bill—is entirely valueless as a means of righting wrong. It can not give speedy relief. It is dilettant, deprecating, and apologetic. With the Reagan fire infused in it, it amounts to something. Some of its extreme flexibility has departed, and it has developed backbone enough to stand alone. The very section that gives it stability (section 5) is but a pale reflection of the strong remedial powers of the substitute bill, yet those same powers, the skeleton of which has served to fill out and give strength to the committee bill, have been denounced on this floor as hard, inelastic, iron-clad, perfunctory, and brutum fulmen, unable to meet the shifting demands of trade, and furnishing a procrustean standard for the measurement of wrong.

If these criticisms be true the substitute should not pass. That they are made in good faith I have no doubt. That they are, with the exception I have already referred to, harsh and unmerited is obvious from an inspection of the measure. It proposes nothing new or radical. It reaffirms certain doctrines of the common law, declaring certain evils unlawful and prohibiting them under sufficient penalties to prevent their repetition. It provides a plain, adequate, and speedy method of relief accessible to and at the option of every injured party. If the party does not see fit to avail himself of it, the fault is his and not that of the system. The machinery of relief is full, simple, direct, and effective. Whatever faults it possesses can be cured by future legislation. The measure is tentative, experimental in its nature, and can not be expected at inception to exhibit that degree of perfection that is attained by experience in operation, careful supervision, and revision.

I hope that the substitute will be adopted, with the section concerning long and short hauls stricken out. A commission may be added to it. I do not understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is opposed to a commission, although not advocating one. But he desires (and in this respect I entirely agree with him) that the bill requiring a commission shall contain substantially the remedies provided for in his substitute—that the commission should be inquisitorial and for the purpose of gathering information on the railroad problem, and should be an adjunct to rather than the main object of the bill.

I sincerely trust that this session will not be allowed to slip by without passing some adequate bill on the subject. It has knocked at the doors of Congress for ten years. The people want nothing rude, harsh, or violent. We would disturb no business interests, excite no animosity between production and transportation. Let us give with open and free hand justice alike to the shipper and the carrier. We have no battles to fight over, no quarrels to revive, no revenge to take. It is simply a cold proposition of business, affecting to its utmost ramifications the industrial interests of a great country, and as such it should be treated calmly, without rancor, hostility, or favoritism, in that large, candid, and honest spirit that will bring to the solution of this great problem the impartial and just investigation its importance deserves.

Having concluded the delivery of the above remarks,

Mr. GLASCOCK said: I had intended to give the remainder of my time to my colleague [Mr. HENLEY]. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman has fifteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. GLASCOCK. My colleague is not at present in the House, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DUNN. In the consideration of this question, Mr. Speaker, we are undeniably confronted with one of the gravest and most important questions affecting the internal administration of our Government that we are likely to be called to consider. I shall address myself in this general debate more particularly to the general question of the power and importance of regulating commerce than to the details of the bill. I am under no circumstances the advocate of a reactionary policy in anything. That policy is never wise. Cheap, safe, easy, and ample. Wisely and justly regulated facilities for the interchange of commodities between the widely separated sections of our country and with foreign nations constitute the prime conditions of prosperity and progress.

It is estimated by Henry V. Poor that there are now in the United States not less than 120,000 miles of railway, which, at the low estimate of $25,000 per mile, has cost $3,025,000,000, but upon which not less than $7,000,000,000 of capital stock and bonds have been issued; that they transport per annum more than 400,000,000 tons, of an estimated value of $15,000,000,000. Their gross receipts perhaps exceed $1,000,000,000, and their net earnings more than $100,000,000, and they employ probably more than 2,000,000 persons. Interests so vast and so necessarily and vitally bound up in the prosperity of the people can only be dealt with with the utmost caution and upon the fullest information.

Sir, no one more wonders at and admires the economic and civilizing power of our great American railroad system than I do.

Within a quarter of a century it has almost inconceivably increased our means of wealth, of civilization, and of peace both at home and abroad. In the extent of its commerce, the perfection of its organization, the skill of its handling and the might of its power it is the wonder and admiration of the world. It hourly flies with more than the speed of the wind over its 120,000 miles of iron and steel track. It sets in motion the mighty forces that clear our forests, cultivate our farms, dig our mines, and transport to the remotest corners of the earth the products of labor.

So far from jealousy crippling its power, or restricting its operations, society owes it to itself to grant every reasonable facility for the extension of its legitimate influence and for its development to its fullest extent. In speaking, therefore, as I purpose doing on this occasion, of the grounds and limits of rightful control over them by law, I insist that I am not to be reckoned as their enemy, but as a friend, who is jealous of the evil effects which may flow, both to the railroads and to society, from want of that timely and wholesome control which will preserve the just right of all.

The United States Commissioner of Railroads, in one of his annual reports, says:

> The enormous extent of this interest and the rapidity of its growth, both in the increase of mileage and tonnage, demand that its relations to the public shall be under some judicious legal control.

What it shall be and to what extent are questions upon which the wisest and most experienced differ, and as to which there is much popular misapprehension.

Railroad companies are private corporations, created by authority of a State or national Legislature for public purposes, and their property is to a large extent devoted to public uses.

They exercise, of necessity, part of the sovereign power—the right of eminent domain. They have the right to levy tolls and taxes on commerce for the benefit of the private purses of the stockholders. The profits which the private owners of the stocks derive from their railways are really a tax which they impose upon the circulation of goods and passenger travel. This taxation should not be oppressive it should be financially just and without undue discrimination. The interests of the country demand that railways, which have taken the place to a great extent of ordinary highways, should be managed solely as public highways, in furthering commerce, agriculture, and industry. The railways in this country are what may be termed private railways—that is, they are owned by private corporations or individuals, and not by the States or General Government. In all countries except England and the United States the railroads are mostly owned and operated by the government.

Prince Bismarck, the German chancellor, in a speech in advocacy of the acquisition and supervision of all German railways, in 1876, said:

> It is the misfortune of private railways that a privilege granted by the state, and a privilege that could not be made use of without the help of the state—we may say a monopoly granted by the government—should be exploited in behalf of private interests and private pockets.

How "far more exceedingly" unfortunate must it appear for this vast system of private railways in our country to be "exploited in behalf of private interests and private pockets" without any general laws or regulations for their government or for the protection of the people—the sovereign—by whom their privileges were granted against their rapacity and against undue discriminations and injustice. To me it is a matter of great and continuing astonishment that the prudence, forethought, and far-seeing wisdom which led the people of the States and of the United States to recognize the importance of railways should not at the same time have dictated to them (ever jealous as they are of their rights and authority) the necessity for judicious laws marking and defining distinctly and plainly the domain, powers, rights, and trusts conceded to them, and that which still remains and belongs to the sovereign, so that injustice be not done to either. The wisest and most careful, however, did not seem to have any adequate appreciation of the position which railways were soon to occupy in the world's economy.

We find here, as often elsewhere in political and economic science, an apparent anomaly. This stupendous fabric that webs our whole country over has sprung into existence without a statute of the General Government for its control or regulation. They not only have the unrestrained power to levy tolls and taxes on commerce, traffic, and travel for the benefit of "private purses," but they also carry on feuds and railway wars, as suits their good pleasure, like the old feudal lords. As has been said elsewhere, so here "we see to-day railway directors waging battles, not for the benefit of shareholders, but as a sort of noble sport."

It is unfortunate that the railway directors and managers of the country should have reached the conclusion, as they seem generally to have done, that they have absolute sovereign rights in railway matters. Most certainly they have rights, and it is not proposed by those who think as I do that any of these corporations shall lose one particle of their property or have any of their just rights impaired.

But the people also have rights and powers, and hence the apparently impending conflict. I shall support this measure, not because it is in every respect satisfactory to me, but in order that we may take the first step on the way leading to a goal which may not be attained in my lifetime; but if the development be slow, if the struggle for the recovery of just control by the public must be fought out in hard battles, let us not be discouraged. Nothing great was ever attained without fighting for it. However long and severe the battles may be, with the consciousness of contending for the right we should press forward unterrified and unwearied. A correct idea having once taken possession of public opinion will not disappear until it is realized—until in this case the Constitution becomes as regards the regulation of commerce among the States a living truth.

So far as the bills pending are concerned, the bill of the committee and the substitute, I am now inclined to the opinion that the bill of the committee with all the provisions for a commission stricken out would be the wisest step to take. It does not contain all that I think it ought to contain; but I am satisfied that it is better in this first step that we do too little than that we do too much. I shall at the proper time move to strike out all that part of the bill providing for a commission, and if that motion fails I shall then support the substitute offered by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. Legislation on this subject should be cautious. We should proceed with the greatest care and circumspection, and upon the fullest attainable measure of information.

The bill of the committee, as the substitute does, seeks first to declare certain rights, and also to declare certain things to be wrong. It seeks to enforce those rights and to prohibit those wrongs. That is, perhaps, as far as legislation ought to go. The railroads enjoy their privileges under franchises granted by the government with the sanction of the sovereign people. Every living soul who owes allegiance to these governments, State and Federal, participated equally in those grants, and is entitled to equal benefits from the use of those franchises. When private citizens or private corporations accepted those grants and invested their money in the construction of railroad lines they accepted all the conditions attaching to and connected with those grants expressed in the charters and existing in the common law and constitutions, State and Federal.

Among those existing common-law and constitutional rights was this: that every living soul who participated in those grants should share equally and impartially their benefits. Another was the right of public control. It is a well-settled doctrine of the law that whoever invests his money in any business affected with a public interest thereby agrees to accept public control and regulation of that business. No principle of the law is more definitely settled.

The authorities are numerous, but I select one leading and controlling case—Munn vs. Illinois (94 U. S. Rep., 124, et seq.).

In a most learned and exhaustive opinion delivered by Chief-Justice Waite the court say:

> When the people of the United Colonies separated from Great Britain they changed the form, but not the substance, of their government. They retained for the purposes of government all the powers of the British Parliament, and through their State constitutions, or other forms of social compact, undertook to give practical effect to such as they deemed necessary for the common good and the security of life and property. All the powers which they retained they committed to their respective States, unless in express terms or by implication reserved to themselves. Subsequently, when it was found necessary to establish a national government for national purposes, a part of the powers of the States and of the people of the States was granted to the United States and the people of the United States. This grant operated as a further limitation upon the powers of the States, so that now the governments of the States possess all the powers of the Parliament of England, except such as have been delegated to the United States or reserved by the people. The reservations by the people are shown in the prohibitions of the Constitution.
>
> When one becomes a member of society he necessarily parts with some rights and privileges which as an individual not affected by his relations to others he might retain. "A body-politic," as aptly defined in the preamble to the constitution of Massachusetts, "is a social compact, by which the whole people covenants with each citizen and each citizen with the whole people that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good." This does not confer power upon the whole people to control rights which are purely and exclusively private (Thorpe vs. R. and B. Railroad Company, 27 Vt., 143), but it does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his own property as not unnecessarily to injure another. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non loedas. From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Mr. Chief-Justice Taney in the License Cases (5 How., 583) "are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty, * * * that is to say, * * * the power to govern men and things."
>
> Under these powers the Government regulates the conduct of its citizens one toward another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, &c., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day statutes are to be found in many of the States upon some or all these subjects; and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such legislation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property.
>
> With the fifth amendment in force, Congress, in 1820, conferred power upon the city of Washington "to regulate * * * the rates of wharfage at private wharves, * * * the sweeping of chimneys, and to fix the rates of fees therefor, * * * and the weight and quality of bread" (3 Stat., 587, sec. 7); and, in 1848, "to make all necessary regulations respecting hackney carriages and the rates of fare of the same, and the rates of hauling by cartmen, wagoners, carmen, and draymen, and the rates of commission of auctioneers" (9 Id., 24, sec. 2).
>
> From this it is apparent that, down to the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, it was not supposed that statutes regulating the use, or even the price of the use, of private property necessarily deprived an owner of his property without due process of law. Under some circumstances they may, but not under all. The amendment does not change the law in this particular; it simply prevents the States from doing that which will operate as such a deprivation.
>
> This brings us to inquire as to the principles upon which this power of regulation rests, in order that we may determine what is within and what is without its operative effect. Looking, then, to the common law, from whence came the right which the Constitution protects, we find that when private property is "affected with a public interest it ceases to be juris privati only." This was said by Lord Chief-Justice Hale more than two hundred years ago in his treatise De Portibus Maris, 1 Horg., Law Tracts, 78, and has been accepted without objection ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use, but so long as he maintains the use he must submit to the control.
>
> It is insisted, however, that the owner of property is entitled to a reasonable compensation for its use, even though it be clothed with public interest, and that what is reasonable is a judicial and not a legislative question.
>
> As has already been shown, the practice has been otherwise. In countries where the common law prevails, it has been customary from time immemorial for the Legislature to declare what shall be a reasonable compensation under such circumstances, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable. Undoubtedly, in mere private contracts, relating to matters in which the public has no interest, what is reasonable must be ascertained judicially. But this is because the Legislature has no control over such a contract.
>
> So, too, in matters which do affect the public interest, and as to what legislative control may be exercised, if there are no statutory regulations upon the subject, the courts must determine what is reasonable. The controlling fact is the power to regulate at all. If that fact exists, the right to establish the maximum of charge as one of the means of regulation is implied. In fact, the common-law rule which requires the charge to be reasonable is itself a regulation as to price. Without it the owner could make his rates at will, and compel the public to yield to his terms or forego the use.
>
> But a mere common-law regulation of trade or business may be changed by statute. A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law can not be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will or even at the whim of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstance. To limit the rate of charge for services rendered in a public employment, or for the use of property in which the public has an interest, is only changing a regulation which existed before. It establishes no new principle in the law, but only gives a new effect to an old one.
>
> We know that this is a power which may be abused, but that is no argument against its existence. For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts.

It is clear, therefore, that the business of railroads, being "affected with a public interest," was from the beginning subject to the power of the body-politic to require them to conform to such regulations as might be established by the proper authorities for the common good. The non-user of a power is no evidence that it does not exist. Those who obtained grants of charters for that purpose and invested their private capital in the business entered upon it subject to this condition; and if they did not wish to submit themselves to such interference, they should not have clothed the public with an interest in their concerns.

Among all the eminent counsel and railway officials who have appeared before the Commerce Committee on behalf of the railroad corporations but one single one admitted the power or propriety of Congressional legislation to regulate interstate commerce. I refer to Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, of New York. He said:

> I do not think the representatives of railroads are disposed to object to the legitimate exercise of any power the United States may have in reference to them. We recognize that there can not be an investment of $6,000,000,000, that there can not be a business upon which every other business is in a measure dependent, without it being of the highest public moment to the people in the State and national Legislatures. We would be denying one of the manifest truths lying at the bottom of all republican government if we stood up to resist a statement of that kind or a principle which covers questions so broad as these.

This frank and sensible admission by this eminent and justly distinguished lawyer and railroad official was especially gratifying in the midst of the wholesale and sweeping denial of the power on the part of Congress to deal with the subject at all, and reflects credit upon him.

Article 1, section 8, of the Constitution confers upon Congress the "power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." Fortunately no article of the Constitution has been more thoroughly adjudicated and its meaning more definitely settled than this. I will not tax the patience of the House by a review of the long line of decisions construing it and defining its true meaning, but will refer only to a few controlling cases. "The Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land." Chief-Justice Waite, delivering the opinion of the court in Pensacola Telegraph Company vs. Western Union Telegraph Company (96 U. S. Rep., 9), said—

> A law of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution suspends or overrides all State statutes with which it is in conflict.
>
> Since the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1) it has never been doubted that commercial intercourse is an element of commerce which comes within the regulating power of Congress. Post-offices and post-roads are established to facilitate the transmission of intelligence. Both commerce and the postal service are placed within the power of Congress, because, being national in their operation, they should be under the protecting care of the National Government.
>
> The powers thus granted are not confined to the instrumentalities of commerce or the postal service known or in use when the Constitution was adopted; but they keep pace with the progress of the country and adapt themselves to the new developments of time and circumstances. They extend from the horse with his rider to the stage-coach, from the sailing vessel to the steamboat, from the coach and the steamboat to the railroad, and from the railroad to the telegraph, as these new agencies are successively brought into use to meet the demands of increasing population and wealth. They were intended for the government of the business to which they relate at all times and under all circumstances. As they were intrusted to the General Government for the good of the nation, it is not only the right but the duty of Congress to see to it that intercourse among the States and the transmission of intelligence are not obstructed or unnecessarily encumbered by State legislation.

* * * * * * *

The Government of the United States, within the scope of its powers, operates upon every foot of territory under its jurisdiction. It legislates for the whole nation and is not embarrassed by State lines. Its peculiar duty is to protect one part of the country from encroachments by another upon the national rights which belong to all.

This would seem to be a complete answer and refutation of the various points of objection taken by the opponents not only of the pending measure, but of any legislation whatever looking to the regulation of interstate commerce, so far as the power and jurisdiction of Congress are concerned. It may be here remarked that there are two distinct classes of service performed by railways.

First. The transportation of interstate traffic, that which originates in one State or Territory and is transported into or through one or more other States or Territories. Over this class of traffic Congress has absolute control under the powers delegated by the Constitution "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States," as shown by the case already quoted.

Second. The transportation of State or domestic traffic, that which originates and is confined within the territorial limits of the State. Over this class of business the State governments have exclusive jurisdiction and control.

The meaning of the word "commerce" has been judicially defined by Chief-Justice Marshall in Gibbons vs. Ogden (9 Wheat., 188, 189):

The subject to be regulated is commerce, and our Constitution being, as was aptly said at the bar, one of enumeration and not of definition, to ascertain the extent of the power it becomes necessary to settle the meaning of the word. * * * Commerce undoubtedly is traffic, but it is something more; it is intercourse. It describes the commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches. * * * Commerce, as the word is used in the Constitution, is a unit, every part of which is indicated by the term.

In a more recent case of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad vs. Pennsylvania, December term, 1872, the Supreme Court says:

Beyond all question the transportation of freights or of the subjects of commerce for the purposes of exchange or sale is a constituent of commerce itself. This has never been doubted, and probably the transportation of articles of trade from one State to another was the prominent idea in the minds of the framers of the Constitution, when to Congress was committed the power to regulate commerce among the several States.

In construing the words "power to regulate," Chief-Justice Marshall, in the Gibbons vs. Ogden case, says:

This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are provided in the Constitution.

Congress has already exercised this power to regulate interstate railways. On June 15, 1866, the following act was passed, as is claimed, at the instance of railway companies (see Revised Statutes of the United States, section 5258):

Every railroad company in the United States whose road is operated by steam, its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to carry upon and over its road, boats, bridges, and ferries all passengers, troops, Government supplies, mails, freight, and property, on their way from any State to another State, and to receive compensation therefor, and to connect with roads of other States, so as to form continuous lines for the transportation of the same to the place of destination. * * * And Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this section.

Again, on March 3, 1873, the following act was passed (see Revised Statutes, section 4386):

No railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals are conveyed from one State to another, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals from one State to another, shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding for a period of at least five consecutive hours, &c.

The same law provides that the animals so unloaded from cars "shall be properly fed and watered during such rests" by the railroad company, in case the owner or person in charge shall fail to do so. Any failure to comply with the provisions of this law renders the company liable to a penalty of from one hundred to five hundred dollars fine, and section 4389, Revised Statutes, provides that "it shall be the duty of all United States marshals, their deputies and subordinates, to prosecute all violations which come to their notice or knowledge."

It appears, therefore, that Congress has full and ample power under the Constitution to regulate interstate railway companies, that this power has been judicially confirmed and clearly defined by the United States Supreme Court. It also appears that Congress has already exercised such power to the extent of granting permission to railway companies chartered by State governments to transport passengers and property "on their way from any one State to another State," to "receive compensation therefor," to "connect with roads of other States so as to form continuous lines," and has reserved to itself the right "to alter, amend, or repeal" the law giving such permission.

Congress has further exercised such power by fixing the length of time that live-stock shall be kept in cars without unloading, and the length of time such freight shall stop for rest, feed, and water, by requiring railway companies to properly feed and water such stock in case the owner shall neglect or refuse to do so, by fixing penalties for violations of the law, and requiring United States marshals and their deputies and subordinates to prosecute all violations which come to their notice or knowledge.

This action of Congress has been universally acquiesced in and accepted without protest by the States and by State corporations as within the scope of its powers. No State corporation can properly object to the exercise of such powers by Congress, as their charters were originally granted and accepted with a full knowledge that when their roads should be connected with those of other States, and continuous lines formed extending through more than one State, such lines would become channels for interstate commerce, and would thereby be subject to such commercial regulations as Congress in its wisdom should from time to time prescribe.

The bill of the committee, the first part of it and the substitute, declare that equal facilities shall be granted to all as nearly as may be in shipping and traveling privileges. That is right; and if it is right it ought to be enforced. Each of these bills declares that discriminations between individuals and places in the transaction of the business of the railroads is wrong; and if it is wrong, it ought to be prohibited.

The bill assumes that rebates are only the means of concealing undue discrimination, and for that reason should be prohibited. If that assumption be true, rebates ought to be prohibited. The bills assume that the pool is organized as a means of preventing competition and will be made the means of undue discrimination, and therefore shall be prohibited. If that be true, it ought to be prohibited. The pool, it is assumed and perhaps it is true, has grown and developed out of the fact that the Government has itself never exercised the constitutional power of regulating commerce; and in the absence of that regulation, which the Constitution enjoins upon Congress, the pool has arisen. Somewhat like a great star-chamber court, it has been constituted by the consent and agreement of the great railroad potentates of this country; and in that court the people have no representative and they have no day. I am not of the class of people who believe that the railroad managers of this country are criminals or bad men. I do not believe that.

In many cases railroad corporations have yielded to the temptations, that men always yield to on opportunity, to aggrandize themselves with too much power and an undue measure of wealth, perhaps, if they are not restrained. But all must confess that the ablest minds and many of the best men of this country have become interested in the development of the grand railroad system of this country and have linked their names to immortality. I object to the commission because I think it will prove a failure; it will not answer the purposes which the friends of the commission hope it will answer; and it is unnecessary. I believe that the correct principle in government was asserted when the courts, State and national, were ordained and created to enforce rights and to prohibit wrong. I believe that whatever rights they are incapable of enforcing will fail, and whatever wrongs they are incapable of prohibiting will go unprevented and unrestrained.

These courts have been ordained by the people as one of the co-ordinate branches of the Government. To them have been committed the great powers of judgment upon all laws that we enact. To their keeping are committed the hopes, fortunes, lives, and liberties of the people and the integrity of our laws. If we have come upon a time when any law that we enact declaring rights and prohibiting wrongs can not be administered through their agency, then indeed have we reached the beginning of the end of free government. If the day has or shall ever come in our country's history when the foul waters of political corruption shall rise high enough to touch and pollute the judicial ermine and so corrupt all the fountains of justice, then, I repeat, the end will be at hand and free government a demonstrated failure.

The commission provided for in the bill is not clothed with judicial powers. As stated by the gentleman from California who has just left the floor [Mr. GLASCOCK], it is not clothed with the powers conferred upon the English commission; for that commission can investigate, it can restrain, it can enjoin, it can render advice. But my objection to the English commission is that it is placed between the citizen and the court. Its opinion, its advice must be had upon the legality, the right and the wrong of any act complained of, before suit can be instituted in the English court to enforce the right, prohibit the wrong, or recover damages for mischief done. I will never give my consent in this country to place any body of men, any commission, between the suitor and the court in which his rights are to be adjudicated. No man, no set of men, shall ever, with my consent, stand between the citizen and justice, and hold the power to say whether his rights shall be adjudicated or not. Let no petty autocrat stand between the citizen and justice.

This commission does not stand in this case entirely between the citizen suitor and the court, but it performs a sort of advisory function. It will fail, as such commissions have failed in all other countries. We had better draw some lessons of wisdom from the experience of other governments in this respect. In Prussia, where legal control of railroad management has been pushed to further development than in any other country, the commission business has entirely failed. I will read to the House a speech delivered by the German chancellor, Bismarck, upon the result of what was really a railroad commission in Prussia. This speech was delivered in 1876 in the Prussian Parliament. He says:

The imperial constitution attributes to the empire the duty of a general supervision over all German railways, a certain control over tariffs, &c. An imperial railway office has been called into existence with the view of carrying out the provisions of the constitution.

Just as we propose to do in this case.

The experience of the office has manifested, however, the impotence of the empire and the strength of the separate states. The imperial railway office has become a council, which gives good advice and prefaces its requests with "if you please." It writes a great deal and makes much ado, but no one heeds its behests.

So no one will heed the behests of our commission.

I had hoped for an imperial railway law before this.

He does not want a commission; he wants a law.

I had hoped for an imperial railway law before this, but the opposition of the states, not only that of Saxony but also that of Prussia, has proved too strong.

* * * * * * *

The rights of the empire are theoretical; those of Prussia are backed by a strong railway net, the influence of which is felt in all Germany.

And this notwithstanding the existence of a commission.

As imperial chancellor, it is my duty to contend against this state of affairs, to see that all parts of the constitution, even the railway articles, become realities, to fight against the development of Prussia at the cost of the empire. * * *

We have in Germany, I believe, sixty-three railway provinces—that is saying perhaps too little, they are more independent than provinces; I should rather say railway territories—of which forty perhaps are in Prussia. Each one of these sovereign territories is fully provided with the feudal rights of the Dark Ages, the right of staple, the right of levying tolls and taxes on commerce for the benefit of its own private purse; yes, even with the right of carrying on feuds and railway wars, as suits its good pleasure, like the old feudal lords. We see to-day railway directors waging battles, not for the benefit of the railways or shareholders, but as a sort of noble sport. This condition of affairs does not correspond to the ideal of the imperial constitution. Even Prussia has not a railway power strong enough to carry out this ideal within its own boundaries.

Now, he was advocating the ownership and control of all railways in the German Empire, that control to be vested in the imperial government, and not subdivided, as he found it, among the states. He says:

I think the state should have its own line between all principal points. * * * I do not regard financial competition as the raison d'être of railways. It were foolish to say the state should derive no financial benefit from this property.

The profits which states derive from their railways are really a tax which they impose upon the circulation of goods. This taxation should not be oppressive, and should be financially just. But profits, as I have said, are not the raison d'être of railways.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was the experience of Prussia with a railroad commission. It was not called a commission; it was a great railroad office, such as we propose to construct here. This commission provided for in this bill is clothed with powers to hear complaints on notice, issue process, have it served, bring parties to complaints before the commission—one single commission located here in Washington—take testimony, have affidavits and depositions taken and brought here; and it is thought that through the agency of that one single tribunal located in Washington city all the rights of every little insignificant and every great and significant suitor may be adjusted, all their wrongs remedied, all their rights enforced, and all their damages ascertained and adjusted.

Does any one believe that? It is clothed with all the powers of the courts which has been found necessary to distribute all over this broad land; and we go on constantly designating new places for holding courts to suit the convenience of the people. Establish that great commission, locate it here in Washington, leave the people dependent on it for justice, and it will amount absolutely and substantially to a denial of justice, for scarcely any will ever be heard, and it will dwindle at last to the condition of the Prussian commission.

The wise thing to do, Mr. Speaker, is to declare what is right and enforce it; declare what is wrong and prohibit it. And it matters little what the measure of punishment is for wrong, it is the certainty rather than the measure of penalty that proves effective in the prohibition of wrong.

Dr. Ely says all those governments in Europe have ended with the ownership of railroads by the state, and that they are still gathering up, taking control of, and owning the railroads. In some of the states, in most of them in fact, they do not own all the railroads, but they own enough to maintain and foster that wholesome competition out of which the people find protection and large benefit.

The pool is objected to, and I find in this admirable article, written by Dr. Ely, fellow of Columbia College, in New York, who was for some years engaged in special studies in the operations of political economy as applied to the internal administration of Germany—I find here what is perhaps the origin or nursery out of which came the pool.

But before proceeding further as to the pool I will read from Dr. Ely's article a further evidence of the failure of commissions or department management of railroads:

In the Prussian Parliament, Dr. Lasker entered the lists in favor of state railways, and combated so vigorously and successfully for his cause that the part he then took in the contest will always form a noteworthy epoch in the development of German railways. He began by making serious charges against government, in particular against the minister of commerce, in matters of railway concessions. Early in the session the government demanded of the Parliament a credit of 360,000,000 marks; 150,000,000 for a road from Berlin to Wetzlar, the remainder for other railway undertakings, for rolling-stock, &c. The object was to connect the eastern and western parts of the monarchy by state railways. It was during the first reading of the bill that Lasker made his memorable speech of January 14, 1873. He asserted boldly that in matters of concession the point chiefly considered by the minister of commerce, Count Itzenplitz, was not the interests of the people and the state, but personal favor or personal ill-will; that Dr. Strousberg, e. g., was always granted the desired concession; that concessions had been granted to a high official and to members of prominent families, who from the outset had no intention of building railways; that these parties had derived profit by trading with the concessions (so-called Gründergewissen).

The minister of commerce made an ill showing in his defense. The minister president, Count Roon, addressed a letter, under date of January 31, 1873, to the president of the house of deputies. He defended the above-mentioned official and attacked Lasker. The letter was read in the house February 7, but the utterances against Lasker were at once taken back. Deputy Lasker used this opportunity to continue his exposures, and produced such substantial proof of his statements that Count Roon, astonished at what had been going forward, withdrew the letter in toto, and promised to assist in every possible way in clearing up the "sad affair." A royal message, February 14, moved that a special commission be appointed to investigate the matter and to discover "what principles have been employed in granting railway concessions and the abuses which have grown up in connection with the exploitation (ausuntzung) of these concessions, in order that it may be seen (a) whether and in how far the existing laws and the rules of administration are fitted to secure the fulfillment of the intentions of government in granting the concessions and to protect the public against deceits and damages; (b) what changes in the existing legislation and administration are necessary to put a stop to the abuses which have crept in.

The commission of investigation held fifty-six sittings; the report was contained in three different manuscripts, embracing together 1,000 large quarto pages. The official documents of the ministry of commerce were examined carefully, numberless witnesses were heard, railway experts questioned, &c. The ability and thoroughness with which this so-called Lasker commission conducted the investigation have gained for it celebrity. The most noteworthy parts of the summing up of the report are as follows:

"An exclusive system of state railways is not at present realizable, but economic considerations favor such a system as the final goal to be striven for." "Railways are public highways, means of favoring traffic, resembling in essence and purpose other highways. The only means of justifying the government in relinquishing railways to private industry and speculation is the stringent financial necessity of the time." "It appears desirable to transfer to the empire a controlling power over all German railways."

Now I am not the advocate of the ownership of railroads by the State or by the General Government. I have read that to show the failure, the utter failure, of a railway commission which was raised to the dignity of a department of the government in Prussia.

I digressed to read that from what I was about to say in reference to the pool. This bill prohibits pooling. Various accounts have been given of the pool by the railroad people, and all lead to the one general conclusion, that the object of the pool is to maintain rates. All wise statesmen will agree that the best, the wisest, and the most wholesome regulator of commerce is healthy competition. Believing in that principle, I have always been an advocate of the broadest and most comprehensive system of the improvement of our water ways in order that they might compete with the railroads; for upon the water way, which is free to all and belongs to the Government, all men may run their boats in competition with each other and all the boats run in competition with the railroads. All the evidence taken, all the evidence given by the railroad experts, agrees upon the one single proposition that the great competitor of the railroads in the transportation of heavy freights in the water way. They harp upon that subject. They protest against the regulation and control by law of the railroad system unless the some fetters are put upon the water ways; and there is much force and logic in the argument. But it has never been thought necessary to do it, because the competition of the different kinds of vessels upon the water ways brings everything down to the desired basis.

But to the pool. Here is what Dr. Ely says about the pool. He does not speak of it as a "pool," but as a species of railroad management. It is the nursery out of which the pool came:

In Germany the traffic is usually divided among the different companies, and in such a manner that the bulk of it passes over one road one month and another the second. In his celebrated work, Englische Eisenbahn-Politik, Dr. Cohn has shown that in England a new railway between places already provided with one results almost inevitably in an understanding between the companies and a rise in the tariff.

That is the pool; that is its effect—a rise in rates. Where a new road is built between the same points that should be a competing road. It is pooled, and the rates are raised enough to give that new road an earning equal to the average of the roads already combined in the pool. Does not that suppress competition On that principle the more railroads we have the higher rates must go to maintain them.

The end of railway competition—

Dr. Ely says—

is railway monopoly—

That is the doctrine of the pool—and this is urged as a ground for state ownership of the railroads there.

There, I take it, is the nursery out of which came the pool. That principle has been transplanted from Europe to this country, and the pool is formed here, they say, to maintain rates. If they would add "and to destroy competition" they would have told the whole story and all the truth. Now, if that be the truth about the pool, and glazed over and enameled and sugar-coated as the account of it is as given by the railroad officials and experts, there is the naked bitter that is in the pool as we have it in this country. That is the truth of it. It is organized for that purpose, so that inevitably the duty devolves upon the General Government to assume and exercise that power conferred upon Congress in the Constitution of regulating commerce. The non-use of that power is no evidence that it does not exist. It has lain dormant for a long time. Railroad officials have apparently reached the conclusion that with their charters granting them the privilege to operate railroads they have conveyed to them as a part of the charter the right, the power, to regulate commerce. In the absence of the exercise of that power by Congress—which seems up to this time to have absolutely abdicated and surrendered it to the great associations of wealth operating the vast railroad system of this country, the roads having formed the pool—they formed their combinations, and they are regulating commerce to suit themselves.

We have been told in argument before the committee by the counsel of the railroads, who attempt to confuse this question, that the Government has no power, that the States which granted the charters have all the power over the subject. When they come before the State Legislatures they tell them that the States have no power, that all the power is vested in the General Government; that their roads, though constructed under State charters, have gone to the boundary lines of States, where they are connected with other roads which run through other States, and are, therefore, interstate railroads. So here they are State railroads; there they are interstate railroads. They make of them a sort of jointed snake. It is an entire snake so long as the Government does not touch it, but when the hand of the Government is stretched out and touches them they go to pieces, and then they are State railroads; but when the States go after them, then they reunite and become interstate railroads. It is almost a game of thimble-rig. [Laughter.]

We have been repeatedly told by the distinguished counsel and railroad officials who have appeared before the committee that we are attempting something new under the sun; that all our efforts have proved and will prove failures, as they have in all other civilized countries; and that the best intellects of all civilized nations have grappled with this subject, but they have not thus far succeeded in accomplishing the desired end. The "desired end" aimed at here has been in the main accomplished by legislation in almost every civilized country in the world except this, and we are now struggling to do only part of what they have long ago accomplished.

I find the following interesting statement of the laws of Prussia and other European states regulating railroad traffic and transportation, and of the policy of those governments, in Dr. Ely's report, before referred to:

Between the 21st of August and the 13th of November, 1837, concessions were granted for four short railways, namely, the Berlin and Potsdam, the Magdeburg and Leipzig, the Düsseldorf and Elberfeld, and a part of the Rhenish Railway. In the following year, when only one of the above-mentioned railways (the Berlin and Potsdam, 26.4 kilometers) was finished, the celebrated law of November 3, 1838, was enacted. This law, which is still valid, except in so far as certain parts have been rendered of no effect by subsequent legislation, formed the basis of all later Prussian railway laws, and is in many respects a model.

Its main points are as follows:

§§ 1 to 5. Every company having the intention of building a railway must apply to the ministry of commerce for a concession. The application must contain an exact statement of the principal points through which the road is to pass, and of the capital stock to be divided into shares. It must be accompanied by a plan of the road, stating clearly the manner in which the road is to be built, the materials to be used, the wagons, coaches, locomotives to be employed, &c.

If no objections on the score of safety, public interest, &c., are found against the plan after it has been carefully examined, the concession is granted, and a time is fixed within which it must be shown that shares have been taken to the full amount of the capital stock, and the shareholders have met and framed the statutes of the company. The statutes are not valid unless approved of by the government. All those who subscribe for shares are unconditionally responsible for 40 per cent. of the full amount. If afterward the regular payments for the remaining 60 per cent. cease, the company has the choice either to prosecute the subscribers and force them to fulfill their obligations or to release them from the same under loss of the 40 per cent. already paid in. No share may be given out before the full nominal value for which it reads has been paid.

§ 6. Additional shares may not be emitted without the consent of the government. No loan may be contracted without the approval of the ministry of commerce, which has the right to oblige the company to establish a satisfactory sinking fund for the payment of capital and interest.

§ 8. The company has the right of expropriating such property as is necessary to render the road capable of fulfilling its functions as a public highway.

This paragraph is of importance (1) because it establishes the character of railways as essentially public and not private undertakings; (2) because it justifies expropriation only upon grounds of public welfare.

§ 24. The company is obliged to keep the road and all appurtenances in a condition which insures, as far as possible, safety in the transport of goods and passengers.

§ 25. The company is responsible for all damage to persons and goods, unless it can prove that the damage was in no wise the fault of the company. The weight of proof, it will be observed, lies with the company. The dangers necessarily connected with railways do not free the company from this obligation.

§ 26. The railway tariff must be made known to the government and published. Changes in the tariff are not allowed to be made without notifying the government and the public. In case the change increases the rates, it must be published at least six weeks before it comes into effect. All parties are to be treated alike without partiality.

§ 27. The minister of commerce has the right to allow a second company to use any railway track which has been open three years. For this use the second company must indemnify the first. This provision, which it was thought would effectually protect the public against railway monopolies, has, for obvious reasons, never proved practical.

§ 33. When the profits of any railway exceed 10 per cent. of the capital invested the passenger and goods tariff must be reduced until the annual profits are no longer in excess of 10 per cent.

§ 36. Railways are obliged to carry all postal sendings and to transport postal wagons free of charge.

§§ 38 to 40. All railways must pay a tax in proportion to their receipts. The state is to use the income derived from this tax (1) as indemnification for the loss of the government occasioned by the railways—the government had formerly a monopoly of the transport of passengers in connection with the postal service; (2) for the amortization of the capital employed in building the railway tracks. When this capital is completely amortized in case of any railway track the receipts derived from said railway track shall not exceed the sum necessary to keep the same in repair and the cost of its administration; that is, that railway track would, in this case, become government property and be administered like a highway, from which the government raises sufficient toll to pay for keeping it in repair and to meet the expenses of administration.

§ 42. At the expiration of thirty years after the opening of any railway the state has the right of purchasing it. In case the government and the railway can come to no other voluntary agreement, the company receives twenty-five times the average yearly amount of dividends during the last five years.

§ 44. Before the expiration of thirty years after the opening of a railway no concession may be granted to a parallel line.

This paragraph was repealed in 1867 by article 41 of the constitution of the North German Confederation. Finally the right is reserved of enacting such further laws as experience shall show to be necessary.

The pending measure, it will be seen, falls far short of the stringent requirements of the laws of those countries. It is unfortunate that a wholesome and wise and uniform system of regulation of commerce had not been inaugurated and perfected as our railroad system progressed and developed. In the absence of any such public regulation the railroad managers have become accustomed to the exercise of unrestrained power, and many of them have seriously thought the power to regulate commerce generally was to be claimed and reckoned as among their charter rights, and they naturally feel shocked at any effort to interpose public control.

They must understand that the State or Government, as the case may be, establishes a highway not for the purpose of benefiting a corporation, but to serve the interests and convenience of the people, and its enjoyment must be open to all on just and equal terms, and the State must and does have powers to secure these results.

The corporation is used as an instrument of State service merely as a convenient way of carrying out a public object. This is the great and sole public good, for the accomplishment of which all other powers are given and duties imposed.

This is a people's government. They are our sovereign, and for them and for their protection this Government was ordained, and for them it must be administered in accordance with the Constitution. To those who love their country and who have faith in humanity and who desire that this Government shall be the scene of the progressive happiness of the many rather than an arena of combat of the strong against the weak, where the few only can attain demoralizing and excessive wealth and unstable pleasures at the expense of their brothers, the path of duty is plain and unmistakable.

Mr. WOODWARD. No one, I believe, Mr. Speaker, denies the power of Congress to legislate upon this subject. If there are any who deny the necessity for such legislation they are sufficiently answered by the public sentiment of the country, by the legislation of many of our greatest States, and by the number of bills introduced into Congress upon this subject. These premises being granted, it seems to me unnecessary to take up the time of the House in denunciations of railroads and passionate invectives which throw no light on the question before us.

The duty of the House is to consider soberly the various propositions before us and select from them all that which is safe, judicious, and most efficient to correct the evils of which the country complains.

This, sir, is no easy task. As a rule, those who are loudest in their clamors against the railroads are found least able to master it. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], who addressed the House on Thursday, and permitted himself to use language implying suspicion in his mind that the committee had allowed some railroad attorney to dictate the form of their bill, undertook to wrestle with this problem single-handed. At the opening of this Congress he introduced a bill disposing of the whole subject in two short sections so wonderfully concise and comprehensive that I will ask the Clerk to read the bill, or I will read it myself:

A bill to prevent unjust discriminations by railroad companies, and subjecting them to the control of the States under certain circumstances.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases wherein any railroad or railway company has received grants of lands of the United States, or of the bonds of the Government of the United States, to aid in the construction of any such railroad or railway, the whole or any part of which runs into or through any State or Territory of the United States, such railroad or railway shall be subject to and controlled by the laws of the State or Territory into or through which such railroad or railway may run.

SEC. 2. That all legislation of any State or Territory of the United States, and regulations duly authorized and made in pursuance of such legislation, shall be operative upon all railroads and railways running into or through any such State or Territory, or such part of such railroads or railways as are within the limits of such State or Territory, and any such law or regulation, made in pursuance thereof, prescribing rates of charges by any such railroads or railways for the transportation of passengers, merchandise, or live-stock over any such railroads or railways, shall be effective and operative as to all shipments and transportation charges, whether such shipments originate and terminate within the limits of such State or Territory or originate in one State or Territory and terminate in another; and such legislation or regulations shall extend to all shipments of merchandise and live-stock which directly affect the people of the State or Territory where such legislation exists.

The first of these sections, sir, is entirely inoperative, because at law now the fact that a railroad has been aided by the bounty of the General Government does not withdraw it from the jurisdiction of the States through which it passes. The second section proposes to confer upon States a jurisdiction which Congress alone can exercise; to extend the operation of the laws of one State into the territory of other States, and to subject one line of railroad at the same time to the operation of schedules adopted by two or more States or Territories and liable to differ in their rates for the same distances and between the same points. I venture to assert, Mr. Speaker, that if the railroad attorneys were permitted to name their choice among all the bills proposed here they would not hesitate a moment in giving the palm of preference to the bill of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Committee on Commerce spent a great deal of time in listening to arguments and testimony and discussing among themselves the various propositions referred to them. They could not agree upon an entire bill, and they reported the pending measure with the understanding that members of the committee should have the privilege of offering amendments in the House. I am in favor of all of its provisions except the one indicated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR], and I shall vote for the amendment which he intends to offer.

Those parts of the bill which establish a commission and prescribe its duties, giving it full power to investigate all complaints and to take all necessary action to correct them, to study the subject in the light of experience and report to Congress what further legislation may be necessary to perfect an intelligent system of railroad control, are in my judgment the most valuable. I shall not speak at length upon this feature of the bill, because other gentlemen have already fully explained it in debate and I concur in what they have said.

Those members of the committee who favored the plan of a commission consented to incorporate in the bill certain portions of the "remedial" legislation proposed in the Reagan bill. I have no confidence, Mr. Speaker, in the effectiveness of these provisions, but I am willing to put some of them on the statute-book and give them a trial. I am even willing now to amend section 6 of the committee bill so as to make the private action there authorized one of "equitable jurisdiction and discovery," giving to the court in every such case the power specified in section 7 of the Reagan bill, to compel discovery and the production of books and papers; and perhaps to carry out the intention of the committee itself this ought to be done. In the courts of some of the States that may be unnecessary by reason of the codes, which abolish wholly or partly the distinctions between courts of law and equity; but in other States where the old distinctions remain in force the provision might fail through mere defect of form.

With this exception the "remedial legislation" in the committee bill is all that can safely be adopted at this time. It declares that all charges must be reasonable for the service rendered. It makes it unlawful to discriminate between persons in the matter of rates and furnishing facilities for business. It makes it unlawful to allow rebates or drawbacks to one person which are not allowed under similar circumstances to all other persons. It gives to a party injured a right of action for his damages and an extra allowance for costs where the act complained of is willful. And it provides for a criminal prosecution, to be conducted by the district attorneys of the United States, and for a penalty, upon conviction, of not more than $1,000.

With these general remarks, Mr. Speaker, I pass to the consideration of the differences between the bill and substitute, those portions of the original Reagan bill which a majority of the committee declined to report favorably.

PENALTIES.

The first difference between the bill and substitute to which the gentleman from Texas calls attention is the provision of the committee bill which exempts unreasonable charges from penalty. I agree with the gentlemen who argue that an error of judgment should not be treated as a crime. But, sir, I have another objection to it. It is impracticable.

The question whether a charge is reasonable or not opens a range of investigation which is practically unlimited. The length of the whole road; the length of the haul; the cost of the entire road and its several sections; the indebtedness of the road and urgency of payment; operating expenses; the value and quality of the goods carried; the state of the weather; the amount of the risk; the income of the road in former years or months and in the current year or month; the prospects of future business; the value of the service; competition or the absence of competition; the amount and value of the article carried in the given instance compared with the whole amount and value of the same article ordinarily carried or produced, and with the whole amount and value of the tonnage; a comparison with the rates charged for the same service by other roads and water routes—all of these facts and circumstances, with many others, must be brought into view and fully considered in order to determine fairly whether a given charge is reasonable or not.

Think for a moment, Mr. Speaker, of the consequences of bringing such an issue as this to be determined by a grand or petit jury in a criminal cause. Every prosecution brought under it would furnish a repetition of the star-route trials—endless and unavailing. The gentleman from Texas criticises that portion of the committee bill which provides a suit for civil damages because it does not, in so many words, invest the court with equity powers. He says evidence sufficient for the purposes of such a suit can only be obtained in that way. I am inclined to agree with him, and, as already stated, am willing to amend the sixth section of the committee bill so as to confer such powers upon the court.

But, Mr. Speaker, the rules of evidence favor the civil suit rather than the criminal prosecution. In the civil suit the plaintiff can recover his damages upon a mere preponderance of evidence. In the criminal prosecution the court will instruct the jury that they must acquit the defendant unless the evidence of the prosecution excludes every reasonable doubt of his guilt. From what source and in what manner will you produce evidence of so high a grade in the criminal court if you must rely for discovery under the equity powers of the court to procure a much lower grade of evidence in the civil suit? Sir, if the gentleman's argument is good, you must, in order to make this provision effective, confer chancery powers and the right to enforce discovery upon the criminal court also. A bill of discovery in aid of the grand jury or tacked on as a rider to an indictment I am afraid would be regarded as an odious novelty in our criminal practice.

REBATES AND DRAWBACKS.

The substitute prohibits rebates altogether. The bill of the committee provides that they shall be given to all persons alike under the same circumstances. It has been shown that there are cases in which the allowance of rebates constitutes a necessary and beneficial feature of railroad management. It has also been shown that the practice is sometimes abused by allowing discriminations. Shall we stamp out the good and the evil together, or shall we endeavor to destroy the evil and preserve the good? The only evil lies in the discriminations. This evil the bill of the committee attempts to prohibit. If it is practicable to enforce the provision of the substitute, no one will pretend that it is not just as easy to enforce the provision of the bill of the committee. If enforced, it will remove the only evil complained of in connection with the allowance of rebates.

POSTING SCHEDULES.

The substitute of the gentleman from Texas provides for posting rates five days before they go into effect. I agree with everything said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] and others who have opposed this provision, and will add by way of supplement to their remarks some observations upon its relation to other provisions of the bill and substitute. Under the first sections of both all rates must be reasonable. It would seem to follow that the rates posted must be reasonable. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is within the knowledge of every member of this House that the conditions which must determine the reasonableness of a charge frequently change in the course of a single day. A railroad company may post its rates as required by the substitute bill, and then go on under its old schedule until five days have passed. On the morning of the sixth day a change in freights by lake, river, or other roads or other circumstances may make it necessary for that road to reduce its rates below the posted schedule or go out of business for five days until it can post a new schedule. This substitute forbids it to lower the rate. It is impossible for any railroad company to determine with certainty so far ahead what will be reasonable charges on all classes of goods.

Again, sir, under ordinary circumstances it is the legal duty of a common carrier to receive and transport goods offered for that purpose. Freight may be offered on a day when the carrier has concluded that his posted schedule contains unreasonable rates. He can not change them for five days. The freighter insists upon his obligation as a carrier. If he carries at all under this substitute, he must charge the rate in his posted schedule or subject himself to civil damages and criminal prosecution. If he refuses the freight, he is liable to another action for damages for violation of his common-law duty as a carrier, unless this statute absolves him from it, and no one, I think, will pretend that it does.

If I have read the substitute aright, sir, this would be among the most serious consequences of its passage and enforcement. But possibly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is correct in the statement of its purpose and effect. I will ask the Clerk to read what the gentleman said on this subject in his opening speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee's bill contains no provision requiring a railroad company to post up schedules of its rates of charges, while section 5 of the substitute bill does require such schedules to be posted up. And this is essential to secure fairness and equality in rates between shippers and as a means of evidence in determining whether discriminations have been made, and whether more than regular or schedule prices have been charged. If you leave that provision out and come to a trial in each case you will have to prove what reasonable rates are. If you put the provision in requiring them to post up their schedules of rates the law will presume they constitute reasonable rates, and the production of the schedules at a trifling expense would directly show the jury the amount of charges which the road had fixed, and it would then be for the court and jury to determine whether the schedule had been disregarded or not in the case under consideration.

Mr. WOODWARD. If the gentleman's language were less explicit, or, apparently, less carefully considered, I should be inclined to regard this all as a slip of the tongue. He says, without qualification, that the "law will presume" that the posted schedules of rates "constitute reasonable rates." All that the court and jury will have to do will be to "determine whether the schedule had been disregarded or not in the case under consideration." If the provision is to be interpreted with this gloss by its author, it will devour other provisions of the bill. They put such rates in the schedule as they please. Let them produce the schedule in court and prove that it has been adhered to; no further inquiry is then to be made. Your courts, Mr. Speaker, will not be crowded with suitors when they find themselves invited in the outset to traverse and combat a presumption of law.

The rates in the schedule may be more for a short than for a long haul. In fact they may be pool rates, and it is worth while to inquire whether the enforcement of this provision will not compel competing roads to pool. If each road acts for itself the immense advantage to the road posting the latest schedule will immediately bring on such disastrous railroad wars that the roads will be compelled to post their schedules at the same time and with the same rates, as well as to change them at the same time. I would like any gentleman who favors the substitute to explain what more the "pool" does or pretends to do.

RULE OF DAMAGES.

I am opposed to allowance of triple damages as proposed by the substitute. Triple damages are vindictive and punitory. They can not be understood in any other way. The substitute provides that the same act may be punished criminally by a fine of not less than $1,000—it may be a million. We can not justify to reason or conscience such an accumulation of penalties upon the same person for the same act.

Pooling and charging more for a short than for a longer haul are both methods of railroad management which are capable of abuse, but it does not follow that they are always abused, and I prefer to leave those subjects for the consideration of the commission to be appointed under the bill.

POOLING.

The ostensible purpose of the pool is to prevent railroad wars and discriminations. It is only attempted between roads with substantially the same termini. It is wrong and injurious for one road to discriminate between its own customers; but it is quite as injurious to the country to have one road charging less or more to its customers in Chicago or New York than is charged by a competing road between the same points. The effect upon trade is precisely the same whether the discrimination is made between the customers of the same road or the customers of half a dozen roads. Let the commission examine this subject and report what legislation is practicable to do away with the evils of pooling.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL.

The provision prohibiting a greater charge for the short than for the longer haul has been characterized by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] as an effort to make the benefits of competition universal; in other words, to give to South Bend all the commercial advantages of Chicago. This alone would be sufficient to determine my vote upon it. The powers of Congress are great, but they do not extend to a repeal of the laws of nature and of trade. Any attempt to do that, sir, can only lead to mischief. But, sir, I am opposed to it because it is wrong in principle and must inevitably prove injurious to the interests of my section. As a basis for what I shall say on this subject I recur to the illustration first brought to the notice of our committee by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE].

This is the case: A railroad runs from New Orleans through Winona, Miss., to Memphis. The distance from New Orleans to Winona is two hundred and seventy-five miles, to Memphis four hundred miles. This road charges for carrying a bale of cotton from Winona to New Orleans $3.25; from Memphis to New Orleans, one hundred and twenty-five miles longer haul, $1. The first impression of almost every man will probably be that this is an outrageous discrimination against Winona, which ought not to be possible under any state of the law whatever. But examination of all the conditions of the problem will rarely fail to change this view. In this way the view of a majority of the Commerce Committee was changed; and I take the liberty of calling attention to another conversion which took place in the committee-room on this subject.

Hon. L. E. Chittenden, of New York, an able lawyer and business man of large experience, came before the committee to advocate the adoption of the original Reagan bill, which is the substitute now offered. His attention was called to this Memphis and Winona case, and he was asked to give his views upon it. After hearing all the circumstances, he declined to give an opinion and said he would look into it further. On the next day he appeared before the committee voluntarily and made a statement which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up a moment's time of the committee. I have been giving the time since yesterday to the problem that was presented in the Memphis and Winona case, and that had led me to an examination of the decisions under the ninetieth section of the railway clauses act in England to which I had reference yesterday, and I find that that problem has given to the house of lords in England the same trouble that it certainly gives me. It may not give the committee any. In one case that I have found which went up from Scotland to the house of lords, the house of lords were divided upon the question whether under this ninetieth section such a similar discrimination as that mentioned here was authorized. In that case the road led from Derby to London. Its maximum rates, as all the rates in England are, are fixed by Parliament. It made a rate to a place called Hampton-on-Arden. They charged 8 shillings from Hampton to Derby, but on through-passenger traffic from Hampton to London the proportion would be only 2 shillings, and yet by a divided court the house of lords held that that was not contrary to the ninetieth section of the act which I read yesterday, and they held further that it was certainly doubtful whether it was practical to take away that power of discrimination from the railway companies. All I have to say is that I should hesitate myself some time before I committed myself absolutely to the provision of the Reagan bill which prohibits more for a short haul than for a long haul under all possible circumstances. There is a very serious question there that certainly is deserving the best examination of the committee. I say this because I thought to some extent differently yesterday. It is probably the most doubtful question there is involved in the bill.

Mr. WOODWARD. What is said in this statement in relation to the effect of the ninetieth section of the railway clauses consolidation act is not strictly pertinent, because both the rates there mentioned were within the maximum allowed by law. But the opinion of the house of lords and the opinion of Mr. Chittenden on the questions of policy and practicability are certainly worthy of attention.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what were the facts and arguments which changed Mr. Chittenden's view overnight, and which have influenced the views of a majority of your committee? Winona is distant from any landing on the Mississippi River and has no railroad connection save the one mentioned. Steamboat and barge lines running on the river from Memphis carry cotton to New Orleans for $1 or less per bale. The railroad, then, must carry the cotton to the same destination for $1 per bale or abandon the business entirely. The current expenses of the road, the wear and tear of its cars and track, will be substantially the same whether its trains return empty to New Orleans or go back laden with cotton. The rate of $1 per bale may not pay if we take into account interest upon the cost of the road, but, sir, if it pays operating expenses, or even a considerable portion of them, the road can not afford to lose it, and the people of Winona can not afford to have the road lose it, because any diminution of its net income will probably result in an increase of rates from that place.

But the gentleman from Texas insists that no harm can result from his bill because the road is permitted to charge as much for the long as for the short haul. Then, Mr. Speaker, the best that the company can do is to equalize the two rates. I venture to assert, sir, that in nine cases out of ten this will result in an increase of the through rate. Very many railroads in this country, especially in the South and West, enjoy large debts and have a very limited income. This road from Memphis to New Orleans, I believe, is one of that class. Stockholders may afford to wait indefinitely for dividends; but the road must derive sufficient income from the business on its line to pay operating expenses, repairs, and interest on its debt. It must do this, sir, or fall into bankruptcy. Its business on the present basis produces, perhaps, that amount of income.

Then, sir, an equalization of the rates, in order to produce the same income, must result in decreasing the rate at Winona and raising it at Memphis. To illustrate: Assume that its shipments from Memphis amount to 5,000 bales at $1 per bale; from Winona 1,000 bales at $3.25. Then it receives from its cotton business at these two points $8,250, and it must continue to receive that amount from that business or make good the deficiency by charging more at other stations or on other classes of freight. If it reduces the Winona rate to $1 it falls short of the necessary income. If it raises the Memphis rates to $3.25 it not only loses the Memphis business but inflicts enormous damage on the public at large. The very best it can do is to fix the rate at both places at $1.37½, which, if it can retain the Memphis business, will yield the same income which it now receives.

But, sir, the provision of this substitute almost literally places the railroad "between the devil and the deep sea." An increase of 1 cent in the rate from Memphis deprives them of the business there. An increase of 3 shillings not only throws the business to the barge lines, but enables those lines to advance their rates to $1.30 or even $1.35. This will incite and authorize railroads carrying cotton north and east from Memphis to increase their rates also, and this increase in rates of transportation will be paid by the producers. The practical effect of this provision of the substitute, Mr. Speaker, will be to levy a fine of from 1 to 3 shillings per bale upon every producer whose cotton is marketed at Memphis, and for no better reason than the simple geographical fact that the town of Winona is situated at a distance from the Mississippi River.

The same thing will occur, Mr. Speaker, at Chicago, but on a vastly greater scale. The great staples of the Upper Mississippi Valley, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, the northern portions of Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska, must pass Chicago on their way to the seaboard. There they meet the competition between lake and rail. The railroads are compelled by the competition of the water routes to carry these staples to the seaboard at very low rates—rates which benefit immeasurably not only the millions of producers in the Northwest but the millions of consumers in the East. The roads have their option—they can carry at these low rates, or send their trains back empty to New York. Like the road at Memphis, they prefer to get what they can out of the business to pay or help to pay their current expenses. If they increase the through rates, as they must in any attempt to equalize the through with the local rates, they lose the business; the water routes and Canadian railroads advance their charges, and the increase of freight is paid by the producer. Upon all the producers of that vast region tributary to Chicago you levy a fine for every bushel of grain, barrel of flour, and pound of meat raised in a vain attempt to extend the benefits of competition to places where competition does not in fact exist—an attempt whose only result can be to hamper and restrict competition at those places where nature and the enterprise of man have established its necessary conditions.

Mr. Speaker, if I were well convinced of the soundness of the principle attempted to be expressed in this section of the substitute, I should hesitate long before voting to inflict its inevitable consequences upon the people whom I represent. Let the commission also examine into this subject and recommend to Congress such legislation as will tend to prevent abuses, and leave to the roads and to the people their natural right to the uses and advantages of competition.

The great difference between the substitute and the bill of the committee is found in the fact that the bill assumes that a complete code of railroad regulations can not be framed by any one Congress, and lays the foundation for the building of such a code in the light of practical experience and calm reflection. The substitute assumes that all the conditions of the problem are completely within our grasp, and proposes forthwith to lay the mailed hand of political power upon the most complicated and sensitive business adjustments of modern times. I believe the results of such action where not ineffective will be disastrous to the interests of the country, and I therefore support the bill of the committee. Festina lente should be our motto in a matter so delicate and important. We should proceed with caution and deliberation, groping outward toward the limits both of jurisdiction and expediency. In this way only can we secure to the country a wise, safe, and beneficent system of railroad control.

Mr. MCADOO. I am not of those to whom a railroad company, because it is a railroad company, is always and everywhere an object of attack. There are gentlemen to whom the interesting, useful, and civilizing locomotive is "a monster of such hideous mien that to be hated needs but to be seen" in connection with some proposed legislation. There are other gentlemen who, applauding the victories of this mighty monster, would abdicate all governmental functions in its favor. Between these contending hosts there must be a golden mean.

I have long observed that in discussing railroad legislation in the State Legislature or in Congress the advocates and opponents rapidly array themselves into two classes, the one drawing strong pictures of railroad benefits and asking liberal legislation or non-interference, and the other calling for restriction to protect the welfare and liberties of the people against railroad injustice and aggression. The one cries out, "You would have no country without railroads;" the other, "Restrict the railroads or you will soon have a country without liberty." Let it be ours to so legislate as to have a free country and great railroads, each aiding and harmonizing with the other. I am opposed to all legislation savoring of paternal government. Government is an umpire, to see fair play between the contending rivals in the game of life.

But in regulating railroads the Government is dealing with its own creations. The railroad company is a public concern—a governmental agent as it were—a public carrier upon a public highway.

In dealing with railroad companies there are legislators whose liberality makes them dangerous guides to follow. For the results of being too liberal and enthusiastic in legislating for railroads we need not accompany the amiable, interesting, eloquent, and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] to the Palestine of cooing winds and waving palms, but we can linger to learn in the no less heavenly, if less beautiful, precincts of Jersey City, N. J. To build up her railroad system New Jersey gave exemptions from local taxation to the companies. To-day the metropolitan city of the State has over $40,000,000 of property within her borders that does not share equally in the local burdens while benefiting fully from municipal government. These exemptions have been held by the United States Supreme Court to be in the nature of irrepealable contracts. The enactors of these statutes may have meant well, and when the giant genius of Webster procured the decision of this supreme tribunal in the Dartmouth College case he little thought he was but rearing a monument to his legal fame whose shadow would fall like blight on the cities of his country. On the college case has been based these decisions in favor of the irrepealability of such contracts.

In the light of experience I am opposed to railroad discrimination, rebate, pooling, and to centralizing, expensive, imposing, but worthless commissions, and so in favor of the substitute bill of the distinguished statesman from Texas, Judge REAGAN. Let us look at some of the evils this bill attempts to remedy.

At pooling, for instance. For many years the statute-books of the various States have been laden with penal statutes forbidding the combination of laborers and artisans to "strike" for higher wages. It was said to be a conspiracy against trade and commerce for them to so combine. But, while the printers or the brakemen could be cast into jail for combining to say how much shall constitute pay for a day's work, Messrs. Gould and Vanderbilt and Huntington can form a pool and say how much it shall cost the printer or brakeman to transport his barrel of flour or pork from Chicago. What wonder that such inequalities in legislation awaken popular discontent? What healthy competition does pooling admit of? Make pooling illegal, and an honest standard and fixed schedule will be the result. The people and the companies will both benefit.

A system of rebates encourages unjust discrimination and fraud. Under it one man's success is built up on the ruins of another man's business. In favor of rebates, the erudite and learned gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has attempted to harrow up the feelings of the great American Congress for an unfortunate owner of staves who is hobbling around creation on rebate-crutches looking for a market for his wares. Suppose this unfortunate and nomadic individual knew in advance that in no case could he get a rebate, would he not entirely stave off the evil day by either staying at home and saving his staves or send them to market when he knew there was no risk? What is the history of rebates? Have they not been used by a powerful company to crush its rivals and by great enterprises to ruin struggling competitors? Perfect equality should be the law. As to schedules of rates, I cannot see any possible injury to the companies from that. If trouble is found in carrying out this provision legislation can supply a remedy. Against proposed regulations of any kind captious objections will always be raised. You could stay here until the day of doom and make propositions to regulate the railroads, and every one would be met by some objection. They want unlimited freedom; the people reasonable restriction.

Nothing seems to me so unfair as the allowance in favor of the long haul as against the shorter one.

The fertile and oriental imagination of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] illustrates his position by supposing the case of a railroad to Jericho on the hilltop without competition, to Jerusalem beyond with competition. He says the difficult grade of the hill makes Jericho pay for Jerusalem. The physical altitude of Jericho inures to the financial elevation of Jerusalem. The malarious vapors of Jerusalem are made bearable owing to the heavy toll on the tonic air of Jericho. To the wayfaring man who now as in Scripture falls among the rebate and pool thieves on his way to Jericho our benevolent friend from Massachusetts would give his sympathy, and our learned and able friend from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] would in his own language say:

> In the utter hopelessness of the case we mutter between our teeth "God help them," or, with a deeper charity and a more genuine submission to His will, put our hands in our pockets and do what we can.

But neither would send an officer of the law after the robbers. Practically speaking, the illustration of the gentleman from Massachusetts is not a good one in this country; not even, I think, in mundane Jerusalem. Railroads are operated to make money. In making it let them not rob Peter to pay Paul.

Let us take an occidental illustration: Here is Chicago (not the old and certainly not the new Jerusalem), with many competing lines. Here is Paradise, Pa., on the most natural and easy route between New York and Chicago. Only one line of railroad passes through it. It is only two hundred miles from New York, and yet passage or freight under existing circumstances is liable to be greater to Paradise than Chicago. Of course I know Chicago and another similar place are both reached by down grade and easier of access than Paradise, but on what idea of justice should Paradise, Pa., pay up for Chicago, Ill.? This system is very unjust to the Eastern farmer. With higher taxes, dearer land, and higher cost of production, all paid on account of proximity to the seaboard, he can not compete with those thousands of miles inland. It is unjust to the Western and Southern merchant, because his Eastern rival, without breakage in transit, meets him in the inland towns with positive advantage.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HOPKINS] has very ably shown the constitutionality of this bill. As its distinguished author says, it is the commerce and not the railroads he aims to regulate. All admit the power to regulate the measure if regulation is alone in dispute. The substitute, by putting everything in the courts, prevents any unconstitutional interference being exercised.

Railroad commissions work well in many of the States. There they are invaluable in settling questions of taxation between the railroads and the people. Such is the case in my own State. But the commission proposed by the bill of the committee seems to me a useless institution. I should think the railroad managers would favor the commission. Very imposing but entirely impotent, it would be a harmless safety-valve for popular and individual discontent, without benefiting or hurting any one concerned. Their finding would be less potent than the editorial condemnation of a leading journal. Looking imposing from the respectability of his office and income and the princely freedom of his travel, a railroad commissioner under the committee bill could walk adown the sunny years of his official life amid the serried ranks of smiling railroad directors and all-attentive train conductors, tremendous in his processes and infinitesimal in his results—the stall-fed ox of the national farm, unable to plow and not merchantable in the shambles.

The complainant before the commission waits and watches like another Jarndyce, and finally possessed of their impotent finding is compelled to go into court on his own responsibility and at his own expense, for the committee bill gives him no counsel and less encouragement. The district attorney is not paid nor compelled to succor him. Even if the commission was powerful, I would still think an honest court and jury preferable. What influences might not control the appointment and action of the commissioners. The safety of our institutions and rights demands an honest and fearless judiciary, and if we can not depend upon our courts, then indeed is our condition a bad one. In view of the colossal wealth and great power of these companies, any three men, however pure and good, holding in their power 125,000 miles of railroad and dealing with a commerce of not less than $10,000,000,000 annually, might indeed fervently exclaim, "Lead us not into temptation." Besides all this, the dangers which might occur in their appointment are too patent to be discussed.

As I said in opening, I have no desire to make indiscriminate warfare on railroads, and am only concerned that the welfare of the people shall be as much considered as the prosperity of these companies. I agree with much that has been said as to how far they have advanced the material growth of the country, but this great country and this free Government must not become totally subservient to their power. Our free Constitution banishes the feudal lords; let us see to it that they are not replaced by railroad monarchs who can control the election and selection of the representatives of the people and direct their actions to suit the interests of these great corporations. I applaud their achievements and would encourage their development, and at the same time protect the citizen from an undue exercise of their great power. So vast is our railroad system, that the locomotive has almost become the national emblem.

The shrill scream of the locomotive has startled the denizens of our virgin forests, and its gleaming light has cleared away the midnight shadows of our most distant hills. Before its swift approach the savage and the wild beast have fled like the hunted quarry before the swoop of the lordly eagle. In the wake of its streaming smoke and curling vapors towns and cities have arisen along its shining course. It has been the missionary of civilization and the apostle of prosperity. Forbid it, wise men and true; forbid it, Representatives of the people, that it should ever be prostituted to become the giant juggernaut of monopoly to crush the liberties, the hopes, and the happiness of our people; to ruthlessly fell the poor man's home and herald its approach with the wailing of its victims; to drag in its wake myriads of honest toilers like chained captives to the triumphant chariots of Roman victors.

Speed it on its way, but let it scatter blessings, instead of blight; let it minister to the wants and happiness of the people, instead of proving destructive to their liberties and their prosperity.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7428) to authorize the Hillsborough National Bank to change its name to that of the First National Bank of Hillsborough, Ohio; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 289) authorizing the Superintendent of the Census to continue the work on the Tenth Census.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and to regulate such commerce.

Mr. HEPBURN addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WOOD obtained the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield to me for one moment so I may offer an amendment to be considered as pending to the bill of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill of the committee by striking out all after the seventh section.

Mr. REAGAN. Now I wish to ask the members of the committee and others interested whether we can have an understanding as to the closing of this general debate. To-morrow the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], a member of the committee, wants thirty minutes. I wish then to close debate by calling the previous question on the two amendments which have been suggested. The result will be to give us one of the bills, which then can be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. If the substitute is adopted, that will be under the five-minute rule for amendment; and if the committee's bill is sustained, that will be under the five-minute rule for amendment. What I wish is to get some understanding when we shall get to the five-minute debate and to the disposal of this matter at an early day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That will not preclude any one from offering amendments. Now the committee, when it presented its bill through the chairman, had an understanding it should be open to amendment in the House.

The SPEAKER. According to the rule and practice of the House the bill reported by the committee is first to be perfected by amendment and then the substitute before the vote is taken between the two. But of course there can be an understanding on the part of the House that a test vote shall be taken between the two opposing propositions, and that the one sustained by the vote of the House shall be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. REAGAN. It was from my knowledge that such was the practice of the House I have ventured to make the suggestion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not know that it is necessary, but I wish to say that at some stage of the proceedings, if I can get the floor, I desire to make the motion to recommit the bill so that it may be improved.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to recommit the bill so that it can go back to the committee and be brought again into the House improved in many provisions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be deprived of his right to recommit the bill.

Mr. PETERS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to ask whether, after the previous question is ordered, any amendments could be offered to the bill other than those which had been presented prior to the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas announced his intention to move the previous question simply upon the two amendments he has offered, leaving the bill thereafter open to amendments.

Mr. PETERS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It might as well be stated, so that the House will not misunderstand it, that when this bill was authorized to be reported from the committee full opportunities were to be given to members of the committee to offer amendments in the shape of substitutes or otherwise.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the gentleman from Texas proposes to move the previous question upon his substitute and another amendment which he has offered.

Mr. REAGAN. Upon the two amendments which I have offered, to call the previous question upon them and for the purpose of determining which of the two bills the House prefers, in order that it may go on without unnecessary delay and amend the one which may be selected, instead of two.

Mr. KEIFER. But does not the Speaker state a difficulty that may grow out of this arrangement, that is, that we might be forced to take the substitute?

Mr. REAGAN. I propose that the substitute itself shall be open to amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Then that had better be clearly understood, and that we are simply voting as a matter of preference between the bill and the substitute; and after that is done leave it so that the one which is selected shall be considered in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. REAGAN. That is my suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not object, then, to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that will be considered as understood.

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, railroads have been constructed over the country so rapidly in the few years past, and were so desired by the people in every part, that railroad companies were granted very liberal privileges, and in some cases extensive powers, in statutes and charters. These powers belonged to the government granting them, but they can not be forfeited or repealed, as vested rights have intervened. No industry has developed more than railroad building in the same time, the aggregate capital of which is placed at $6,000,000,000 and the number of miles at 125,000. This vast system is powerful for good to the people and the country, and is equally powerful for abuse and wrong, and we find that human rapacity is as strong in the conduct of railroads as in other kinds of business.

Ordinarily abuses and wrongs between individuals, business firms, or corporations can be remedied and redressed in the local courts, or if there is no existing remedy the Legislature may grant one; but here is a business so enormous as to span the continent and is penetrating the interior of every State in every direction, bringing along great good to the country, developing the waste and forest, building villages, enlarging towns to cities, and stimulating and starting useful industries among the people. Yet with all these great advantages following come also great abuses and gross wrongs to individuals and business, and necessarily there is no adequate remedy by resort to local authority. I think the General Government should exercise the power, which I believe is not denied now, to remedy the abuses charged to exist. The railroad companies need not fear Federal statutes and penalties as long as they conduct a fair and legitimate business, and a fair remedial statute can not menace capital in an honest undertaking.

The enactment of a fair law to remedy abuses charged can not harm honest railroad business or suppress new enterprises. The law can only affect such railroad corporations as are engaged in systematic wrongdoing, and it will have no force whatever against honest dealing and legitimate business.

It is contended that there is a difference of mind as to what is wrong or abusive in railroad practice and management. There is in all human conduct. The action of the law-making power, consistent with the organic law of the country, is decisive of that question. It is fair to say that no legislative power in this country would declare certain conduct in business a crime without just cause or reason for it.

I would only support a bill up to a law that would remedy abuses in railroad management. I would encourage all their legitimate traffic. Which measure is the better, the committee bill or the Reagan substitute? The main difference in them is, the committee bill provides for a commission while the substitute does not, and the substitute prohibits a greater charge per mile for a short haul than for a long one. I submit these are substantial differences, and I must favor the substitute for the committee bill.

There has been a good deal of declamation about the great benefits of a commission. They are mostly imaginary. Suppose a commission is established under the committee bill. It is to sit in Washington or adjourn to other parts when it deems it necessary. Very well. What is the practice? The shipper is to complain to the commissioners in writing. He lives in my district, nine hundred miles away, and he must send his complaint to Washington; or if he lives in the South or far West he must send his complaint to Washington. Then what? The commissioners investigate. How? Go where the shipper lives and does his business, and take testimony? Or require him to employ an attorney and send his deposition, and possibly hire an attorney in Washington to argue the merits of his case before the commission? After hearing his side then they are to send for the railroad company, perhaps doing business in Kansas, for such information as it has on the subject.

After this is done then the commission may send a copy of its decision to the United States district attorney of the State and one to the railroad company. Then the United States district attorney is to ask an injunction to stop the injustice. Here is litigation begun after waiting for the report of the commissioners. This is elastic. It is an india-rubber performance to stretch out the case in hand until the injured party falls from pure exhaustion. After the district attorney gets the matter before the United States court then real delay begins. Then time is asked for a hearing, trial, and argument; then an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, where errors are reviewed all through the case, and possibly the case will be reversed. A great remedy that.

Then see how impracticable the work of this commission. If it is to hear and investigate all grievances of every shipper complaining in the United States, as well as decide the protracted contests over pooling operations, then the work and the field is too large for it altogether, and it could not begin to examine the complaints made. A commission would be a farce. It is what the wrongdoing railroad companies suggest and want this House to pass. Why declare certain acts and practices of railroad companies wrong and a crime and then leave it out to a commission to investigate? Oh, what a farce! Make certain conduct a crime, then deal gently and name a commission to handle it carefully. Yes; by all means have a commission, to let the criminals have a chance before it, and then another chance before a court when the district attorney files his complaint.

I see no reason for allowing these corporations more leniency after the commission of crimes than the humblest citizen after he is indicted and brought before the court to answer at once. Declare certain acts wrong, unlawful, a crime, and then appoint a commission to investigate! Is that your tender policy? If so, it is a gross discrimination against the balance of mankind, who must answer directly to the proper authority for their crimes and misdemeanors. I say if we declare certain conduct of railroad companies a crime, then deal with it as a crime directly, as provided in the substitute. Why leave it to a commission to investigate? It would mean nothing in the end.

This brings me to the question of unjust discriminations. It is well known that certain railroad corporations enter into secret agreements with certain shippers, wherein they pay less rates on through or local freight than is paid by other shippers, and this is true whether there are competing lines of railroad or not. The effect of this preference is to build up one shipper at the expense of others, and thus affecting all the people—the producer, laborer, and shipper. It is safe to say that the preferred shipper does not pay less than reasonable rates; but if he did, then the company could not continue business unless it charged more than a reasonable rate to other shippers in order to make good the loss.

If this be done, then an unjust favoritism is granted, by which he reaps large gains not only at the expense of other shippers who pay his freight charges in the payment of their own unequal charges, but also at the expense of the laborer and producer from whom the preferred shipper buys, whether it be the product of the farm, the factory, mill, or the shop, for the price of all such products is fixed in part by the cost of shipment to a given point. Transportation charges are always considered in establishing the prices of commodities. Then we have the preferred shipper buying flour at $5.50 per barrel, the market price at the place of production, and shipping it to another point, the freight rate on which is 50 cents, regular schedule rate. This makes the barrel of flour worth $6 per barrel at place of delivery.

Now the farmer must pay labor and raise wheat at a price fixed after considering the cost of flour per barrel and cost of shipment to the given point. These fix the price of his bushel of wheat, and the price of his wheat fixes the price he pays for labor. Now if the preferred shipper only pays 25 cents per barrel by a secret contract for shipment to the given point when the regular schedule rate is 50 cents, clearly he derives 25 cents from the wheat-raiser, the laborer, and the flour-maker. It enables him to reap large gains from the laborer and producer in other useful industries for which he gives no equivalent, and it is an injustice that can not be defended. It enables him to continue a prosperous business, while other shippers feeding him all the while are not able to do so well, thereby injuring the growth of competitive industry.

In this instance the railroad company and the preferred shipper are doing a wrong to the producer and to the public by enabling the shipper to obtain money that he has no right to get. It is money obtained by a false pretense to all concerned that he pays the schedule rate, when in truth he does not; but through this secret arrangement he unjustly obtains the money of others without rendering unto them any equivalent. I do not hesitate to say that this conduct ought to be called a crime, and that a just penalty should be fixed for it. I know it is claimed that railroad property is individual and private property and that the owner has a right to use it in a way that best suits him; but that claim is no longer well founded, for the courts have declared railroads public ways so far as commerce and transportation are concerned, and their management in this respect is not only individual but for the best interest and safety of the public.

It is asserted here that rebates are proper and that railroad companies have a right to make them. Why, this is the same thing as the secret agreement in effect. The understanding in such cases is that the shipper shall pay the schedule rate, and upon production of his receipt for payment of it at the main or special office he shall have a certain amount refunded. Why is this done? To deceive other shippers? To deceive the public? It is the same false pretense and favoritism. Transportation charges over public ways is the same thing as a tax on all articles transported. Why tax one man more than another engaged in the same business? It would be no worse for the taxing power in any State to tax one man more than it taxes another, or that the tax-collector should collect the fixed rate of tax on a certain individual's property and afterward refund to him half of it on the ground that he was a big tax-payer and influential citizen. The act is so unfair and unequal as to become unconscionable, and I would make it a crime and declare a penalty.

There are instances of freight carriage that appeal strongly for rebates, and in such cases the law ought to permit the facts to come out fully before the court or jury hearing the case, and if it is found to be fair and reasonable it should be a good defense under the law. I would like to see section 8 of the substitute amended so as to allow the facts to come out, and let the court or jury determine whether they constitute a defense to the case or not.

I come now to the other question of pooling.

Pooling contracts between divers competing lines of railroads are made to cut off all competition in the hauling of freight. It does not benefit the people or the patrons of the roads; it does benefit the railroad companies, because the pooling contract establishes and maintains certain charges wholly fixed by the parties to the pooling contract. It is wholly one-sided in its execution and effect. Shippers and other patrons of the roads are not consulted at all; their interest is not considered in these contracts. The producer has no voice in making the pooling contract. It does prevent honest competition in freight hauling. I know it is claimed that competing lines can not survive without pooling contracts, that is, the strongest line will destroy the others, but that the pooling contract protects all the lines.

I think it does protect all the lines from reasonable competition, but I deny that competition would destroy any rival line of railroad. It would have the effect to reduce freights to reasonable rates, and it can not be presumed that any competing line of railroad would mark down freight charges below the reasonable limit to destroy adversary lines, as no profit could result from such methods to any line of road. I see no reason why the people, the shipper, and other patrons of railroads should be deprived of the benefits of honorable competition in railroad freights by pooling and combinations. One of the blessings of every trade is competition. Anything done to prevent competition establishes monopoly, and with it comes the cast-iron grip upon the earnings of honest industry. Pooling is a combination of railroad corporations to equally get the most from the farmer, the mechanic, the laborer. It is an agreement not to injure the chances of one another to get unjust money from all other people.

Why talk here persuasively and softly of this wrong? Are you afraid these railroad companies will take revenge upon you for combating their wrongs upon the public? Are you afraid of these corporations? They are in the hands of the people of this country, and their wrongs ought to be remedied by law just the same as other wrongs are remedied. Talk to me about turning on light to wipe out rascality and wrong! Why, since the Christian era light has been turned on every phase of wrong known to human annals, and is it wiped out by the extra light? Not at all. You may turn light on murder, rapine, and arson until the whole world knows how it is done, and they will not abate one jot or tittle. What does the evil spirit care for the light of exposure? That is no punishment and no preventive at all. Positive law, with penalties, is the only remedy.

It is urged in this discussion that it is right to charge more for a short haul of freight on same line of road than for a long haul. Well, that is elasticity indeed.

Is it right, is it fair, is it honest to charge the same amount for hauling freight fifty miles as for three hundred miles? The haul of fifty miles is only one-sixth of the cost of steam, wear and tear, and time for the 300 miles. Why do they do this? Oh, they say there is river or lake competition in the long haul and none in the short haul. Ah! is that it? Then where there is competition they must come down to what? Destructive rates? Not at all. What then? Down to what the carriage of goods or produce can be done for. They say that is a loss to them. Who knows? Where is the proof? I want no bald assertions.

It is known that railroads have destroyed good river traffic and canal traffic. What destroyed the Wabash and Erie Canal? The railroads. Here the water traffic could not be done as cheaply as it could be done on the railroads. Greater speed and convenience of handling freight is on the side of the railroads. Take the statement as true that long hauls must be made at less figures than short ones, still is it right? If competition makes the long haul unprofitable, which is never true, is it right to double up the rate on the short haul where there is no competition? Is it right to overload the people and shippers of intermediate points on the road with high charges to make up the loss on long hauls of which other people and other shippers get the benefit?

Is that the beneficent system of railroading? Carry out the parallel, and, if necessary, the long haul must be made for nominal rates; but we will make the people in the back towns smart for it. They have no competing roads, and we will just make them sweat under the doubled-up rates in order that we may make big profits in railroading, though we will haul through freight for nominal rates. Do you call this system beneficent? Do you call it right? I do not. It is a wrong that the people will not much longer endure.

It is contended that every time a railroad runs through a hill, over a mountain, or across a stream, that the local shippers must pay rates in proportion to the extra cost of the road by reason of these contingencies, while the through shipper shall go free of charge for these causes. Well, that is real elasticity indeed. That is called masterly. It certainly is ridiculous, to say the least of it. Does not the through shipper get the benefit of the whole road, with all the hills it cuts, with all the mountains it tunnels, and with all the streams it crosses? Is he not benefited when he ships over the entire road the same as the shipper over part of it? Certainly he is. Then why charge him half what you charge the local shipper? The answer is only because it can be done without regard to justice, right, or reason. It is a matter of pure force and not of right. It is the old saying, that might makes right. I have no prejudice against railroads or their legitimate business; I am for them; but I say to them, do right with all people and there will be no complaint. [Applause.]

Mr. REAGAN. Before any other gentleman proceeds to address the House I desire there should be an understanding about what was agreed upon some time ago. I supposed I had got unanimous consent to proceed with the further consideration of this bill to-morrow. I have been told by some gentlemen that that was not understood. I desire now to know whether I had unanimous consent to go on in the morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not state to the House that part of the request which the gentleman from Texas says he submitted and which the Chair failed to hear, a request for unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of this bill to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I dislike to appear to antagonize in any way this bill, the importance of which I fully realize, by insisting on the Private Calendar to-morrow. But I think we should proceed to-morrow to the consideration of the Private Calendar. If thus early in the session we can not reach that Calendar there is no hope of reaching it at all. My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] suggests that I should not insist on the consideration of the Private Calendar to-morrow if it placed this bill in jeopardy. But the bill can be completed on Saturday, while we can not go on with the Private Calendar on Saturday. I am as much for the consideration of this bill as any one, but I think it can be disposed of this week without interfering with the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I ask that the understanding heretofore come to as for to-morrow shall be the understanding for to-morrow or the first day the matter shall be considered, if that day be Saturday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the request made by the gentleman from Texas, except that part in relation to the consideration of the bill to-morrow, has already been agreed to by the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I want it understood it is agreed that after voting on these amendments we proceed under the five-minute rule to consider that one of these bills which shall have the preference.

The SPEAKER. That was part of the understanding.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That is the understanding of what shall be done when the bill next comes up.

Mr. REAGAN. If no one desires to continue the debate this evening I shall move that the House do now adjourn.

NEW YORK CANALS.

Pending the question on the motion to adjourn,

Mr. HISCOCK, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 298) to appoint a committee to investigate the capacity of the canals of the State of New York, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. The joint resolution is as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That a joint committee of eight members of the next Congress be appointed, to consist of five Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of this House, and three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

Said committee shall confer with a committee of like power appointed by the Legislature of the State of New York and with the Governor and other State officers of said State, in regard to the maintenance of the canals thereof, and ascertain if said canals are sufficient for the requirements of interstate commerce or if they should be enlarged, and the cost of such enlargement.

And said committee shall ascertain upon what terms and conditions the United States can acquire the title to and jurisdiction of said canals, or of any of them.

Said committee is authorized to appoint one of its members chairman, and may hold its meetings at such times and places as it may appoint in the State of New York or the city of Washington, and to take testimony, and employ a clerk, who shall be a stenographer. The expenses of said committee shall be paid from the contingent funds of the two Houses of Congress, to be disbursed therefrom upon the order of the chairman of the committee and of two other members, one of whom shall be a Representative and the other a Senator; and said committee shall report in writing to the next Congress.

ADDITIONAL COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution authorizing the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to employ an additional clerk; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

FEES OF PENSION CLAIM AGENTS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I also submit a resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to furnish certain information relating to fees of claim agents in pension cases. This is a report from the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to the House the number of contracts providing for the payment of fees of $25 in pension cases to claim agents under the act approved July 4, 1884, which have been filed in the Pension Office, and whether any of such contracts cover claims on file prior to the passage of said act; and also how many, if any, of such claims for fees have been allowed and paid, and if any fees so paid are for claims so filed prior to the passage of said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KEIFER. That, I think, would take so much time that it would be necessary to provide a new corps of clerks.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, I am assured that this information can be very easily furnished.

Mr. KEIFER. I will not object.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOSES M. BANE.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7677) to reimburse Moses M. Bane, receiver of public moneys at Salt Lake City, for rent paid by him; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL POLAR EXPEDITION.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to submit for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives, if not inconsistent with the public service, the report of the international polar expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska, by Lieut. D. H. Ray, United States Army, for the years 1881, 1882, and 1883.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to reserve the right to object until we learn the reason for offering this resolution.

Mr. THOMAS. I will make a very brief statement. There were two expeditions organized at the same time, the Greely and the Ray expeditions, one to go up on the Atlantic side and the other on the Pacific. Lieutenant Ray, having charge of the Pacific expedition, discharged his duties, remaining in the Polar region at Point Barrow, the most northern point of Alaska, for two years, made the most accurate and exhaustive examination and observations, returned with all his men in good shape, and has prepared the most magnificent report of his observations in that section of the world. Under the law the Secretary of War has no authority to have this document printed; and we desire to call for it, simply for the purpose of bringing it to this House that it may be printed for the use of members and of the scientific world.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is this resolution reported by a committee?

Mr. THOMAS. It is not; it does not require any report.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let it be considered by a committee.

Mr. THOMAS. It is all right. The report is all ready to be transmitted here as soon as it may be called for. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the resolution?

Mr. MCMILLIN. My judgment is that this matter ought to be considered by a committee. I have no objection to the introduction of the resolution for that purpose. If it is right the committee can soon report.

Mr. THOMAS. The report is all ready to be transmitted. The adoption of the resolution involves no expense at all. I hope no objection will be made.

The SPEAKER. Unless the objection be withdrawn the resolution will have to go to a committee.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Do I understand that this report has already been printed?

Mr. THOMAS. It is all ready to be transmitted to the House. The adoption of this resolution will involve no expense at all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is it not proposed to have the report printed by this House?

Mr. THOMAS. That is a matter to be determined hereafter when the report comes in—not now.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the object is simply to get the report before the House I have no objection to the resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. THOMAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The later motion was agreed to.

EDWARD S. KEARNEY.

Mr. GEORGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7678) for the relief of Edward S. Kearney; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL AID TO EDUCATION.

Mr. LONG, by unanimous consent, presented the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Education, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

BOSTON, December 6, 1884.

DEAR SIR: At a convention of superintendents of public schools held at Boston, November 21, 1884, it was voted that the president forward to each member of Congress from this Commonwealth the following resolution adopted by the convention:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention of superintendents that the Senate bill for national aid to education should become law by action of the present Congress."

Very respectfully, yours,

E. C. CARRIGAN, President.

To Hon. JOHN D. LONG, Washington.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. 101) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

LABORERS IN CLERK'S DOCUMENT-ROOM.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am requested to submit, for reference to the Committee on Accounts, the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Clerk of the House be empowered, and is hereby authorized, to continue in the service of the House the two laborers in the Clerk's document-room authorized under resolution of June 13, 1884, to arrange, sack, and ship the reserved calf-bound and special-bound documents belonging to members and to arrange the files; the said laborers to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the same rate heretofore named, under the supervision of the Committee on Accounts.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

PRINTING OF EXECUTIVE DOCUMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks that an order be made for the printing of certain executive documents heretofore referred to the Committee on Appropriations without any order to print.

There being no objection, the following executive communications heretofore laid before the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations were severally ordered to be printed:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplementary estimates of the Interior Department for appropriations for the Indian service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886;

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Comptroller of the Currency correcting his former estimates for expenses of the national currency, and submitting an additional estimate of $110,000 for the expense of engraving, printing, and furnishing national-bank notes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886;

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, asking an immediate appropriation for the removal and storage of material at the Government Printing Office, as provided for by joint resolution of February 6, 1883;

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, with inclosures, relating to estimate of appropriation for printing revised laws of Wyoming Territory; and

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of the Navy of the appropriation required to pay owners of the steamer Druid for damages sustained by collision with United States steamer Powhatan.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

POSTMASTERS' CLAIMS FOR LOSSES BY FIRE, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Postmaster-General, transmitting, as requested by act of March 17, 1882, lists of claims allowed and disallowed for losses by postmasters from fire, burglary, and other casualties; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FORBES'S HISTORICAL ART COLLECTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication; which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

NEW YORK, June 17, 1884.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to transmit the following extract from the proceedings of the meeting of the Army of the Potomac, held in Brooklyn, N. Y., June 11 and 12:

"Resolved, That this society earnestly recommend the passage of the bill now pending in Congress providing for the purchase by the Government and preservation in the Government archives of the extensive and comprehensive series of sketches and etchings of the battles and campaigns of the Army of the Potomac, known as the Forbes Historical Art Collection; and that a copy of this resolution, duly certified by our president and secretary, be transmitted to the Senate and to the House of Representatives."

Respectfully, your obedient servants,

U. S. GRANT,
President of the Army of the Potomac.
HORATIO C. KING,
Secretary of the Army of the Potomac.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF OMAHA, NEBR.

On motion of Mr. WEAVER, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 2348) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Omaha, Nebr., was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the First National Bank of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, is hereby authorized to increase its capital stock, in accordance with existing laws, to any sum not exceeding $2,000,000, notwithstanding the limit heretofore in its original articles of association, and determined by the Comptroller of the Currency; and the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to fix the limit of increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Omaha, Nebr., at the amount of $2,000,000.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WEAVER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HELL GATE.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform this House whether the amount appropriated by the act of July 5, 1884, for Hell Gate, New York, has been diverted from the purpose therein set forth.

And then, on motion of Mr. REAGAN (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Petition of citizens of Carroll County, Missouri; also of citizens of Sullivan County, Missouri, for the passage of a Mexican war pension bill and amendments—severally to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BARBOUR: Papers relating to the claim of Thomas McCardell—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition relating to the claim of J. A. Lampite—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BRAINARD: Petition of citizens of Erie County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Venango County, Pennsylvania, for the enactment of a law taxing incomes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CANNON: Petition of John S. Vesey and others; also of M. F. Davis and others, of Paris, Ill., asking for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—severally to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CASSIDY: Petition of Albert Arents, mechanical engineer, relative to the metric system of weights and measures—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. COLLINS: Petition of Elizur Wright and others, citizens of Massachusetts, for repeal of the act of July 12, 1876, known as the Comstock law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. W. W. CULBERTSON: Papers relating to the pension claim of Sarah T. Duke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. G. R. DAVIS: Petition of ex-soldiers of the war, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill as amended—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DIBRELL: Papers relating to the claim of James W. Roulston—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DUNHAM: Petition of tug and vessel owners of Chicago, favorable to House bill No. 7591—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of D. G. Britson and 100 others, citizens of Willshire, Ohio, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Petition of 500 citizens of Massachusetts; also, of 500 citizens of Massachusetts; also, of 125 citizens of Massachusetts, for the passage of the resolution introduced by Mr. HOPKINS relative to the transportation of cattle—severally to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. B. W. JONES: Papers relating to the pension claim of William N. Wiggins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of Joseph E. Vantine and 34 others, citizens of Delaware, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MAYBURY: Petition of citizens of Detroit, Mich., relative to the metric system of weights and measures—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. O'HARA: Papers relating to the claim of Furney Mercer—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. T. G. SKINNER: Papers relating to the claim of K. R. Pendleton; also, papers relating to the claim of Elisha Colbert—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. H. Y. SMITH: Petition of citizens of Adair County, Iowa, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STOCKSLAGER: Petitions of citizens of Medora, Ind.; also of citizens of Seymour, Ind., for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—to the same committee.

By Mr. VANCE: Papers relating to the claim of Andrew J. Lafter—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WARD: Petition of Henry C. Applegate and 33 others, for the relief of John Osborn—to the same committee.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Indiana, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—severally to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WEAVER: Petition of 125 citizens of Nebraska; also, of 83 citizens of Nebraska, asking for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. E. B. WINANS: Petition of Jacob S. Smith, Abram Frick, and other citizens of Otisville, Mich.; also, of Silas T. Fern, Luman Beebe, and 100 other citizens of Oxford, Mich., for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. YAPLE: Petition of A. Vanderheyden, and 130 others, citizens of Three Rivers, Mich.; of David Bacon and 69 others, and of William H. Smith and 118 others, citizens of Niles, Mich.; also, resolutions of George H. Thomas Post, No. 14, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Michigan, for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill and amendments—severally to the same committee.

The following petitions, praying for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. BEACH: Of citizens of Amity, Orange County, New York; of Rockland County, New York; of Cornwall and Newburg, N. Y.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Of Isaiah N. Merritt and 60 others, of Addison, Me.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Of 62 citizens and soldiers of Kane, McKean County, Pennsylvania; of 61 citizens and soldiers of Potter County, Pennsylvania; of 91 citizens and soldiers of the same place; and of 102 citizens and soldiers of McKean County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Of citizens of Somerset, Pa.

By Mr. CARLETON: Of citizens of Peck and New Baltimore, Mich.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Of E. D. Heald and 50 others, of Buckfield, Me., and of P. P. Getchell and 200 others, of Lewiston, Me.

By Mr. EATON: Of John Girard and others, of New Britain, Conn.

By Mr. GREENLEAF: Of citizens of Medina, N. Y., and of Medina, Rochester, &c., N. Y.

By Mr. HART: Of John Landon and 125 others, Union soldiers of Ohio.

By Mr. HATCH: Of citizens of Knox and Scotland Counties, Missouri.

By Mr. HAYNES: Of Samuel Walker and 54 others, of Suncook, N. H., and of Charles A. Barrett and 161 others.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Of Julius C. Burgoyne and 64 Union soldiers and citizens of Franklin County, Indiana.

By Mr. HISCOCK: Of citizens of Virgil and other places in New York.

By Mr. HITT: Of 63 soldiers and citizens of East Dubuque.

By Mr. B. W. JONES: Of citizens of Wisconsin.

By Mr. JORDAN: Of citizens of Cadiz, Ohio.

By Mr. KEIFER: Of E. Sherrett and 139 others, soldiers of the late war.

By Mr. LACEY: Of M. D. Reed and 246 citizens of Barry County, Michigan.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: Of citizens of Beaver County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. MORRISON: Of citizens of Du Bois, and of 70 citizens of Ashley, Ill.

By Mr. MOULTON: Of 500 citizens of Illinois, and 500 citizens of Nilwood, Ill.

By Mr. MUTCHLER: Of citizens of Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. NUTTING: Of citizens of Cazenovia, N. Y.

By Mr. POLAND: Of William A. Chamberlain and others, of Stockbridge, Vt., and of F. H. Atherton and 300 others, of Waterbury, Vt.

By Mr. PARKER: Of citizens of Saint Lawrence County, New York.

By Mr. PAIGE: Of George L. Boult and others, of Medina, Ohio, and of Thomas F. Wright and others, of Cleveland, Ohio.

By Mr. PHELPS: Of citizens of Passaic County, New Jersey.

By Mr. NELSON: Of citizens of Melrose and Utica, Minn.

By Mr. REED: Of citizens of Maine.

By Mr. RIGGS: Of A. C. Morris and others; of William Elick and others; of William F. Connor and others; of J. C. Weiser and others; of E. L. H. Barry and others, and of S. H. Lambert and others.

By Mr. W. F. ROGERS: Of citizens of Springville, Erie County, New York.

By Mr. SENEY: Of James Berrington and 100 others, of Crawford County; of B. A. Thomas and 84 others, of Rushville; of George S. Meyer and 31 others, of Wyandot County; and of W. P. Wilson and 120 others, of Hancock County, all in Ohio.

By Mr. C. R. SKINNER: Of 85 citizens of Black River, N. Y.

By Mr. A. HERR SMITH: Of citizens of city and county of Lancaster, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. STEELE: Of Nathan Erhman and 50 others, of Adams County, Indiana; of John Coughlin and 100 others, of La Gro, Ind.; of John W. Miller and 75 others, of Dunkirk, Ind.; of F. N. Kellogg and 90 others, of Bluffton, Ind.; of Thomas E. Ream and 50 others, of Peru, Ind.; and of Alfred O. Briggs and 60 others, of Monroeville, Ind.

By Mr. STRUBLE: Of Charles Isbell and 18 others, of Sioux Rapids, Iowa.

By Mr. WILKINS: Of Franklin Myers and 42 others, of Licking County, Ohio.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: Of B. J. Davis and 61 others, citizens of West Virginia.

By Mr. VANCE: Of sundry citizens of Macon County, North Carolina.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 12, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has been formally invited to attend the opening ceremonies of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition to be inaugurated at New Orleans on Tuesday, December 16, 1884; and

Whereas the exigencies of the public service prevent their attendance on said day; and

Whereas the President of the United States has decided to open said exposition by telegraph and to start the machinery thereof by electricity from the Executive Mansion in the presence of his Cabinet and the representatives of foreign powers; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States entertains for said exposition the best wishes and desires to lend to its success its countenance and good-will: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring herein), That the President of the Senate, together with a committee of thirteen Senators, to be appointed by him, and the Speaker of the House, together with one Representative or Delegate from each State and Territory of the Union, to be selected by him, be requested to attend at the Executive Mansion on Tuesday, the 16th instant, at 12.30 p. m., to witness on behalf of the Congress of the United States the opening of said exposition by the President, and to adopt and forward thereto such address of congratulation as may seem appropriate to the occasion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. I move its adoption.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVILEGED QUESTION.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a privileged question. I am directed by the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay to call the attention of the House to some matters which appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The matter referred to is contained in the Appendix to the RECORD, page 494, volume 15, part 6, but which appeared first in the issue of the RECORD bearing date August 1, the last session having ended on the 7th of July. In order to bring the matter directly before the House I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the following preamble and resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Hon. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR, of Ohio, on the 5th day of July, 1884—the House being in session, and having under consideration the Mexican pension bill with Senate amendments—having obtained the floor, occupied the time of the House for six minutes in remarks upon said bill; and

Whereas on the 7th day of July said JOSEPH D. TAYLOR obtained leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD; and

Whereas instead of extending his remarks under said leave, said JOSEPH D. TAYLOR did, after the adjournment of Congress, have printed in a copy of the RECORD, bearing date of issue August 1, 1884, a written speech, or paper, not embracing his remarks in the House, but containing sentences and paragraphs reflecting upon members of the House in their representative capacity, upon committees of the House, and upon the House itself, and referring to and reporting, or purporting to report, the action of, and occurrences in, one of the committees of the Senate—all in violation of the implied obligation in his leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and in violation of the privileges and rules of the House: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the parts of said speech reflecting upon members of the House, or of any committee of the House, or on the House itself, or relating to what took place in any committee of the Senate, are unparliamentary and an abuse of the privileges of the House and of his leave to print, and are hereby declared not to be a legitimate part of the official debates of the House.

The parts of said speech more especially referred to are as follows (see page 494, Appendix to CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 15, part 6):

"We are asked why these amendments are not presented in a separate bill, when this House knows very well that numerous bills embracing every line of these amendments have been introduced, and were introduced at the opening of the session, and seven months have elapsed, and yet these bills in which the soldiers of this country, and in which the patriotic people of this country are deeply interested have been suppressed."

Again, same page:

"These bills have been throttled and a hearing denied. Democratic committees do not deign to consider such bills, nor do they dare to report against them."

Also, on page 495, referring to members collectively:

"There are people who would do well to talk less and think more. There is a great deal of ignorance among gentlemen who would like to be called statesmen in regard to the policy and organism of our Government."

On the same page is the following reference to a Senate committee and the action of the Senate:

"The Committee on Pensions in the Senate was composed of nine Senators, five of whom were Republicans and four were Democrats. For a long time Senator SABIN, of Minnesota, was absent, and this left the Pension Committee four and four. The RECORD will show the absence of Senator SABIN, and the further facts that during his absence pension bills were reported adversely by the Democratic subcommittees, and that no progress was made in passing pension bills. This hitch in pension legislation was removed by the resignation of Senator SABIN, who was still absent, and the appointment of Senator WILSON, of Iowa, in his place on the Pension Committee, since which time every pension bill that could be reached, including those reported upon adversely by Democratic members, has been passed by the Senate. The Senate has not only passed these bills, but it spent several weeks in maturing the bill now before this House, which provides not only for Union soldiers, their widows and orphans, but for Mexican soldiers and their dependents as well."

On the same page is the following arraignment of a committee of the House:

"He is the chairman of the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, to which was referred the most important legislation of this session touching the soldiers and their dependents; and I regret to say that this committee has proved the graveyard of all this important legislation. It never reported but one bill, and this was so objectionable to soldiers that the Senate gave it no consideration.

"Early in the session I introduced a bill granting arrears of pensions, which went to this committee. Governor HART's bill granting pensions to all soldiers who had rendered a certain amount of service and who had arrived at a certain age, and scores of others of like character, were sent to this committee for consideration; but they have all slept the sleep that knows no waking. It seems to have been determined from the opening of this session to this hour that no bill in the interest of the Union soldiers should become a law, and that this end should be accomplished not by open and frank opposition, but by stealth and cowardice."

And on page 496 is the following denunciation of the House itself:

"While I denounce the attitude of this House toward these measures as an outrage upon justice"—

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask now to send to the Clerk's desk and have read——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order, or rather to a parliamentary inquiry. Is this a question of privilege or is it being offered by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he rises to a question of privilege. Of course the Chair has yet to decide whether it is or not.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will hear the further paper read.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is a question of privilege.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will hear the further paper read, reserving the right to raise the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the right of any member to raise the question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will send to the Clerk's desk the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] made when he had the floor on the 5th of July last, as furnished from the notes of the reporter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The letter read at the instance of the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] claims that great injustice is done to the Mexican soldiers in the bill now before the House. As I understand, there is no objection on the part of anybody on the other side of the House because of the favorable quality of the pending bill. I want to say to the other side, and to the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, that there are two marked differences in this bill between the provisions made for the Mexican soldier and those made for the Union soldier. In the first section of the bill it provides that a Mexican soldier shall receive a pension prior to the time when he becomes 62 years of age, if he had incurred a disability or if he is in a dependent situation. The words are coupled in the alternative.

In either event, in either contingency, the Mexican soldier draws a pension. But when you turn over to the section in regard to the Union soldier, you will find the very reverse is true. You will find the Union soldier must not only have incurred a disability, but he must also be in dependent circumstances. Both of these qualities must exist. The disability must have been incurred, and the dependency must be shown. Either one entitles the Mexican soldier to a pension, while it requires both of these concurrently to entitle a Union soldier to a pension.

That is not all; there is another marked difference. No Union soldier receives a service pension, although the contrary has been stated. When a Mexican soldier arrives at 62 he receives a pension; his name is placed on the pension-roll without either of these conditions being required.

It seems to have been presumed all the way through in this discussion that these Senate amendments provided for the Union soldier a service pension. That is not true; there is no service pension, as I understand it. When, where, and under what circumstances do you find any such provision? There is nothing of the kind, and yet the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] claimed at great length last night that he was opposed to these amendments, because he was opposed to service pensions.

This is true and no more; a soldier who is shown to have incurred a disability receives a pension. And why? Because he shows disability to exist, and this law only presumes—it gives the soldier the benefit of a legal presumption if he has a disability which could have been reasonably incurred in the service, so that he shall not be required to prove what he is now required to prove. This kind of proof is dispensed with. It is high time it was. He is not required to show that he was sound before he entered the service. I have seen pension claims rejected where I have seen the letters in which the claimants were called upon to show by their family physician they were in sound health and free from disease before they entered the service. Another is rejected because he failed to show he was sound at the time of enlistment. The presumption of law elsewhere in the courts is that no soldier is admitted anywhere into the Union Army without careful examination by some representative of the Government, and commonly he is now in all the States of the Union presumed to have done his duty and done it faithfully. That kind of testimony is dispensed with.

Hundreds of soldiers have been denied pensions because they failed to show hospital treatment, when perhaps the surgeon did not have the capacity to get a record, where records have been burned and destroyed. Yet I know hundreds of claims have been rejected because the soldier was not shown to have been in hospital and failed to show hospital treatment. Others failed because they failed to show treatment during the time they were in service, which sometimes becomes impossible. Other claims are rejected because they fail to prove the existence of disease or disability at the time of discharge. So that it is only a waiver of legal presumption, and these are not service pensions at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I simply make the point, without stopping to discuss it, this is not a matter of privilege under the ninth rule of the House. It is not such as affects the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only.

It contains, as well as I can remember, a historical sketch of the course of national legislation in this House, and relates merely to what may be seen by reference to the RECORD. It animadverts, and I think properly, upon the conduct of the committees in reporting for action bills which have been referred to them by the House. If this is an attack upon the dignity of the House there is not a page of the RECORD which does not contain similar ones, and if the gentleman from Ohio is liable to censure, I think that the rule if applied would subject to like censure almost every gentleman of this body.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will allow the Chair to suggest that that is not the question the Chair is called upon to decide. That matter has passed beyond the province of the Chair. The gentleman from Ohio in this resolution asks for the judgment and action of the House itself as to whether or not this publication in the RECORD is a violation of the rules. The question the Chair has to decide is whether the gentleman has the right as a matter of privilege to ask the judgment of the House on a matter affecting the official record of its debates.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no question, I presume, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Ohio has a perfect right at this time or at any other time to present a question of privilege to the House; but must not the Chair now determine whether the paper as read from the desk presents such a question, and is not my raising the question of order equivalent to a demurrer to the complaint by raising the question of its sufficiency, and upon which the Chair must pass?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair, without deciding the question at this time either one way or the other, that the point made by the gentleman from Indiana has nothing whatever to do with the question of order as to whether or not the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio in the RECORD presents a question of the infraction of the privileges of the House. The question, and the only question, for the Chair to determine is whether it is not sufficient when a member rises in his place on the floor and suggests that certain things have been done in violation of the rules of the House and asks the judgment of the House upon the statement he makes—whether it is not the duty of the Chair to submit that question to the House for its determination.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. With that ruling of the Chair——

Mr. REED. I will submit to the Chair that it is very necessary, in order to ascertain whether the privileges of the House have been invaded or not by the gentleman from Ohio, to have the whole of the speech of the gentleman from Ohio read.

The SPEAKER. That may be.

Mr. REED. For it would seem as if the speech, a portion of which has been read, should be submitted to the House as a whole, in order that it may judge from the context for itself as to whether a question of privilege is presented. And I suppose the gentleman from Ohio has that in mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I did not understand the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the House is in a condition now to discuss the question of privilege, and I move, therefore, that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana may make a motion to refer a resolution to the Committee on Rules, but the Chair will suggest that that could only be done with the assent of the gentleman from Ohio on the right, who still holds the floor. The gentleman from Indiana had an undoubted right to raise the question of order and take the gentleman from Ohio off the floor for that purpose; but the right to do that would not give him the privilege of making a motion in reference to the matter without the consent of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not consent. I have taken the floor on a question of privilege and I must decline to yield for such a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana can submit his motion at a proper time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I understand, then, the Chair to rule substantially that the question must be passed on by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. If the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. TAYLOR, for instance, whose remarks are complained of, was on the floor addressing the House, any gentleman, although he might be speaking in entire accordance with the rules of the House, would have the right to rise to a question of privilege, and make a point of order that his remarks were not in order under the rules of the House, and the gentleman would be required to suspend until the matter had been passed upon by the Chair.

The difference between the two cases is simply this, that now the matter to which reference is made has passed beyond the control of the Chair, because it has gone into the official record of the debates of the House over which the Chair has no control, but over which the House has itself complete control.

The Chair thinks that although the complaint made by the gentleman from Ohio might prove to be entirely without foundation, yet it is his privilege to present the matter to the House, his right to call the attention of the House to it as a matter of privilege; and the Chair must submit the question to the House for its action under all the practice and rulings heretofore.

Mr. KEIFER. This is one point to which I think the attention of the Chair should be called in this connection in order that there may be a ruling upon that also. The gentleman from Ohio, in presenting his resolution in the first place, did not propose to present it as coming from himself, but stated that he was instructed by a committee of the House to present it. I therefore make the point of order that this subject never was before the committee, and consequently could not be presented, under any instructions or directions to its chairman, to the House as coming from the committee. If it is presented at all, it must be presented by the gentleman from Ohio as his own act, he assuming the responsibility for all the frivolousness that may be in it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Ohio as having presented this as the report of the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from Ohio so stated. If I am wrong in my understanding he can correct me.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I stated that I was advised by the committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, to call the attention of this House to the matter. The question was before the committee, and by the unanimous vote of more than a quorum the chairman of the committee was instructed to call the attention of the House to the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not receive it as the report of the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought so.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I submit it, as I have said, in obedience to the instruction of the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. And I make the point of order that in such shape the gentleman can not do it. He must do it on his own personal responsibility, if at all.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think I am entitled to have all the advice that the committee chooses to give me on the subject.

The SPEAKER. This subject has not been referred to the committee; and the committee, under the rules of the House, has no general jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It can not therefore be received by the House as the report of the committee. Of course the gentleman from Ohio has the right to state the circumstances under which he presents it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have already said that it is by the concurrence of the committee that I do present it.

Mr. REED. It seems to me the gentleman from Ohio has no right to present this matter as coming from the committee to which he belongs, nor from himself as acting under the orders of this committee. It must be an individual proceeding or a committee proceeding. If it is a committee proceeding it is out of order. The Chair has decided that if it is an individual proceeding it is in order; and I submit to the Chair that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] must take his stand upon his individuality as a member of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I take all the responsibility that may be necessary. It is no objection that I have also behind me the expression of the committee of which I am chairman.

It will be seen by the notes of the reporter which have been read at the desk that no part of the remarks made on the 5th day of July by the gentleman from Ohio is contained in this speech or purported speech in the RECORD, and that no part of what is now contained in the RECORD was delivered in the House on the 5th day of July, when the gentleman had the floor. The RECORD shows that on the 5th day of July Mr. TAYLOR had three minutes' time and that three minutes more were given him. That appears in the RECORD of July 5, page 6140. The RECORD of July 7, page 6174, contains this entry:

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR asked and obtained unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks made by him on the Mexican war pension bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not complain that Mr. TAYLOR printed a speech in the RECORD, or that he printed what he did not deliver in the House. That is not the question. What I complain of is that after the adjournment of Congress he printed in the RECORD a speech containing charges not true in themselves, arraigning a committee of the House, arraigning members of the House, relating what took place in a committee of the Senate, and arraigning and denouncing the House itself. If those parts of his speech had been delivered in the House they could and most certainly would have been objected to. They would certainly have been contradicted. But not having been delivered, the gentleman going instead to the Printing Office a week after Congress had adjourned and printing in the RECORD what nobody then could question and containing charges against members affecting them in their representative capacity—that is what I complain of; and my committee, Mr. Speaker, is not willing to rest under this charge.

This speech, as it now stands in the RECORD, appears on its face to have been delivered on the 5th day of July in the presence of the House and of that committee without contradiction. I have eliminated, designedly, all reference made to myself personally in the speech referred to, so that the personal element should not be the prominent one or the motive for calling the attention of the House to the speech.

The speech contains also in many other parts things that are not true; but the part that the House is asked to declare not to be a legitimate part of the official debates of the House contains this paragraph:

He is the chairman—

Referring to myself—

of the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, to which was referred the most important legislation of this session touching the soldiers and their dependents; and I regret to say that this committee has proved the graveyard of all this important legislation.

Now it is easy enough, and gentlemen on the other side may clap one who does it, to go to the Printing Office after Congress has adjourned and insert such a statement as that in the RECORD. But honorable gentlemen will hardly approve it or claim that it is consistent with the dignity of a member of the House if it be not true.

It—

Referring to the committee—

never reported but one bill, and this was so objectionable that the Senate gave it no consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what are the facts? Besides the one bill which the gentleman referred to, a bill which I had the honor to report, and which passed this House and which is now pending in the Senate, my colleague on the committee, Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, reported a bill, which will be found on page 3236 of the RECORD, relating to the fees of claim agents, the substance of which bill was ingrafted on the pension appropriation bill and is now the law. Next, my colleague on the committee, Mr. GREENLEAF, reported a bill, House bill 6930, report No. 1516, containing four sections—one increasing the pensions of widows and minor children, one increasing the pensions of dependent parents, another continuing the pension of a soldier to his widow without requiring proof that he died from disability incurred in the service.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. It is, that the only question before the House is whether or not the paper sent to the desk contains a question of privilege; whether the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], in the speech which he put in the RECORD, has attacked the House in its dignity or some member individually. It does not raise the question of fact as to whether he stated certain things that were, in the judgment of the House, not in fact so. That is not the question. If we are to make an inquiry into the facts here alleged let them go to a committee and be investigated in a regular way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question before the House is whether or not the particular passages in this publication referred to in the resolution are or are not a violation of the privileges of the House. The Chair thinks the question whether or not the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] in his remarks stated the facts correctly or drew conclusions from the facts is not before the House. It is simply the question whether or not the particular passages, as printed in the RECORD and indicated in the resolution, are in violation of the rules and privileges of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And is not the fact whether the thing be true or not a part of the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman's resolution to refer to any part of the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] which undertakes to state facts.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. My resolution deals with the part proposed to be stricken out; I am simply showing that what the gentleman from Ohio there printed is not true in fact.

Mr. REED. Is that a ground for striking it out of the RECORD?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That ought to have been alleged with a scienter, a declaration that he knew it was untrue. That is the rule in criminal proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon further examination of the resolution that it contains an extract from the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR], stating that the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back-Pay never reported but one bill, and this was so objectionable to the soldiers that the Senate gave it no consideration. Of course it is a question for the House to determine whether this is or is not a violation of its privileges—not a question for the Chair.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am proceeding to show that that statement is not true, but that the committee reported various public bills——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The point I make——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And the records of the House show that it is not true.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it might not be true, and yet be no violation of the privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair is not deciding that anything which has been alleged here was done in violation of the privileges of the House. That is not now a question for the Chair to decide. It is one, on the contrary, which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] asks the House to decide; and he proposes to discuss it, as the Chair understands, and to show the House that it was a violation of its privileges.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The bill referred to, reported by Mr. GREENLEAF, contained also a provision modifying the arrears act and removing the limitation in certain cases. My colleague on the committee Mr. WHITING, as shown by the RECORD, page 2174, reported a general bill for the relief of the Fourth Iowa Regiment. My colleague on the committee, Mr. CONNOLLY, of Pennsylvania, reported two bills, one for the relief of West Virginia troops, in which my friend from West Virginia is interested, and also a bill granting pensions to female nurses who acted as such during the war. There were a number of private bills also reported; and it is furthermore a fact that there were no bills referred by this House to that committee that did not receive attention, that were not assigned to subcommittees, that did not receive consideration before the committee. Two of the bills to which I have referred were bills reported in lieu of various bills referred to that committee.

Another error in the part of the RECORD referred to is the statement that certain gentlemen introduced bills and referred them to that committee, while the RECORD shows that no such bills were ever referred to the committee, but were referred to other committees of the House. Governor HART, of Ohio, was among the number thus mentioned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not make any comment upon the conduct of the gentleman from Ohio in waiting till Congress had adjourned and then laying aside the speech he had made, which contained nothing objectionable to anybody, and going to the Printing Office and inserting a speech arraigning a committee of the House and arraigning members of the House, and containing matter which the records of the House show not to be true. I shall confine myself to a statement of facts, unless something more is called out, and leave the question of correcting the records with the House.

Before taking my seat, however, I will read from Cushing's Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies the rule respecting the reading of speeches in the houses of Parliament. In section 1553 this rule is laid down:

> It is a general rule in both houses that a member in addressing the house is to do it orally and not by means of a written discourse, for the reason, as stated by Mr. Fox, that if the practice of reading written speeches should prevail, members might read speeches that were written by other people, and the time of the house be taken up in considering the arguments of persons who were not deserving of their attention.

Much greater is the danger, Mr. Speaker (if members may be permitted to go to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD office after Congress adjourns and print speeches arraigning the House, or a committee, or the members of the House), that we might have published as part of our proceedings the production of other people to which we are not bound to pay any attention.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will request gentlemen on the floor and in the rear of the seats to stop conversation. It is impossible to hear what is transpiring.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Whether the publication to which I have referred should be allowed to remain as a part of the official debates of the House when the records show that it was no part of the official debates at all, is a question of course which the House must decide. I desire to refer especially to certain parts of the language used. In one of the paragraphs which is objected to this language occurs:

> And yet those bills in which the soldiers of this country and in which the patriotic people of this country are so deeply interested have been suppressed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I make the inquiry whether the gentleman may now refer to a part of the speech not embodied in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may read the whole speech, if he so desires, in his own time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. He wants to get it out of the RECORD, and yet he is putting it in again himself!

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the gentleman himself to determine.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman from Indiana is overnice. I was reading from a part of the speech which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. REED. We ought to have the whole speech.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. "These bills in which the soldiers of this country and in which the patriotic people of this country are deeply interested have been suppressed." That relates, I suppose, to the House. "These bills have been throttled and a hearing denied. Democratic committees do not deign to consider such bills nor do they dare to report against them."

Now, I suppose, Mr. Speaker, it took extraordinary courage to go to the Printing Office and insert that "objections of this kind are futile and groundless. In fact they are a mere pretense"—accusing the House or members of pretending merely. "There are people who would do well to talk less and think more. There is a great deal of ignorance among gentlemen who would like to be called statesmen in regard to the policy and organism of our policy." And my colleague goes to the Printing Office and undertakes to instruct them after Congress has adjourned. They ought to be thankful, perhaps, for that.

In regard to the reference made in the speech to the action of a committee of the Senate, it is well known that under parliamentary law a member of one House can not refer at all to what takes place in a committee of another House, even for the purpose of commending, much less of passing criticism on it or its action. The reason for that is given in the Manual:

> It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there, because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses. (8 Grey, 22.)

That is clearly unparliamentary, and the gentleman would not have spoken it in the House. That he would not have been permitted to speak it is clear enough, I think. He would have been called to order if he had said any such thing.

But especial exception is taken to the following language, applied to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, a committee composed of five Democrats and four Republicans, and as conscientious Republicans I think as the gentleman from Ohio can claim to be. I do not know that I am paying my colleagues on the committee a very high compliment, but I will let it pass:

> It seems to have been determined from the opening of this session to this hour that no bill in the interest of the Union soldiers should become a law, and that this end should be accomplished not by open and frank opposition but by stealth and cowardice.

What is the meaning of stealth and cowardice in that connection? Would the gentleman have used that language on the floor of this House and applied it to any committee or to any member of the House? It is quite another thing to go to the Printing Office, and from the safe ambush of that office send out a poisoned arrow like that weeks after Congress had adjourned. Do gentlemen on the other side of the House think that is in accordance with parliamentary usage; that that ought to stand in the RECORD, under the circumstances under which it was placed there, as a legitimate part of the official debates of the House? Will you put yourselves on record as indorsing language of that kind to be inserted in the RECORD in the manner in which this language was inserted, charging the committee virtually with theft and cowardice? If this, then, is not a privileged question, if it does not affect members in their representative capacity, I do not know what would. If it does not affect the honor and integrity of a committee of this House I do not know what could.

I said I should refrain from commenting—indeed I could not comment fitly—on conduct of that kind. I shall leave it to rest on the bare statement of the facts, that no part of this speech was delivered in the House, but that this arraignment of committees and members was inserted in the RECORD after Congress had adjourned and members had left the capital, and when there was no possible chance of calling the attention of the House to it until the succeeding session in the manner in which I have brought it up now.

I should have moved, Mr. Speaker, to expunge these parts from the RECORD, to strike them out, but under the advantage which was taken of inserting them in the RECORD during the recess of Congress the speech has become bound in all the copies and can not be expunged or stricken out. The only thing which can be done is to declare it unparliamentary, out of order, in violation of the rules of the House, an abuse of the leave to print, as it manifestly is, and let that go upon the record. The committee I represent is not willing to let such an arraignment go unchallenged, to be quoted by somebody in the future who would not know as well as this House does who inserted the speech in the RECORD.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will yield to me.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I had no notice that anything of this kind was to be presented to this House to-day until yesterday during the session of the House. I have been furnished with no copy of this resolution. I said to the gentleman who informed me about it that I would like to have until the middle of next week for the purpose of getting some papers I desired, but he afterward informed me that the gentleman from Ohio declined to consent to a postponement of it; hence I am required to answer these charges without much time for preparation.

As I understand, Mr. Speaker, this question comes now to the House for its consideration. Perhaps it is only fair the House should know the circumstances which probably influenced the presentation of this resolution. The present Legislature of Ohio some time during last spring redistricted the State and threw the gentleman from Ohio and myself into the same district. We were both renominated and were candidates for the same office at the October election.

Mr. COSGROVE. Who was elected? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. Never mind; go on in your own way.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have abundant charity, and I trust the House will have for the motives which actuated the presentation of this resolution. I was taken from a Republican district, which usually gave a Republican majority of 2,000, and placed in the gentleman's district, which was supposed to be an impregnable Democratic district of not less than 1,500 majority. The present governor of Ohio had a majority in the five counties which compose this new district a year ago of 1,492. The secretary of state who was elected this year was the Democratic candidate two years ago and had a majority in these same counties of 1,509.

A MEMBER. Defeated this year, you mean.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Yes, I should say defeated this year. So you can see that the Democratic majority in this new district was at least 1,500, and yet the gentleman from Ohio only claims to be elected, in that impregnable Democratic district—a claim which is much doubted by the people there, but he is said to be counted in [derisive laughter on the Democratic side]—by a majority of 217. I carried my own ward. I carried my own ward, town, township, and county by the largest majority ever given to any Representative. I carried the gentleman's ward, town, township, and county. I carried four of the counties out of the five which compose the district by a Republican majority of more than 2,000, the aggregate majority being between 2,100 and 2,200. I gained, over the vote of last year, in these four counties 1,558 votes. The gentleman from Ohio got his entire majority in the county of Monroe, 2,337.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Good for Monroe. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The gentleman says, "Good for Monroe;" but yet the gentleman does not say that he ran 67 votes behind the head of the Democratic ticket even in Monroe. His majority was 67 less than the majority of the Democratic candidate for secretary of state.

Mr. REED. Good for Monroe. [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Good for soap. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It does not become the gentleman to talk about soap when the chairman of the Democratic committee of my county is to-day under indictment for buying votes which were cast for the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Soap. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The gentleman says, Mr. Speaker, "Good for Monroe!" I wish to say to this House, if the gentleman had not carried on his campaign in Monroe on the hypothesis that he had voted for Mr. RANDALL for Speaker he would not have carried Monroe. [Laughter and applause.] I would like to have read the gentleman's letter, and also an extract from the Democratic newspaper of that county.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us hear the letter.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It is going to be read.

HON. W. N. COWDEN'S LETTER.

QUAKER CITY, OHIO, September 19, 1884.

DEAR SIR: I have been appointed by the Ohio wool-growers' convention to ask your views for publication on the tariff on imported wool, and particularly an answer to the following question: Will you, if elected to Congress, support by voice and vote a bill for the restoration of the tariff of 1867, or its equivalent, on wool?

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

W. N. COWDEN.

Gen. A. J. WARNER, Marietta, Ohio.

GENERAL WARNER'S REPLY.

BELLAIRE, OHIO, September 25, 1884.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 19th, directed to me at Marietta, has just reached me at Bellaire.

In reply to your question as the representative of the Wool-growers' Association, I beg to say that my views on the tariff question, which have been outspoken both in and out of Congress, are, I think, pretty well known. My votes, too, in Congress on the tariff question generally and in favor of restoring the duty on wool are of record, and I think in every case my speeches and my votes will be found in accord.

I supported Mr. RANDALL for Speaker of the House because his views were in accordance with mine, and I voted against the Morrison bill for the reasons which I stated at the time on the floor of the House.

I may be permitted to add, that as a member of the committee on resolutions at the Democratic State convention of last year I presented the resolution denouncing the reduction of the tariff on wool as detrimental to the interests of wool-growers and unjust to the great agricultural class of the country. This resolution expressed my own convictions at the time, and I have seen no reason to change them, and of course I deem it my duty to act and vote in accordance with them in the future as I have in the past.

Very truly, yours,

A. J. WARNER.

Hon. W. N. COWDEN, Quaker City, Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Now laugh. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask to have read an extract from a Democratic paper published in Monroe County commenting on that, and insisting that the accusation that he had voted for CARLISLE for Speaker was false.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that matters which transpired since the adjournment of Congress have any connection with the question before the House.

Mr. REED. It is a question for the House, and the House may see its bearing.

The SPEAKER. It is for the Chair to decide questions of order in the first instance, subject to an appeal to the House.

Mr. REED. It is a part of the gentleman's argument showing why the matters proposed to be stricken out should not be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not have interrupted the gentleman from Ohio had not the gentleman from Texas raised the point of order. [Cries of "Read!"]

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Clerk will proceed to read the extract.

Mr. REAGAN. I object. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. REAGAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the gentleman from Ohio is not confining himself to the question under debate.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object.

Mr. REAGAN. I do object in the interest of the public business.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But, Mr. Speaker, the reading of the article demanded by the gentleman from Ohio will show and can only show whether it is in order or not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed, in order, to address himself to the question before the House.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I now ask the Clerk to read the extract from the paper which I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Ohio has already said that this paper contains a publication made during the campaign, and after the speech to which objection is made had been incorporated into the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, please permit me to remind the Chair that when the gentleman from Ohio began and asked the reading of the letters which have already been read, two of them, one from the other gentleman from Ohio, he announced also that he purposed to have this paper read, and if any objection was to have been made it should have been made at that particular time and when the subject was first introduced. But having been entered upon and the reading of the letters having taken place without objection he certainly should be permitted to have the remainder of the article read.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman who makes the objection now upon the floor did not know to what subject these letters related.

Mr. REED. But he should have made his objection as soon as they were read.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman has the right to make an objection when the gentleman addressing the House is not proceeding in order to address himself to the question before the House. Of course the Chair does not know the contents of the paper about to be read, except from the statement of the gentleman himself that it is a publication from a newspaper which appeared during the canvass preceding the late election. The Chair does not see how that can bear upon the publication of these remarks in the RECORD. However, the Chair will allow this to be read so that the House may see what it is. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Bellaire Tribune of the 10th instant says that General A. J. WARNER voted for a free-trade organization in the House, by which all the committees were given to the free-traders.

The truth is, General WARNER voted for SAMUEL J. RANDALL for Speaker, and opposed Mr. CARLISLE, who is a free-trader, throughout the contest.

Colonel Poorman, in all fairness, should make the correction. He knows that RANDALL is not a free-trader now, and, further, that he never was.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The House does not understand what paper that is. It is taken from the Bellaire Tribune, a Republican paper.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, the word "is," as applied to the term "free-trader" in that article, is italicized. That extract is read from the Spirit of Democracy, the only Democratic paper published in that county, and I was branded for slander throughout that county because I represented in that district that the gentleman from Ohio had voted for Mr. CARLISLE for Speaker, and thereby contributed to the organization of a free-trade Ways and Means Committee. I made that statement, and because I had said that he had voted for Mr. CARLISLE I was branded throughout the district for slander, as this Democratic newspaper brands the Bellaire Tribune with slander for having published that the gentleman from Ohio had voted for Mr. CARLISLE.

On the eve of the election I found myself compelled to send here to Washington to obtain 5,000 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I was only able to distribute in certain portions of the district, in proof of the fact which I had stated, and which had been denied by the Democratic papers throughout the district.

I have the most profound respect for the Speaker of this House. I have spoken of him in the warmest and highest terms on all occasions, and I have also the most profound respect for the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, of whom I have also spoken in the highest terms. I can understand a man who does not believe in protection and I can understand a man who does believe in protection, but I can not understand a man who is a trimmer, a go-between—neither one thing nor the other. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to come more directly to the point in issue. I think it would have been only fair and just that these remarks of mine in regard to which some question is now raised should have been read by the Clerk for the information of the House. No gentleman can understand this speech from the disconnected and garbled sentences read as a part of the resolution.

The gentleman stated correctly that I occupied on the 5th day of July six minutes in debate, and that on the 7th day of July I obtained by consent of the House a general leave to extend my remarks. These remarks were printed in this RECORD, covering almost two pages and three-quarters of it. I never attached very much importance to it. I never had the matter printed in pamphlet form for distribution, and never thought of distributing it throughout the district as a campaign document until there was some question raised about it in the district by the gentleman from Ohio. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that when this speech is read all together and consecutively, when it is taken as a whole, it will be found to state the facts in the case, and it will be found that every line and every paragraph is directed toward the chairman of the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay and his committee, over whom he dominates. I want to disclaim any intention of making reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. There are one or two sentences here which, when read alone, are doubtless wide enough to embrace that committee, but when the paragraphs are taken together it will be found that they are inapplicable.

If you will observe, the bills to which I make reference, all the bills that I enumerate and in regard to which I complain, are the bills that were referred to the committee of which the gentleman from Ohio is chairman. I said all over my district, and I am happy to say here and now, that no committee in this Congress or any other Congress, in my judgment, did more faithful, efficient, or earnest work than did the Committee on Invalid Pensions, from the top of that committee to the bottom. They sat here day and night and passed bills, two hundred of which became laws, and passed many of them over the head of the gentleman from Ohio, who was here night after night interposing obstacles and objections to bill after bill.

Now, the committee to which reference was made in these remarks never did report but two bills that were intended to be general acts. Sixty-eight bills were introduced in this House, introduced by Democrats and Republicans, all of which were referred to that committee; and there never came from that committee a single report, yea or nay, in regard to any one of these important bills to which I have made reference. They reported three local bills, the one in relation to the Fourth Iowa Infantry, the one in relation to the West Virginia State troops, and one in reference to female nurses. Those are local in their character and were not embraced within the scope of my remarks. One or two other similar bills were reported adversely.

Now, I want to know, Mr. Speaker, if that does not come very near establishing the fact that that committee was the graveyard of all this important legislation? These sixty-eight bills went to that committee and there they were "throttled," because they never came back. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that while the reports began to pour in early in the last session from the other various committees of this House, and were placed upon the Calendar, which very soon became a large volume, no report of any kind came from this committee until the 11th day of April. All the preceding months were suffered to pass away and no report came from this committee until the day I have just mentioned, and that was a bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio and put upon its passage on the 21st day of April, and was passed under a suspension of the rules and sent to the Senate.

I want to know, Mr. Speaker, whether it took four or five months for the chairman of that committee or for that committee to ascertain whether a soldier applying to this great Government for a pension must be denied his claim because he can not prove that he was sound when he entered the service? For that was the only feature in that bill that does not deserve the condemnation of this House. I know the gentleman may say the second section in that bill had some merit in it. The second section of that bill provided——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have not the least desire in the world to limit the gentleman; but really is this to be a discussion of the Mexican pension bill on its merits? Is that the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] is endeavoring to show that the statement he made was correct and that it was not unparliamentary.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not insist upon the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The second section of the bill to which I have referred, bill No. 6535, provides that——

In considering the claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, &c., having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such dependent parent or parents is without present means of support.

That is the language of the bill—"without present means of support." If the pension examiner shall find an aged decrepit father or mother who has as much as a crumb of bread and a cup of cold water, he will hold that this is a "present means of support," and that such claimants are not entitled to the benefit of this act. The Senate amendment to the Mexican pension bill provides that these dependent parents shall be pensioned if they are "without other means of comfortable support"—a marked difference between any support and comfortable support.

There is another bill which came from that committee. I said there were two general acts that came from that committee. The second was reported by Mr. GREENLEAF on the 7th day of May. Five or six months had passed away before this report was made. Hundreds and thousands of soldiers were waiting with anxious hearts the results of the investigations which were supposed to be going on in that committee, and yet it took five or six months to report this bill of four sections only. It took five or six months for that committee to find out that a widow whose dead husband was sleeping somewhere in an unmarked grave should receive $12 a month instead of $8. It took them five or six months to make that discovery.

It took them five or six months to make another discovery which embraced another section—that a dependent parent who now receives $8 a month should receive $12 a month. It took five or six months to find out that when a pensioner dies the same pension which supported him and his wife and children while he was living shall go directly to his widow and children after his death without the widow and orphans being required as now to prove that the husband and father died from a disability incurred in the service.

It took five or six months to find out one other thing covered by that bill; that is, that a soldier who received a wound in the service from which he subsequently became totally disabled should be entitled to receive a pension from the time of his discharge or from the time of his total disability.

These are substantially the provisions of the bill reported on the 7th day of May. Now, my remarks in regard to there having been but one bill reported were intended to mean that but one bill was ever reported for the purpose of having it become a law. In my judgment this subsequent bill that came from the committee on the 7th of May was purely an afterthought; and you will come to the same conclusion if you will read the remarks made on the day when the Warner bill passed this House by a two-thirds vote under a suspension of the rules; you will find by a reference to those remarks that this bill which was passed on the 21st day of April was the ultimatum of that committee in the judgment of its chairman. In his own remarks he declares that the committee went as far in the preparation of that bill as public sentiment would justify; that there were some people who desired to go further, and that there were others who did not desire to go so far; that they had endeavored to report a bill which would meet the public sentiment and do justice to all, and that this bill went as far as they felt authorized to go, and in their judgment it would be found to take the place of numerous bills now before their committee.

I challenge the gentleman to show that in that discussion, when gentlemen offered to make amendments and were shut off by the chairman and were prevented—I challenge the gentleman to show where in the remarks of any member of that committee there was made any allusion to the fact that that committee ever intended to report any other bill on that subject. The amendments then proposed would have naturally called out such fact if there had then existed any such intention, but all the remarks then made show that this Warner bill was supposed to meet the present demand in pension legislation.

Perhaps I should make a single remark in regard to the first section of the Warner bill, as I have commented on the other two. The first section of that bill made it odious to the soldiers of this country. From one end of the land to the other there came up one universal protest from the soldiers of this country against that bill, because it compelled every claimant for a pension, before he could avail himself of the provisions of this bill, before he could be relieved from making proof of prior soundness, to elect whether he would prosecute his claim under this law or the general law, and he is required to file this election that he would take only under this bill; and this election is made final.

An election was required, and it was made final; while in the Mexican war pension bill, as amended by the Senate, while the claimant is required to make an election for the time being, that election is not required to be final. After a claimant has made his proof under the Senate amendment and has obtained his pension, and after he has been drawing his pension for years, if he discovers the necessary proof, or if less proof is required by new legislation, he can abandon this pension, and go back and perfect his old claim and obtain a pension under the general law, thereby obtaining his arrears of pension, which he could not obtain under this law. So it is now when a special act is passed pensioning a claimant. If in the future he shall perfect his old claim, he can abandon the benefit of the special act, get credit for the money received, and obtain his pension from the General Government under the general pension laws of the country and obtain all the arrears allowed by the general law.

In speaking a moment ago in regard to the Greenleaf bill, I said I did not believe it was expected that it should ever become a law, for the reason that it was never put on its passage. The Mexican pension bill and the Warner bill had both been passed on suspension days. Why was not this bill put on its passage on suspension day? The gentleman from Ohio was chairman of the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay. He might have asked this House that a day be set apart for the consideration of the many bills that were referred to his committee. Other committees asked one day, two days, and sometimes three days, and the request was granted. The Committee on Territories, of which I am a member, asked this House for two days and the request was granted, and those two days were occupied in the passage of bills which came from that committee. That request was made by the chairman of the committee, and it was granted as a matter of course. I have never known such a request as that, in my short experience, to be resisted.

Why was not some effort made to put this second bill on its passage? None was made; no question of consideration was ever made; no day was asked to be set apart for its consideration. This bill went upon the Calendar behind one hundred and twenty other bills of a general character then on the Calendar, and it never went there until five or six months of the session had expired, and then it embraced very few of the provisions for which the soldiers of the country had been so long and so earnestly pleading.

The bill reported by the gentleman from Ohio embraced the Indian wars, the Florida war, the Black Hawk war, and the Mexican war, although this House had previously passed a bill granting pensions to all the Mexican soldiers.

You see my objections to the Warner bill and you see why I made this statement, every word of which is true, that the bill never commanded the respect of the Senate or received its consideration. And this is the reason why the soldiers of the country denominated it a fraud and a cheat, as was done throughout the country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit whether there was not good ground for this complaint. There were other reports of this committee—elaborate reports. The gentleman from Ohio can talk long and loud; but in all that long session of seven months the only report that he ever wrote or made was a report of three lines. He gave the soldiers of this country only three lines of his writing and of his report. This is the extent to which he pleaded the cause of the Union soldiers of this country, their widows and dependent relatives.

We were asked by the Grand Army of the Republic to enact another provision. We were asked to adopt a provision continuing pensions to the children of dead soldiers in cases where these children who had drawn pensions until they were 16 years of age, were blind, idiotic, or imbecile; but no report in favor of any such measure ever came from that committee. The soldiers of this country were asking another provision. They were asking that dependent parents should not, as now, be required to prove first that they had nothing at the hour of their son's death. If they are to-day without a farthing, without a roof to shelter their heads, without food or raiment, they are not asked, "What are your needs now; what are your wants at this hour?" but they are compelled to prove that their necessities existed at the hour of the death of their only son, who sleeps to-day in a soldier's grave. No such provisions came. I might go on and refer to others. The cry of the soldier was unheeded by this gentleman and by his committee. It was further asked to have a provision dispensing with proof that the dead son intended to support his aged and helpless parents; that, too, was denied.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order to show that I am not mistaken in regard to this, I will ask to send up and have read three letters which were written by three of the members of the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic—three men who were in Washington last winter, who were before that committee, who talked with its chairman, who were sent here to represent the soldiers of this country, who came here with a memorial which they laid upon the desk of every member of Congress. I want this House to hear what these witnesses say in regard to the conduct of this committee, or rather in regard to the conduct of the chairman of this committee. These letters will establish the truth of the remarks called in question.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I object to printing these letters in the RECORD as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was occupied at the time and did not hear what it was the gentleman asked to have read.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to establish the truth of my statement by having read to the House letters written by a committee of the Grand Army of the Republic who were here last winter, representing the soldiers of the country, sent here by the Grand Army of the Republic to secure pension legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects unless they are read as a part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. And I object to them then even as irrelevant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman further objects to them as irrelevant to the subject under debate.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. They are to prove what I have said and sustain my statements in regard to this committee.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. It is stated by the gentleman from Ohio that these letters have been written since the adjournment of last Congress. They can therefore have no bearing at all upon the issues presented by this resolution of the gentleman from Ohio on my left, and I therefore object to that part of it as being irrelevant to the subject under discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to the letters being read on the ground that they are not pertinent to the question under discussion. The Chair does not know whether they are or not until he hears them read.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. It is in regard to the question of fact which the gentleman from Ohio has raised. I will compromise, however, and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The only question before the House is whether or not the several extracts made from his remarks, or any of them, were printed in the official records of the House in violation of the rules of the House and in violation of the leave given to the gentleman from Ohio. The Chair is unable to see how any letters which may have been written by persons outside since that record was made up can have any bearing on that question. It is not a question what gentlemen elsewhere may think about these matters, but merely whether the rules of the House and the privilege extended to the gentleman from Ohio have been violated. It is a pure question of parliamentary law for the House to decide.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Now, Mr. Speaker, the next question I wish to call the attention of the House to is whether I have violated the rules and the practice of the House in regard to the remarks I have printed in the RECORD. I will ask the Clerk to read a short transcript I have here showing the proceedings in the House during the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh, and the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what they are, but the gentleman states they are from the official record of the House, which he desires to have read to show he has not violated the rules of the House.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. It can not be possible the records of the House of the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses can have any bearing on a matter charged against the gentleman of having violated the rules of the House in the Forty-eighth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may not think it is a good reason, but the House and the gentleman may think otherwise.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It may show the uniform practice of the House and in other Congresses on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. And that is a question addressed to the House itself.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. What question?

The SPEAKER. The question whether the gentleman has violated the rules of the House is addressed to the House, and he proposes to show what has been done heretofore in Congress under like circumstances in support of his position.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I do not think the Chair caught the remark of the gentleman from Ohio. I understood he proposes to present a synopsis touching this character of legislation in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses.

The SPEAKER. And that thereby a practice or custom may have been established.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I trust the gentleman from Arkansas will permit me to go on.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I only wish the gentleman to proceed in order.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. This does not come out of my time?

The SPEAKER. The time consumed by questions of order do not come out of the gentleman's time, of course.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask now the reading of the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk, which is from the foreman of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the Government Printing Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request of this date, I have the honor to hand you herewith a statement from Mr. Aven Pearson, foreman of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in regard to the number of "leaves to print" and those "withheld for revision" in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses, as shown by the records in his office. I have examined and compared the statement with the RECORD, and find the same to be correct.

Very respectfully, yours,

S. P. ROUNDS, Public Printer.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
OFFICE OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your direction to examine the book kept in this office showing the names of members of Congress who made speeches which they withheld for revision, and of those who obtained leave of the House to print in the RECORD speeches which had not been delivered in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses, and report the number to you, I have the honor to say that I have made a careful examination, and find the following:

Forty-fifth Congress:
Speeches withheld for revision 240
Leaves to print 247

Forty-sixth Congress:
Speeches withheld for revision 303
Of this number Hon. A. J. WARNER had two.
Leaves to print 90
Of this number Hon. A. J. WARNER had one.

Forty-seventh Congress:
Speeches withheld for revision 382
Leaves to print 156

Forty-eighth Congress:
Speeches withheld for revision 258
Of this number Hon. A. J. WARNER had two.
Leaves to print 76

It will be understood that "leaves to print" are speeches which are not spoken in the House, and "speeches withheld for revision" have been—in part at least. Sometimes a member of the House delivers a portion of a speech and asks leave to print the remainder.

In these four Congresses over twenty general leaves to print were given on different bills, on which any member of the House had the right to have remarks printed in the RECORD.

On May 3, 1879, Hon. A. J. WARNER delivered a speech in the House which was printed in the RECORD May 8.

On January 18, 1881, he had leave to print remarks on the funding bill, which were printed on the 27th of the same month.

On February 15, 1881, he spoke on the river and harbor bill. The speech was printed on the 17th of March.

On April 1, 1884, he delivered a speech on the trade-dollar, which was printed on the 15th.

On April 30, 1884, he delivered a speech on the tariff, which was printed on the 4th of May.

Four of these speeches were withheld by him for revision, and were set up from the manuscript returned by him.

Very respectfully,

AVEN PEARSON,
Foreman Congressional Record.

Hon. S. P. ROUNDS,
Public Printer.

During the reading of the above paper the following proceedings took place:

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I object, Mr. Speaker, to the further reading. What has this to do with the question presented to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know what use the gentleman proposes to make of it. The resolution offered by the gentleman himself recites, among other things, the fact that the leave of the House was granted to Mr. TAYLOR to print on a certain day, and the remarks were not printed until about the 1st of August—some time afterward. Perhaps the gentleman may desire to show that it is the practice to print speeches some time after the leave is given. The Chair, of course, does not know the purpose for which it is presented; but the gentleman is using it as an argument, the Chair presumes, to show that he has not violated the privileges of the House.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the paper as above.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. You see from that transcript furnished me by the Public Printer what the uniform practice has been in this regard—to print speeches which were never made and to print speeches no part of which was ever spoken upon this floor. Back in the Forty-sixth Congress you will find by reference to page 1350 of the RECORD of the second session of that Congress that Mr. Hazleton had the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] arraigned before the House for having suppressed from the RECORD offensive words which he had uttered in debate, and Mr. Hazleton then said that this was the custom of the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. WARNER said then and there in defense of his action that he had done in changing the RECORD only what everybody had done—followed the uniform practice and custom of all members of Congress in that respect.

Besides that, I hold in my hand another certificate from the Public Printer—from the foreman of the RECORD—showing that the gentleman had made a speech in the first session of this Congress on the trade-dollar, and that it made eighty-three pages of manuscript, and that he rewrote eighty-two pages of manuscript for the Public Printer, and that they set up in the office from his own manuscript eighty-two pages of the eighty-three. The eighty-third page, and the only page not rewritten, had on it only twelve words of his original speech, and he changed one of them. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I will read the letter:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., August 28, 1884.

SIR: I have carefully examined the manuscript of a speech made by Hon. A. J. WARNER in the House of Representatives on the 1st of April, 1884, and find that only one page of the reporter's manuscript has been furnished to this office, and that the whole speech, consisting of eighty-three pages, has been rewritten by General WARNER, and that we printed the speech from the manuscript made by him, with the exception of this one page, on which is found these words:

"The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

"Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I shall ask consent to elaborate my remarks in the RECORD.

"There was no objection."

Very respectfully,

AVEN PEARSON,
Foreman of Congressional Record.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

But that is not all. I hold another certificate from the Public Printer, showing that in his remarks on the Mexican war pension bill he followed his remarks to the Printing Office, and there in his own handwriting attached to his remarks, which were only two or three minutes in length, new paragraphs, struck out over forty lines and inserted fifty lines, changing and reversing the meaning. This shows that his remarks as printed in the RECORD were never uttered upon the floor of the House. The manuscript shows that he falsified the RECORD by changing his remarks and giving them a different meaning, and there is the manuscript; you can send for it and it will prove itself. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

This letter or certificate reads as follows:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., August 25, 1884.

DEAR SIR: I have examined the manuscript of a speech made by Hon. A. J. WARNER in the House of Representatives on July 2, 1884, on the Mexican pension bill, and find that the words "The other amendments I am in favor of, as they embrace substantially what I have indorsed and what the House has already in part passed upon" are not in the handwriting of the reporters, but were added by Mr. WARNER in his revision of his remarks. In his revision he added about fifty lines and struck out over forty lines; in one place striking out the words "these amendments" and inserting "this amendment."

Very respectfully,

AVEN PEARSON,
Foreman of Record.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR,
Cambridge, Ohio.

That was done without any permission of the House. Further, the gentleman made a speech here on the tariff, and he revised that most thoroughly before it went into the RECORD, inserting additional pages and paragraphs and striking out pages and paragraphs. But when he came to print it in pamphlet form he was not content with the RECORD speech. Oh, no! He made another edition. He made another revision when he printed the speech in pamphlet form. I hold it in my hand now, and if you will compare it with the speech in the RECORD you will find that he made one hundred and thirty-eight changes in it—[laughter on the Republican side]; compare them for yourself—between his speech in the RECORD once revised and that sent out in pamphlet form. And then, besides that, he printed it in a job office—in Polkinhorn's job office—and sent it out under his own frank in violation of the statutes of this country. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to have read an authority upon this subject. I submitted this speech, as printed in this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to Hon. Edward McPherson, for fourteen years Clerk and for many years a member of this House, and perhaps the ablest parliamentarian in this country, and I ask to have read some extracts from his letter addressed to me, in which he said that upon examination there was nothing whatever in these remarks contrary to parliamentary law or the rules of this House. I am speaking now of my speech which has been called in question. In my letter I asked this question:

Please examine my printed remarks in the RECORD of August 1 and see whether you discover anything in them not authorized by the rules and practice of the House.

I will ask the Clerk to read the following extracts from his letter in answer to the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is the ordinary practice in the House for members to ask and the House to grant leave to print remarks not delivered. It is also not unusual for members, having outlined their arguments in the few minutes snatched for debate, to ask and get permission to extend their remarks and print them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as if delivered as printed. This practice grows out of the necessities of our parliamentary life, &c.

I had occasion recently to examine the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the proceedings of an evening session devoted to debate on the Morrison tariff bill, and found that seventeen speeches purport to have been delivered in the four hours devoted to the sitting. Not one of these speeches was delivered in full as printed, and of some no portion was delivered.

I have no doubt that at least two hundred speeches will appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the last session which were not actually delivered in full in the House.

I find further that you are especially fortified in your right to print in the circumstance that at the sitting of July 7 you asked and obtained unanimous consent to extend the remarks made by you on the Mexican war pension bill. This gave you ample authority to prepare and print a discussion of the pension bill, the Senate amendments thereto, and all proceedings of the House connected with that subject.

COX's speech, "Salt in politics," page 165, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 8, was never delivered, nor any part of it, in the House, but was a reprint of his fourth of July speech before the Tammany Society of New York.

The rules prescribe no limit as to the right of the member to revise his speech after he has spoken five, ten, twenty, or more minutes.

Third. I have examined with considerable care your speech printed in the RECORD of the 1st of August, and do not think there is anything in it which violates the rules or practice of the House.

* * * * * * *

A criticism, parliamentary in terms, of the action of any portion of the House or any member of the House is always permissible, whether in the absence or presence of the person affected. If this were otherwise all that would be necessary for a member who desired to avoid criticism on his public acts would be to absent himself from the sittings until the opportunity for making the criticism had passed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. And the House will remember that at the last session the distinguished gentleman from New York, than whom perhaps there is no higher authority on this floor, a gentleman who has occupied a seat here for twenty years—in that session when the bonded-whisky bill was under discussion, made a few remarks and then printed a speech upon the tariff. And yet nothing was said about it.

Have you forgotten the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], made at the last session, in which he said that the record of the Republican party was reeking with corruption; that it was destitute of all political virtue; that it had a damnable record; charged it with opening the vaults of the Treasury to the wickedest rings and thieves that ever cursed a free land? Charges of fraud and perjury and forgery dropped from his tongue like the oil from Aaron's beard, and all that was done about it was at the close of his remarks the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] arose and asked to have the gentleman's time extended. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Why, sir, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD] called the other side of this House a herd of political eunuchs, without manhood and virility, and you laughed at it and seemed to think it very funny. The mildest man in this House, and a man for whom I have great respect—the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]—in a discussion last year used the word "outrages" when he was charging home on the Republican party its alleged vile record during the last fifteen years.

Mr. Speaker, I have been learning here from day to day the practice of this House. I have learned it from this side and from that side. I have read it in the RECORD and in the newspapers of the country. I want to know now if I am to be catechised or arraigned here because I happen to be speaking for the soldiers of this country.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to have five minutes more allowed me. I have been interrupted so that very much of my time has been consumed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed five minutes longer. Is there objection?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I object.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, rose.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the Chair will recognize me I will be glad to yield a portion of my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The objection to the gentleman from Ohio proceeding is withdrawn. He is entitled to five minutes more.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I want to print in the RECORD a letter from the Public Printer explaining that it was by accident my speech was printed as late as August 1, and taking on himself the entire responsibility for the delay and exonerating me from any blame in the matter.

The following is the letter of the Public Printer:

OFFICE OF PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., August 22, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry in regard to the facts as to the publication of your speech on the Mexican war pensions, I find from the RECORD that a portion of it was delivered on the 5th of last July, and leave to print extended remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was unanimously given by the House on July 7, and that you furnished this office the copy on the 11th of July. Inasmuch as there were several other speeches by different members, for which leave to print had been given, the copy for which had not then been furnished this office, I ordered the last number of the RECORD to be withheld until the 1st of August, in order to get as many of them as possible. Your speech will be found on page 7063, number 167 of the RECORD of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress; and although the RECORD was withheld until that date, there were several other speeches for which leave to print had been granted that were not printed in that number of the RECORD.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, yours,

S. P. ROUNDS, Public Printer.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Cambridge, Ohio.

I want to say here and now that if gentlemen will read this speech from beginning to end, if they will take the whole speech and construe it as the old law books say we must do to construe a will, take it up by the four corners, which simply means to take it altogether, they will find no trouble in discovering its meaning or in discovering the truth of its allegations.

The charge of cowardice is referable to the members of the other side who persistently sat in their seats and refused to vote, when this was the only way to defeat the Senate amendments to the Mexican pension bill. Examine the RECORD if you would know how often this was done.

I have exonorated myself from the accusations that have been made. I have kept within what I understood to be the rules of this House. And I want to say to gentlemen that it is a matter of no great moment to me what disposition is made of this resolution. We all have some individual pride, of course. I am not like the gentleman from Ohio. I have the honor of representing now the district in which I was born and in which I have always lived, while he has been migrating from State to State, and from party to party, at his own pleasure.

I want to say in conclusion that anything that this House may do will be as nothing against me. The speech for which I am arraigned here was in behalf of the Union soldiers of this country, and if I am arraigned they are arraigned. If I have erred at all I have erred in a good cause. I have been, during my service in this House, pleading the cause of the Union soldiers, and it has been my endeavor to show that the pension laws of this country should be made more liberal; that there should not be so many widows and orphan children in this country hungry and destitute; that children of soldiers who died that this nation might live should not "be left to the organized charities of the State," as will be the case with thousands of them if this legislation is not secured, and yet your great Treasury is overflowing with money. I will say to you that for whatever vote you may cast in regard to this resolution, for whatever you may do, you will answer not to me, nor to this House, but you will answer to the soldiers of your districts if you represent districts in which there are Union soldiers.

I am willing that this question with this explanation be submitted to the intelligent judgment of this House, and in regard to it I shall make no further defense or explanation. I yield now to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] has expired.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask to be recognized in my own right.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the resolution or in favor of it?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to submit a motion in connection with it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] reserved thirty-five minutes of his time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But is not his occupying that time dependent on his being recognized by the Chair, and can he occupy it if other gentlemen desire to be recognized?

The SPEAKER. It is the universal custom that if a gentleman reserves a portion of his time and afterward desires to speak the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have no wish to have the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] cut off. But I want to have this campaign question out of the House and before a committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] having been recognized for an hour, the other gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has now the right to occupy the remainder of his hour.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to reserve my time until other gentlemen are through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has thirty-seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to inquire how long this debate is to run.

The SPEAKER. Debate can only be stopped by ordering the previous question. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not yield my time, but reserve the balance of it to be used at the close of the discussion. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] is a member of the committee, and desires to be recognized in his own right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. To my mind this is a most remarkable exhibition. A committee of this House, composed of Democrats and Republicans alike, unanimously request their chairman to present certain charges against the gentleman from Ohio for violation of the rules of debate at the last session and to ask that these objectionable features of the debate be expunged from the RECORD. What are the issues presented? First, that the gentleman from Ohio has been guilty of a breach of the rules of the House by making charges against a committee of the House, by making charges against individual members of the House, by making charges against the House itself—in plain language, denouncing the House; by repeating in his speech the proceedings of a Senate committee; by expressing in that speech false charges against the House and the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay. With these grave charges pending against him he seems to be totally insensible of the attitude in which he is placed by this resolution; and instead of undertaking, if the charges are untrue, to establish their falsity, or, if they are true, then to apologize to the House in an honorable and manly way, he undertakes to go into a discussion of the Ohio campaign and to bring into this House records which he has obtained from the Public Printer, who, I suggest, might as well devote his time to the public service instead of answering inquiries for partisan purposes.

I say that, instead of undertaking either to establish the truth of his assertions, which the resolution charges to be untrue, or to confess his mistake as to the facts, the gentleman goes into the question of the Ohio campaign and various other matters totally irrelevant, and in no sense bearing upon the charges made against him.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to consume more than three or five minutes, and touching two of these charges only. In regard to one matter that the gentleman goes into in detail, namely, that part of his speech referring to the Senate proceedings, no one, I presume, will undertake to justify or defend his course, for the record is before this House. All that he says by way of defense bearing upon this point or upon the other matters of any importance is that if you will take the whole speech and read it you will find nothing objectionable in it. Yet, instead of undertaking to read the speech himself to the House and to explain away the objectionable features complained of, to which the attention of the House is called, he has, as I have said, devoted his attention to Ohio politics and Ohio statesmanship.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one other proposition and then I am through with this subject so far as I am concerned, for really, though a member of the Select Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, I myself do not care very much for what the gentleman has said, so far as it applies to me personally. But this is his proposition. I read his words:

He—

Alluding to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER]— is the chairman of the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back-Pay, to which was referred the most important legislation of this session, touching the soldiers and their dependents; and I regret to say that this committee has proved the graveyard of all this important legislation. It never reported but one bill, and this was so objectionable to soldiers that the Senate gave it no consideration.

Mr. Speaker, there is a statement from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] which he has not seen fit to retract. On the contrary, adding insult to injury, he substantially reiterates the charge in the presence of this House this morning.

I propose now, Mr. Speaker, to demonstrate, by a reference to the records of the proceedings of the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, that the statement which the gentleman made when he published this speech and its reiteration here this morning in the presence of this body are both untrue.

The Warner bill was reported April 11, 1884. (RECORD, volume 66, page 2876.) The bill which I reported as a substitute, under the direction of the committee, for a provision in the pension appropriation bill, and which subsequently passed this House and became a law, was reported April 16, 1884, as will be found by reference to volume 66 of the RECORD, page 3011.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That amendment, as the record shows, and I think you will admit, was considered in the Committee on Appropriations. It was so stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HANCOCK]. That amendment was added on the statement of fact that it had been recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions originally—you said so and so did the gentleman from Ohio—and the statement of the gentleman from Texas, that it had been considered in the Committee on Appropriations and was recommended by that committee.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, that is sufficient, I think, from the gentleman on that point. It is to the credit of this committee if the Appropriations Committee of this House deemed the measure of sufficient importance to give it consideration in that committee. But, sir, the fact is that long before the consideration of that amendment I, by unanimous consent, under the direction of the Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, submitted that bill, and it was printed in the RECORD for the consideration of this House. Subsequently, when the pension appropriation bill was under consideration, I offered that bill (which had been previously printed in the RECORD by unanimous consent) with some slight amendments, I think, as a substitute for certain provisions of the pension appropriation bill, and, to the credit of our committee, the Committee on Appropriations accepted it and it became a law.

Mr. Speaker, on the 12th of April, 1884 (I refer to the RECORD, volume 66, page 2902), Mr. CONNOLLY, of that committee, reported another bill. On the 7th of May, 1884 (RECORD, volume 67, page 3936), Mr. CONNOLLY reported another bill from that committee; and on June 21, 1884 (RECORD, volume 68, page 5450), he reported still another bill. On the 7th of May, 1884, Mr. GREENLEAF, of New York, a member of that committee, reported a bill to increase pensions, and for other purposes (Record, volume 67, page 3936); and on the 6th of June, 1884, Mr. GREENLEAF reported two other bills (RECORD, volume 68, page 4843). On the 22d of March, 1884, Mr. WHITING, of Massachusetts, a member of that committee, reported to this House another bill (RECORD, volume 66, page 2174). Yet in the face of the work of this committee the gentleman from Ohio says that he is substantially correct in the statement that the committee reported only one bill. He substantially reiterates that charge on the floor of the House this morning in his remarks.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will inquire if all those bills except two were not merely local and special cases.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. It makes no difference what kind of bills they were, for the gentleman says in broad terms we reported but one bill, while the RECORD shows we reported nearly a dozen bills.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. No; he has not.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. The gentleman now says he has not. Let us see again whether he has or not. I will read it again for his benefit:

He is chairman of the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, to which was referred the most important legislation of this session touching the soldiers and their dependents, and I regret to say that this committee has proved the graveyard of all this important legislation. It never reported but one bill, and this was so objectionable to soldiers that the Senate gave it no consideration.

I challenge the record for the truth of the statement I make and for the untruth of the statement he makes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that it would become the gentleman, who prides himself on his career in the State of Ohio, when these facts have been ascertained in a public body of the dignity of the American House of Representatives, to rise in his seat and confess he had been mistaken and make an apology to the House and submit willingly to the correction of the record. Brought face to face with this record, that, it seems to me, ought to be the course to be pursued by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] on the other side of the House. But, as I have said, instead of pursuing that course the gentleman has again reiterated his former statement, and he undertakes to discuss with the other gentleman from Ohio the local characteristics of the campaign in his district in Ohio. Now, I thought everybody was satisfied of one thing, namely, that if anything is settled in Ohio it is that that State is Republican and the gentleman's district Democratic. That fact, I thought, was settled in the recent election.

I may say there is one part of the gentleman's speech which I feel inclined to let remain, in view of what has taken place. It is as follows.

There are people who would do well to talk less and think more. There is a great deal of ignorance among gentlemen who would like to be called statesmen in regard to the policy and organism of our Government.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are some gentlemen on this floor who do not know so much as they think they do about what took place in the Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay during the last session of Congress. [Laughter.]

There is one other suggestion, and then I believe I am through, and I desire to emphasize the statement I am now about to make. The records show you that a number of bills went to our committee which were never specifically reported upon. I know that when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] on my left reported this bill that was discussed, and which passed the House of Representatives, he reported it in lieu of several others touching the same subject), and when he did so he so stated at that time, and it so appears in the RECORD (I do not quote the exact language, but it does appear that this bill was reported in lieu of the other bills on that subject); in other words, it was the crystallized opinion of that committee as to what legislation ought to take place on the subject covered by it. And the same thing is true about the bill reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREENLEAF], although I discover by an examination of the official record that it does not so appear, from the fact, no doubt, that the gentleman neglected at the time to state that fact in making his report to the House.

One other thing and I am through. When I entered as a member upon the duties of the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay I knew very little about the pension laws. I submit to my colleagues on that committee on the other side of the House—and they can speak for themselves on that subject—whether or not there was any period in the history of the work of that committee during the last session of Congress when there was anything like a political division in passing on these several measures. And I will submit another proposition, and it is whether or not at any period during the history of the work of that committee at the last session I was found wanting in any particular in the discharge of what was properly the duty of a Congressman on that committee.

Mr. Speaker, our committee was peculiarly harmonious, and these questions, when presented to the committee, had the highest consideration we could give them. We sought all sources of information, and I undertake to say here to-day no committee of this House, from the highest to the lowest, discharged its duty more industriously, more uprightly, more honorably, or with a higher sense of public duty, than that committee, of which I had the honor to be a humble member. And having said this much in vindication of the committee, feeling myself but little aggrieved so far as this thing is concerned, never having had my attention called to it until the beginning of the present session, I believe I will now yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, perhaps it had been better if this matter had not been brought before the House, but being here it is very important that we should dispose of it correctly. It is entirely immaterial who in the past has violated the privileges of the House under the leave to print. It is entirely immaterial how the election in the district of these gentlemen here was conducted or how it ended. The sole question is whether by the articles and extracts complained of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] committed a breach of the rules of the House and an infraction of its privileges.

The facts, as I understand them from himself, are these: He obtained leave to print. Afterward he was nominated as a candidate to represent that district in Congress, his competitor being Mr. WARNER, and after that nomination he printed a speech that was never made on the floor of the House, reflecting personally upon his opponent.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The gentleman is mistaken; those were not the facts.

Mr. HAMMOND. And he stated this morning in debate that he did not mean to reflect upon the committee, but the sole purpose he had in view was to reflect upon the gentleman who was his opponent in that campaign.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I presume the gentleman from Georgia wants to state the facts. The nomination was made before the Congress adjourned.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is just what I was saying, that the nomination was before Congress adjourned, and the printing was after the adjournment of Congress.

Now, the question is, when a man under the fourteenth rule of the House can not indulge in personality in debate when speaking upon the floor of the House, shall he under the privilege of delivering something he did not say in print indulge in personality when there can be no reply? I have argued the question when I have stated it; and I shall vote to expunge this matter from the official records of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman on taking the floor stated that he had not had notice that this matter would be brought up until yesterday, and that, therefore, he had not time to prepare himself. Then he proceeds to deliver one of his very familiar campaign speeches heard so often in Ohio during the last campaign.

The gentleman refers to leaves to print granted to other members of the House, among them to myself. I make no complaint and have made none against the leave to print. That is not the question involved here. That is one thing. The gentleman made no allegation that in these leaves to print, or in printing under such permission of the House, anybody had printed or had said anything untruthful or had in an improper way availed himself of that right. Nor does he state that in such leaves to print there was any violation of the rules of the House, no abuses of the privileges of the House under leave to print.

It is not, then, a question of leave to print, but a question of the abuse of that permission. It is the taking advantage of that permission to print or insert in the RECORD what the gentleman would not have said and what he would not have been permitted to say on the floor of the House. That is the charge which I have made. Any member under a leave to print, or who withholds his speech for revision—and all know that is a common practice—may revise his speech as fully as he desires. He may prepare it beforehand just as he desires to have it appear in the RECORD, every sentence of it completed as he would have it, punctuation and everything else; or he may deliver his speech and afterward revise it, putting it subsequently in the form that he would have adopted had he written it all out beforehand. But in doing so he recognizes the fact that he must abstain from personality, and has no right, under leave to print, to insert what he would not have been permitted to utter in the House. He must not insert in his speech what affects the dignity or the honor of any other member of the House.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will yield for a question.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. In the last part of your tariff speech, as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, you are talking about the Ohio platform. Now, in the last part of your pamphlet speech you will find printed the words "Great applause"——

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is a very trivial matter, like the most of the gentleman's speech, and I do not yield for a trivial piece of nonsense like that.

A member has the right to circulate his whole speech or a part of it only, if he chooses. When I had completed my tariff speech I revised it somewhat, as is the custom in the House, and in printing it in pamphlet form I left out a portion of it; and as a matter of fact it should be stated that the part I left out was a part that was delivered in open House and which related to my colleague, Mr. HURD, but not caring to give that general circulation I struck it out, out of deference to him, although it was done not at his request.

That a member has his speeches printed elsewhere than at the Government Printing Office takes from him the right to circulate them under his frank is simply nonsense. The only question is, is it a part of the matter contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? He pays for the printing of it himself, and he may print it at the Government Printing Office or print it anywhere else that he chooses; and when the gentleman charges me with having made a hundred or more alterations he misstates the fact, and I challenge him or any one else to take the speech as it appears in the RECORD, compare the two, and point them out. There is no change, except such marginal corrections of punctuation, and minor things of that kind, as you may find upon the margin of every proof-sheet of every speech that is printed at the Government Printing Office or elsewhere.

The gentleman sends to the Clerk's desk to be read the opinion of a former Clerk of this House, but that opinion bears date some time late in August. It was called for and given during the Ohio campaign. I was never aware that the author of that letter was an authority on parliamentary law or anything else but partisan politics, of which he makes, I believe, a yearly publication by collecting and publishing what purports to be the doings of the House, but which are mainly the doings of the Republican side of the House.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House back to the question, not to matters that were in the Ohio campaign. I carefully abstained from bringing anything into this discussion personal to myself or that pertained to matters between myself and my colleague. The question here is: did the gentleman abuse the privileges of this House and his leave to print when, after the House adjourned, he went to the Printing Office and inserted what I have sent to the Clerk's desk? I say, Mr. Speaker, I believe that speech to be without parallel in the proceedings of Congress; that no other case like it can be found. And it was from a full sense of the importance of such a precedent, and the importance of not permitting such a precedent to go unquestioned, that I have called it up.

As the gentleman has referred to politics in Ohio, I shall say nothing about that more than to contradict one or two things. He says that a chairman of one of the Democratic committees was indicted. He did not state what led to that indictment, and that as soon as it could be heard it was quashed. I am not going into the Ohio campaign. The people have settled that question there. The gentleman referred to the matter of the election of Speaker. What had all that to do here where we are considering a charge of the violation of the privileges of this House? But I will say, to go upon the records, that never was there a campaign carried on in that State or anywhere else where methods so corrupt, forbidden, and so abhorrent were resorted to as were resorted to by my colleague and his confederates, his paid staff of scoundrels, employed to circulate the very document which he had printed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I demand that the language of the gentleman from Ohio be taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio demands that the words of his colleague be taken down. The reporter will reduce them to writing.

Mr. DUNN. While the words are being taken down I ask that an order be made to correct the RECORD of this morning.

The SPEAKER. Nothing else is in order while this matter is pending. The Clerk will now read the words objected to as they have been taken down.

The Clerk read as follows:

I will say, to go upon the records, that never was there a campaign carried on in that State or anywhere else where methods so corrupt, forbidden, and abhorrent were resorted to as were resorted to by my colleague and his confederates, his paid staff, scoundrels employed to circulate the very document which he had printed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I say that a part——

Mr. KEIFER. I submit that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is not entitled to proceed until action is taken on the words which have been objected to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] desires to make an explanation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I propose to withdraw the remarks, which I concede to be unparliamentary. I did not intend to say "his paid scoundrels." I will say this, that I do not think a campaign was ever carried on anywhere in which methods more corrupt, forbidden, and abhorrent were resorted to to achieve political ends than were resorted to in the seventeenth district of Ohio during the last campaign.

Several MEMBERS. By whom? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. By and on the part of the Republican party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I think that is parliamentary, and it is certainly true.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not desire to press this matter; but I do not think the gentleman exculpates himself by merely withdrawing the language. That is a privilege he has, but when he has exercised it, the matter is still left with the House.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; if any member desires to submit a motion on the subject he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not want it to be taken for granted that the gentleman may withdraw the language and then go on with his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the rule to be that the gentleman can withdraw his remarks and then proceed, provided any gentleman desires to submit a motion with regard to the words which have been objected to. The Chair is ready to recognize any gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman must have permission of the House to proceed after being called to order in that way.

Mr. HAMMOND. I submit that when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] stated he did withdraw the words and was allowed to go on without objection, it is now too late to raise the question.

Mr. KEIFER. But he was not allowed to go on without objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not tell when the gentleman from Ohio rose whether he was to proceed to make an explanation of the language used or to proceed with the debate. That fact could not be ascertained until the gentleman had spoken perhaps a sentence or two.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] having withdrawn the words to which objection was made, I move that he be allowed to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the gentleman from Ohio be allowed to proceed in order. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is all I wish to say respecting the campaign in Ohio; because, as I have said and will repeat, this is not a personal matter purely. I have acted under the advice of my committee as well as upon my own judgment. And I must be permitted to refer again to the work of that committee. When the gentleman stands here and says it made no report but one of three lines, or that it made such a report, he again proves, if nothing more, his ignorance of what the records of the House show.

That committee, early in the last session, took up the question of pensions in the Department, called the Commissioner of Pensions before it, held sessions day after day and week after week, with the Commissioner of Pensions before it, questioning him as to the cause of delay in adjudicating upon the 250,000 or 300,000 claims now pending in that office, and which have been pending there some of them for the last twenty years. And, Mr. Speaker, in that office there can be found, I dare say, scarcely a Democrat from garret to cellar; every place of any consequence in that office is now held and has been held every hour of every day from the close of the war till this time by Republicans, and if there is any fault for not adjudicating and settling those pension cases where does that fault rest?

We undertook in that committee to modify the rules of evidence, so far changing the law as to enable the Commissioner to settle claims of that kind. I do not believe there is a committee of this House that worked more faithfully than did the committee over which I had the honor to preside.

How does the gentleman know what we did? Did he, though he had introduced a bill, step his foot in that room to inquire after any bill there or anything pending in the committee? No, Mr. Speaker; his interest in the question arose after Congress had adjourned, when there was an opportunity to put a speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The report I allude to is in the form of an interview with Commissioner Dudley—this document which I hold in my hand, designated "Miscellaneous Document No. 43."

Now, the gentleman assumes that he is here on this floor as the representative of the Union soldiers, and is authorized to speak for them. Is it possible that the Union soldiers of this country have made that selection; that they have put him forward here to represent them? Did he represent them upon the field during the war? [Applause on the Democratic side.] I know something of the gentleman's record during the war. I know that after the war was well nigh-over; after all the great battles had been fought; after the Army of Virginia had been rolled back across the Potomac and across the mountains, Vicksburg had been captured, Gettysburg had been fought, and the Mississippi River had been opened to the Gulf, then he enlisted in the Home Guard of the State of Ohio [applause and laughter on the Democratic side], and on conditions, too, for the condition of the regiment in which he served was that it should not go out of the State. [Renewed laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] A gentleman who has won the title of "Feather-bed Colonel" in the State of Ohio has been selected—has he?—to represent the Union soldiers upon the floor of this House! Indeed! indeed! Self-appointed, I think!

They would naturally, of course, select a gentleman of courage; and it certainly took courage after Congress had adjourned to go to the Printing Office and insert in the RECORD what I have alluded to; but it is a kind of courage, Mr. Speaker, which the assassin displays when, finding his victim is asleep, he approaches him to stab him. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the kind of courage displayed by the gentleman in going to the Printing Office days after Congress had adjourned to insert an attack upon myself and upon the committee which I represent—an attack which was circulated all over my district. The first I heard of this speech was that it had been circulated all over the district. And he has the face, you will allow me to say, to come here and say that he did not intend to attack a committee of the House, but to take advantage of the circumstances to make an attack upon me personally, and to print that speech which was circulated through that district and was printed and reprinted in every Republican paper within that district.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But I come back to this question: Did the gentleman who introduces here a great mass of stuff relating to the campaign in Ohio, which has nothing to do with this issue at all, and which covers up the one charge of inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD after Congress had adjourned the language which has been referred to and is quoted in the resolution—did he abuse the privileges of this House? Did he insert in that publication words unparliamentary, which, if they had been uttered on the floor of the House, might have been questioned—as was done a moment ago in my own case—and be stricken out of the RECORD, as they certainly would have been?

Did he abuse the privileges of the House in taking advantage, after the adjournment of Congress, to insert that speech? Was it a violation of the rules of the House to allude to what took place and to criticise what took place in a committee of the Senate or was it not? That is the only question for this House to pass upon. It can not pass upon the Ohio campaign now; it is too late; it is all over, and I am satisfied with it myself. [Laughter and applause.] The only question to be passed upon is, Did my colleague abuse the privileges of this House under leave granted to him to extend his remarks? Did he insert in the RECORD matter not delivered on the floor of the House and which violated the privileges of the House? If he did not, after the showing I have made, then you may insert anything you may get leave to print, and after Congress adjourns, or any other time, insert what you please affecting the integrity, the honor, the character of members, and there is no way to question it.

I now, Mr. Speaker, move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If I have five minutes remaining of my time, Mr. Speaker, I will yield it to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to a question of privilege for the purpose of correcting the truthfulness of the statement last made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will withdraw my demand for the previous question and I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio states that he rises to a question of privilege.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that while the regiment to which I belonged was mustered in early in 1863, at a time of intense excitement in that State, and while some of them understood it was to be confined to that State, nevertheless it was not confined to that State but went into other States.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Oh! Mr. Speaker, that is not a question of privilege.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I remained with the regiment a year and a half, and was with the regiment outside of the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a matter of privilege. It is in the nature of a personal explanation, to be made only by the consent of the House.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, and would like to inquire how much time I have left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Very well; then I will yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX, of New York. Does the gentleman want the whole eight minutes?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will yield to the gentleman from New York seven minutes, retaining for myself only one minute.

The SPEAKER. The confusion in the Hall is so great that it is almost impossible to hear what is being said. The Sergeant-at-Arms will request members to resume their seats, so that order may be observed on the floor.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I read the other day an account in a California paper of a man who (like the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR) got into a difficulty. His difficulty was with another man, who killed him and scalped him, and then he wrote to San Francisco that he did not want the encounter to get into the papers for fear it might be exaggerated. [Laughter.] That is the condition exactly of the scalped gentleman from Ohio.

That gentleman undertakes to defend the peculiar speech he published in the RECORD after the adjournment of Congress. It is indefensible, because there was no opportunity to answer it.

Now, sir, there is an ineradicable rule about publishing speeches. It is a good and golden rule. Every gentleman observes it. It is the rule of honor. It is this: that in publishing speeches after the adjournment according to the rules, and in the absence of members, there should be omitted absolutely all personalities and reflections upon the integrity of members or committees of Congress.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask the gentleman from New York to point out a single personal utterance in that speech. There is not a single personal statement in it.

Mr. COX, of New York. Notwithstanding all we have heard, the gentleman now says there is not a personal statement in that speech. Why, sir, your speech is crammed and rammed and jammed full of personalities. [Laughter and applause.] The record made by his colleague will show it. I have seen it.

But the point I particularly rise to is this: The gentleman seeks the aid of a venerable expert as to the rules of this House; for what purpose? He calls on one of our ex-Clerks to show that others have abused this privilege. Now, this gentleman had better be engaged in better business. He volunteers to challenge my conduct. I have never printed, sir, anything after the adjournment reflecting personally on any member.

The gentleman from Ohio, I understand, referred to a speech I made on the whisky bill. I was not present when he spoke, being in the committee-room. But I beg to correct the statements made. I did make a speech on the whisky bill. The House consented that after a half-hour's talk the rest should be printed. It was a tariff speech. I connected the whisky tax with the customs. They are together in all economic and proper senses. I was advised by the Speaker that I was to be chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill of Colonel MORRISON. Consequently I made my speech in advance. As it related to the revenue, I made it logical and orderly, for I had in mind the ultimate intent to couple them together. Any man of logic and intelligence will see that there is no excuse or pattern in this speech for the conduct of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

The gentleman from Ohio quotes the late Clerk of the House, Mr. McPherson, in support of a statement that I published a speech in the RECORD that was not delivered in the House. So far that statement is true. But when he gives the statement that this same speech had been delivered in Tammany Hall on the 4th day of July he does not tell the truth.

Here is what Mr. McPherson says:

COX's speech, "Salt in politics," page 165 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 8, was never delivered, nor any part of it, in the House—

That is a falsehood to begin with [laughter]—

but was a reprint of his Fourth of July remarks before the Tammany Society of New York.

This is another untruth to end with. I have that speech here. I hold a copy of it in my hand. Two pages of it, at the start, never were spoken in Tammany Hall. Gentlemen can make the comparison for themselves. The circumstances under which it was delivered or printed were as follows: The river and harbor bill was under consideration by the Committee of the Whole. My then facetious friend from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] offered an amendment to the bill appropriating the sum of $40,000 for the improvement of Salt River, Kentucky. It is an old but a good joke. He did it prophetically and with a view of the subsequent use of that stream by his party. [Laughter.] His party has gone up that mythic stream. He said that he wanted to improve that river for the benefit of the Democratic party. Well, we have not gone up Salt River—not far or much. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] The magnetic statesman from Maine and his co-ordinates and companions have gone up—Salt River—with all the meanders thereof. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I obtained leave to print a speech on "salt" at that time. I asked for it, because urged to it by gentle Republican provocations. Day after day my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] asked after my salt speech. I had made reference to the conservative element contained in salt as well as to Salt River, which was the subject the gentleman had introduced with a view to the future navigation of that river by his party.

In that published speech I used two or three pages which had pertinence to Salt River and the saline elements in our politics. These I did not deliver in Tammany Hall; but adding them to my pertinent speech in Tammany Hall, I printed a speech which is supposed to have been delivered here. In that speech I used the following language: It is the gravamen and index to the speech. Besides, it is prophetic:

But in its most remote and liquid meaning the word salt implies a retiracy from power, an exile up a stream where there may be no patronage, but much repentance. Hinc lacrimæ!

[Great laughter on the Democratic side.]

See, Mr. Speaker, the beauty and value of a vaticinatory speech printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD after the adjournment!

Now, I ask my Republican friends, even though they may be ever so malignant toward us and cross over their defeat—and I see the defeated over there by scores and scores—I ask them, since they have lost their patronage and gone up their Salt River, to practice humility and patience. Let them give up their whole souls to repentance in sackcloth and ashes. [Great laughter.]

A word to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR]. He sought my record. I say to him, go back for twenty-five years or more and you will not find that I ever took advantage in printing a speech to make personal reflections upon any man. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I talk openly when I talk at all. I may sometimes talk foolishly, and often audaciously, but I do not print speeches after no one can answer them. The man who does that, the man who prints reflections upon another when he can not answer—if I should characterize his conduct as I think it ought to be characterized, why my words would be taken down. [Laughter.] Is it brave to do an act of that kind?

My friend from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] says that the gentleman from Ohio is not now the accredited agent of the soldier in any relation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. He never was, and never opposed or saw an armed enemy in his life.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Forty-sixth Congress shows that Mr. Hazleton charged you with being shot in the back. Why did you not have that suppressed or expunged?

Mr. COX, of New York. But I would like to read in this connection a little extract from the Congressional Directory:

JOSEPH D. TAYLOR, of Cambridge, was born in Belmont County, Ohio—

That county is a Quaker county, to my certain knowledge [laughter], and men never fight in Belmont County.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COX, of New York. I would like to print the remainder of this biography after Congress adjourns; then I will print it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I now demand the previous question; but prior to that I wish to say just a word, as a minute remains of my time, in reply to the reflection made upon my record. Brave men have been shot in the back, but not in just the way that the gentleman from Ohio shoots them. But in my case it happens not to be true. The shot that disabled me was almost a direct front shot.

Now, I demand the previous question upon the resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. May I now be in order to move to refer this question to the Committee on Rules?

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair has always held that the rule which allows one motion to commit with or without instructions applies as well to resolutions, after the previous question has been demanded or ordered, as to bills. Therefore, the Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman is in order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I submit that motion. I do not know whether the motion is debatable or not.

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not desire to debate it, but would simply suggest the reason for making it. It is because I am not able to determine as yet whether or not there has been a breach of privilege in the matter complained of.

Mr. HAMMOND. This is not debatable, I believe.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then I move to refer it to the Committee on Rules, without instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to refer the resolution under consideration to the Committee on Rules. The question is upon that motion.

The question having been taken, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 128.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will be compelled to ask for the yeas and nays to show how completely non-partisan the vote is.

Mr. HAMMOND. Take the yeas and nays on the resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. No; take them on this motion.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I want them on this motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 161, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—94.

Adams, G. E.	Everhart,	Laird,	Robinson, J. S.
Atkinson,	Finerty,	Lawrence,	Rockwell,
Barr,	Funston,	Libbey,	Rowell,
Bayne,	George,	Long,	Russell,
Bisbee,	Goff,	Lyman,	Ryan,
Boutelle,	Guenther,	McCoid,	Skinner, C. R.
Brainerd,	Hanback,	McComas,	Smalls,
Breitung,	Hart,	McCormick,	Smith, A. Herr
Brewer, J. H.	Hatch, H. H.	Millard,	Smith, Hiram Y.
Browne, T. M.	Haynes,	Milliken,	Spooner,
Brown, W. W.	Henderson, D. B.	Nelson,	Steele,
Campbell, J. M.	Henderson, T. J.	Nutting,	Stephenson,
Cannon,	Hepburn,	O'Hara,	Strait,
Chace,	Hiscock,	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, E. B.
Chalmers,	Hitt,	Parker,	Thomas,
Culbertson, W. W.	Holmes,	Payne,	Wadsworth,
Cullen,	Holton,	Perkins,	Wait,
Cutcheon,	Horr,	Peters,	Wakefield,
Dargan,	Howey,	Poland,	Washburn,
Davis, G. R.	James,	Price,	Weaver,
Davis, R. T.	Johnson,	Ranney,	White, J. D.
Dingley,	Kean,	Ray, Ossian	Wilson, James
Dunham,	Keifer,	Reed,
Evans,	Lacey,	Rice,

NAYS—161.

Adams, J. J.	Elliott,	McAdoo,	Springer,
Alexander,	Ellis,	McMillin,	Stevens,
Bagley,	English,	Matson,	Stewart, Charles
Barksdale,	Ermentrout,	Maybury,	Stockslager,
Beach,	Ferrell,	Miller, J. F.	Storm,
Belmont,	Follett,	Mitchell,	Sumner, C. A.
Bennett,	Foran,	Morrison,	Talbott,
Blackburn,	Forney,	Morse,	Taylor, J. M.
Blanchard,	Fyan,	Muller,	Thompson,
Boyle,	Geddes,	Murphy,	Throckmorton,
Bratton,	Glascock,	Murray,	Tillman,
Breckinridge,	Green,	Mutchler,	Townshend,
Brewer, F. B.	Greenleaf,	Neece,	Tucker,
Buchanan,	Halsell,	Nicholls,	Tully,
Buckner,	Hammond,	Oates,	Turner, H. G.
Caldwell,	Hardeman,	O'Ferrall,	Turner, Oscar
Campbell, J. E.	Hardy,	O'Neil, John J.	Van Alstyne,
Candler,	Hatch, W. H.	Paige,	Vance,
Carleton,	Hemphill,	Patton,	Van Eaton,
Cassidy,	Henley,	Pierce,	Wallace,
Clardy,	Herbert,	Peel,	Ward,
Clay,	Hewitt, A. S.	Post,	Warner, Richard
Clements,	Hewitt, G. W.	Pryor,	Wellborn,
Cobb,	Hill,	Pusey,	Wemple,
Collins,	Hoblitzell,	Randall,	Whiting,
Cook,	Holman,	Rankin,	Williams,
Cosgrove,	Hopkins,	Reagan,	Wilkins,
Cox, S. S.	Houseman,	Reese,	Willis,
Cox, W. R.	Hunt,	Riggs,	Wilson, W. L.
Crisp,	Hurd,	Robertson,	Winans, E. B.
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, B. W.	Rogers, J. H.	Winans, John
Curtin,	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, W. F.	Wise, G. D.
Davidson,	Jones, J. K.	Rosecrans,	Wolford,
Davis, L. H.	Jones, J. T.	Scales,	Wood,
Deuster,	Kleiner,	Seney,	Woodward,
Dibrell,	Lamb,	Seymour,	Worthington,
Dockery,	Lanham,	Shively,	Yaple,
Dowd,	Le Fevre,	Singleton,	York.
Dunn,	Lewis,	Skinner, T. G.
Eaton,	Lore,	Snyder,
Eldredge,	Lowry,	Spriggs,

NOT VOTING—68.

Aiken,	Connolly,	Jordan,	Potter,
Anderson,	Converse,	Kelley,	Ray, G. W.
Arnot,	Covington,	Kellogg,	Robinson, W. E.
Ballentine,	Dibble,	Ketcham,	Shaw,
Barbour,	Dorsheimer,	King,	Shelley,
Belford,	Ellwood,	Lovering,	Slocum,
Bingham,	Fiedler,	Miller, S. H.	Stewart, J. W.
Bland,	Findlay,	Mills,	Stone,
Blount,	Garrison,	Money,	Struble,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Sumner, D. H.
Broadhead,	Graves,	Morrill,	Taylor, J. D.
Brumm,	Hancock,	Moulton,	Valentine,
Budd,	Harmer,	Muldrow,	Warner, A. J.
Burleigh,	Hooper,	Ochiltree,	Weller,
Burnes,	Houk,	Payson,	White, Milo
Cabell,	Hutchins,	Pettibone,	Wise, J. S.
Campbell, Felix	Jeffords,	Phelps,	Young.

So the motion to refer was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LORE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. HOOPER, on all political questions, until further notice.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD, until further notice.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VALENTINE, until further notice.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. BRUMM, until further notice.

Mr. KING with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania, until further notice.

Mr. JORDAN with Mr. JEFFORDS, until Monday next.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. HARMER, until further notice.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. ANDERSON, on this question.

Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. KELLEY, for this day.

Mr. MONEY with Mr. RAY, of New York, for this day.

Mr. POTTER with Mr. STRUBLE, for this day.

Mr. CABELL with Mr. ELLWOOD, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the adoption of the resolution.

The question being put, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 62, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—164.

Adams, J. J.	Elliott,	Lore,	Skinner, T. G.
Alexander,	Ellis,	Lowry,	Snyder,
Bagley,	English,	McAdoo,	Spriggs,
Barksdale,	Ermentrout,	McMillin,	Springer,
Beach,	Ferrell,	Matson,	Stevens,
Belmont,	Follett,	Maybury,	Stewart, Charles
Bennett,	Foran,	Miller, J. F.	Stockslager,
Blackburn,	Forney,	Mitchell,	Sumner, C. A.
Blount,	Fyan,	Morrison,	Talbott,
Boyle,	Geddes,	Morse,	Taylor, J. M.
Bratton,	Glascock,	Muller,	Thompson,
Breckinridge,	Graves,	Murphy,	Throckmorton,
Brewer, F. B.	Green,	Murray,	Tillman,
Buchanan,	Greenleaf,	Mutchler,	Townshend,
Buckner,	Halsell,	Neece,	Tucker,
Caldwell,	Hammond,	Nicholls,	Tully,
Campbell, J. E.	Hardeman,	Oates,	Turner, H. G.
Candler,	Hardy,	O'Ferrall,	Turner, Oscar
Carleton,	Hatch, W. H.	O'Neill, J. J.	Van Alstyne,
Cassidy,	Hemphill,	Paige,	Vance,
Clardy,	Henley,	Patton,	Van Eaton,
Clay,	Herbert,	Payson,	Wallace,
Clements,	Hewitt, A. S.	Pierce,	Ward,
Cobb,	Hewitt, G. W.	Peel,	Warner, Richard
Collins,	Hill,	Post,	Weaver,
Cook,	Hoblitzell,	Pryor,	Wellborn,
Cosgrove,	Holman,	Pusey,	Wemple,
Cox, S. S.	Hopkins,	Randall,	Whiting,
Cox, W. R.	Houseman,	Rankin,	Wilkins,
Crisp,	Hunt,	Reagan,	Williams,
Culberson, D. B.	Hurd,	Reese,	Willis,
Curtin,	Johnson,	Riggs,	Wilson, W. L.
Davidson,	Jones, B. W.	Robertson,	Winans, E. B.
Davis, L. H.	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, J. H.	Winans, John
Deuster,	Jones, J. K.	Rogers, W. F.	Wise, G. D.
Dibrell,	Jones, J. T.	Rosecrans,	Wolford,
Dockery,	Kleiner,	Scales,	Wood,
Dowd,	Lamb,	Seney,	Woodward,
Dunn,	Lanham,	Seymour,	Worthington,
Eaton,	Le Fevre,	Shively,	Yaple,
Eldredge,	Lewis,	Singleton,	York.

NAYS—62.

Atkinson,	Guenther,	Lyman,	Russell,
Bisbee,	Hanback,	McCoid,	Ryan,
Boutelle,	Hart,	McCormick,	Skinner, C. R.
Brainerd,	Hatch, H. H.	Morrill,	Smith, A. H.
Breitung,	Haynes,	Nelson,	Smith, H. Y.
Browne, T. M.	Henderson, D. B.	Nutting,	Spooner,
Brown, W. W.	Henderson, T. J.	O'Neill, Charles	Steele,
Cannon,	Hepburn,	Parker,	Stephenson,
Culbertson, W. W.	Hitt,	Perkins,	Strait,
Cullen,	Holmes,	Peters,	Taylor, E. B.
Cutcheon,	Horr,	Poland,	Wadsworth,
Davis, R. T.	Howey,	Price,	Wait,
Dingley,	James,	Ray, Ossian	Wakefield,
Everhart,	Lacey,	Reed,	Washburn.
Funston,	Laird,	Robinson, J. S.
Goff,	Libbey,	Rowell,

NOT VOTING—97.

Adams, G. E.	Converse,	Keifer,	Rice,
Aiken,	Covington,	Kelley,	Robinson, W. E.
Anderson,	Dargan,	Kellogg,	Rockwell,
Arnot,	Davis, G. R.	Ketcham,	Shaw,
Ballentine,	Dibble,	King,	Shelley,
Barbour,	Dorsheimer,	Lawrence,	Slocum,
Barr,	Dunham,	Long,	Smalls,
Bayne,	Ellwood,	Lovering,	Stewart, J. W.
Belford,	Evans,	McComas,	Stone,
Bingham,	Fiedler,	Millard,	Storm,
Blanchard,	Findlay,	Miller, S. H.	Struble,
Bland,	Finerty,	Milliken,	Sumner, D. H.
Bowen,	Garrison,	Mills,	Taylor, J. D.
Brewer, J. H.	George,	Money,	Thomas,
Broadhead,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Valentine,
Brumm,	Hancock,	Moulton,	Warner, A. J.
Budd,	Harmer,	Muldrow,	Weller,
Burnes,	Hiscock,	Ochiltree,	White, J. D.
Burleigh,	Holton,	O'Hara,	White, Milo
Cabell,	Hooper,	Payne,	Wilson, James
Campbell, Felix	Houk,	Pettibone,	Wise, J. S.
Campbell, J. M.	Hutchins,	Phelps,	Young.
Chace,	Jeffords,	Potter,
Chalmers,	Jordan,	Ranney,
Connolly,	Kean,	Ray, G. W.

So the resolution of Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, was adopted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPROPRIATION FOR IMPROVEMENT OF HELL GATE.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a privileged question. Under instructions from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I report back the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform this House whether any part of the amount appropriated in the river and harbor act of July 5, 1884, for removing the reef at Hell Gate, New York, has been used for a different purpose, and, if so, by whom and under what authority.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SEWERAGE FACILITIES FOR NEWPORT, R. I.

Mr. SEYMOUR, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Commerce, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 7367) granting the right of way to the city of Newport, R. I., over the breakwater at Goat Island.

Mr. CHACE. I ask that this report be now considered and the bill put on its passage. It proposes merely to give to the city of Newport the right to carry a sewer through the breakwater to empty the débris into the outer harbor. The bill has been already passed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. This appears to be a House bill, not a Senate bill.

Mr. CHACE. Then I ask unanimous consent that we now proceed to consider, in lieu of this bill, the Senate bill of the same tenor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] asks that this bill be laid aside, and that the House now take up for consideration a Senate bill of similar purport.

Mr. CHACE. The bill simply provides that the city of Newport may carry a sewer under the harbor and through the breakwater. The object is that the débris from the sewer now emptied into the inner harbor shall be carried out, so that the tides of the outer channel may wash it away.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the bill involve any expense to the Government?

Mr. CHACE. None whatever.

Mr. COBB. Has this matter been considered by any committee of the House?

Mr. CHACE. The Committee on Commerce has just reported back favorably a bill similar to the Senate bill which I desire to have considered.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2041) granting the right of way to the city of Newport, R. I., over the breakwater at Goat Island.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the city of Newport, R. I., is hereby granted the right to construct and maintain a sewer for drainage purposes through or across the breakwater at Goat Island, subject to such conditions as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That such conditions shall be accepted by the city of Newport before the work hereon authorized shall be commenced.

The bill was read three times, and passed.

Mr. CHACE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the House met this morning, there was an agreement between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and myself—subject of course to the ratification of the House, if it should meet its approval—that to-morrow's session should be devoted to private business, and to-day to the further consideration of his bill in regard to interstate commerce. But to-day's proceedings have been interrupted by a little episode, the nature of which the RECORD will show, and which has consumed the entire day. Neither of us would now be disposed to hold the other to the agreement I desire to know whether there is any objection to going on with the Private Calendar to-morrow. This will meet the approval of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I object.

Mr. MCMILLIN. As objection is made, I will not urge the proposition, but withdraw it.

ADJOURNMENT TILL MONDAY.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that when the House shall adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I hope not.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MORRISON, there were—ayes 119, noes 54.

Mr. BEACH. I call for the yeas and nays.

On ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 35, noes 167; less than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. BEACH. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered, and the motion of Mr. MORRISON was adopted.

CEREMONIES ON COMPLETION OF WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table for consideration and passage the joint resolution (S. R. 101) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause to be executed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing such suitable cards of invitation as may be prescribed by the commission appointed by the joint resolution of May 13, 1884, to make arrangements for suitable ceremonies upon the completion of the Washington Monument, and the Public Printer is directed to furnish such necessary programmes and cards as may be required by said commission. And the ceremonies provided for by said commission shall take place on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1885. And to defray the expenses incurred under the provisions of said joint resolution the additional sum of $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. MILLARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. 299) proposing an amendment to the Constitution changing the terms of office of the President of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CURTIN. I ask unanimous consent to present for present consideration the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That January 14, 1885, after the reading of the Journal, be assigned to the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the consideration of such business as may be presented by said committee, this order not to interfere with general appropriation and revenue bills.

Mr. SINGLETON. I object unless it also includes prior special orders.

Mr. CURTIN. I have no objection to including that limitation in the resolution.

Mr. SINGLETON. Very well; then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CURTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered as modified.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection; and the resolution as modified was received and adopted.

Mr. CURTIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. H. ADAMS.

Mr. MCMILLIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 7679) for the relief of J. H. Adams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO INDIANS.

On motion of Mr. WELLBORN, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 48) to provide for allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COSGROVE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state by order of the House a recess is provided on Friday from 5 o'clock until 8, so there may be an evening session for the consideration of pension bills. Does the gentleman insist on his motion to adjourn?

Mr. COSGROVE. I do.

Mr. MATSON. I move to take a recess for the consideration of pension bills under a former order of the House.

The SPEAKER. Before submitting that motion the Chair will lay before the House several executive communications.

BUREAU OF CATHOLIC MISSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, with inclosures, asking an appropriation of $2,000 for the bureau of Catholic missions for the support and education of Indian pupils of the Flathead reservations, Montana; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. ELLIOTT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in reference to Senate bill 535, for the relief of the sureties of George W. Elliott, now on the Speaker's table; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7428) to authorize the Hillsborough National Bank to change its name to that of the First National Bank of Hillsborough, Ohio.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 289) authorizing the Superintendent of the Census to continue the work on the Tenth Census.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence by unanimous consent was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. STORM, until Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. DORSHEIMER, until Tuesday morning.

To Mr. MAYBURY, for ten days, on account of urgent business.

SOLDIERS' HOMES.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs asked by unanimous consent that preliminary copies of the report of the examination of United States military homes for disabled volunteer soldiers be printed for the use of members of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

W. H. POWELL.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers of W. H. Powell without leaving copies on file, there having been no adverse report on the same.

MARTIN COUGHLIN.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7680) for the relief of Martin Coughlin, Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7681) to simplify the existing tariff and collection laws on imports; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening to consider pension bills.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 14.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. No quorum having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. MATSON and Mr. GEORGE D. WISE.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I withdraw the call for a quorum, with the distinct understanding that if no quorum is present to-night I shall object to the consideration of any bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion is agreed to; and the Chair announces that Mr. BAGLEY, of New York, will preside this evening as Speaker pro tempore.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The House at 8 o'clock resumed its session, and was called to order by Mr. BAGLEY, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the session is held this evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Mr. MATSON. Under the order just read, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar (Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, in the chair).

JOHN H. COOK.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2635) granting a pension to John H. Cook; adverse.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, is not the unfinished business of the committee first in order? If so, the bill on page 44, for the relief of Emma De Long, is first to be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

EMMA DE LONG.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3065) granting a pension to Emma De Long.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma De Long, widow of the late Lieut. Commander George W. De Long, United States Navy, who died in Siberia, while in the discharge of his duty as the commanding officer of the expedition and during the retreat of the officers and enlisted men of the exploring steamer Jeannette, after the wreck of that vessel in the Arctic seas, and to pay to the said Emma De Long a pension at the rate of $50 per month, commencing from the 23d day of March, 1882.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said Emma De Long, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount which shall, upon the passage of this act, have accrued to her under the provisions thereof.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the report of the committee be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3065) granting a pension to Mrs. Emma De Long, have had the same under thoughtful consideration, and beg leave to report:

The original bill has been slightly amended, and, as amended, the committee recommend its passage. It is not deemed necessary to refer at length to the gallant services of the brave Lieut. Commander George W. De Long, who gave up his life while on duty in the frozen wilds of Siberia. The long and painful story of the Jeannette expedition; the gallantry and devotion of the men therein engaged; the horrible suffering to which they were subjected, and finally the death of a number of them in the ice-fields thousands of miles from the country they served so faithfully—all has gone to history, and become a shining chapter in the great record of human heroism. And now the faithful wife of the brave De Long asks at the hands of Congress a pension sufficient to supply the bare necessities of a life darkened and saddened by the Siberian tragedy of which the husband was the central figure.

The committee unanimously and earnestly recommend the passage of the bill as amended granting a pension to Mrs. Emma De Long.

The CHAIRMAN. When the bill was previously under consideration it was amended by striking out in the first section the words "commencing from the 23d day of March, 1882," and striking out the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the said Emma De Long, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount which shall, upon the passage of this act, have accrued to her under the provisions thereof.

It was also amended by changing the amount from $50 a month to $30. The question is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

Mr. BENNETT. For one I desire to move a further amendment.

Mr. STEELE. My understanding is the bill went to the Speaker's table as it was reported from the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. No; it did not, as no quorum was present.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not been acted on by the committee. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the words: "And the mother of Assistant Surgeon Ambler."

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point that it is not in order to amend a private bill by adding another name, as that makes another bill of it entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. It is a point on which he has ruled.

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BENNETT. I have nothing to add to what has been said already except that my recollection is the Chairman ruled in favor of such an amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Even if that were so it was an error, and would not be a precedent to govern the present occupant of the chair. It has been ruled by the chairman of the committee that such amendments are not in order, as the rule prohibits it.

Mr. BENNETT. The Chair so ruled, whether in order or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair afterward found the practice of the House was otherwise.

Mr. STEELE. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph of the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is also out of order to ingraft upon a bill for the relief of one individual a provision for the relief of another.—Journal 2, 32, page 414.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN H. COOK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2635) granting a pension to John H. Cook; adverse.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of John H. Cook, late a private in Company E, First Division, construction corps.

The report (by Mr. PATTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R 2635) granting a pension to John H. Cook, have had the same under consideration, and report as follows:

The committee find in August 16, 1881, Quartermaster's Office reports, that the records of this office show that J. H. Cook, carpenter, on United States military railroad, is reported, by Capt. F. P. Stockweather, A. Q. M., from June 1 to 30, 1864, twenty-three days, at $2.50, amounting to $57.50. While at work with his gang on the Chattanooga and Atlanta Railroad, he was sent by his foreman to Chattanooga for his box of tools. On his way back he was captured.

The committee find, by affidavit of William A. Clark and four of the Cook family, that when J. H. Cook returned home from the Army in June, 1845—

"He was then suffering from chronic diarrhea and rheumatism very much, and was reduced to a mere skeleton; that some of his friends did not know him, and that ever since he has been afflicted with the same trouble, and has suffered from a gunshot wound in his left leg, and we all know that, ever since his return, about once in every six weeks he has been prostrated by this chronic diarrhea and confined to bed, and said spells last from one to two weeks, and that in 1879 he was for over four months prostrate, and we all thought he was going to die; and for the first year after his return from the Army he was unable to do any work, and that before he went to the Army he was a stout, healthy man."

The committee find the following certificate from examining surgeon Calvin C. Halsey:

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA,
Susquehanna County:

JUNE 15, 1881.

I hereby certify that I have carefully examined John H. Cook, late a private Company E, First Division Construction Corps, Quartermaster's Department, in the service of the United States, who is an applicant for an invalid pension by reason of an alleged disability, resulting from chronic diarrhea and rheumatism and effects. In my opinion the said John H. Cook is totally ($8) incapacitated of obtaining his subsistence by manual labor, cause above stated. Judging from his present condition and from the evidence before me, it is my belief the said disability did originate in the service aforesaid in the line of duty. The disability is probably permanent. A more particular description of the applicant's condition is subjoined. I find large cicatrices on outer side of left leg, just above ankle-joint, produced by gunshot wound, and resulting in gangrene. The cicatrices interfere with action of muscles and cause lameness. There is muscular atrophy, and veins of foot are varicose; disability one-fourth, $2 per month. Diarrhea. I find tongue coated, moist, red edges, papillæ enlarged; abdomen full and tympanitic, and is so most of the time. States that diarrhea occurs severely about once a month; has twelve or more thin, slimy evacuations daily when he has attack of diarrhea. Disability three-eighths, $3 per month. Rheumatism most in both hips and back.

Has certificate from Army surgeon dated April 22, 1865, stating that he is unfit for service by reason of scorbutus and rheumatism, and was discharged soon after. Has rheumatism almost all the time in hips and back, shifting to other parts of body; worse on exposure or taking cold; not much that shows; disability three-eighths, $3 per month. Record good and claim appears meritorious.

The committee report the bill back with a recommendation that it do not pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass.

JOSEPH RAIBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3947) granting a pension to Joseph Raible.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Joseph Raible, of Indiana, who lost an arm above the elbow during the war, while firing a salute, at the city of Indianapolis, Ind., under the direction of the quartermaster-general of Indiana; and that said Secretary be, and he is hereby, directed to pay him at the rate of $30 per month.

The report was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3947) granting a pension to Joseph Raible, report:

That Joseph Raible enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company A, Thirty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteers, September 10, 1861, and was honorably discharged September, 1864.

October 2, 1882, he was placed on the pension-roll at $1 per month, for partial deafness of left ear, contracted in the military service of the United States.

July 3, 1865, after his discharge from the military service of the United States, while in the military service of the State of Indiana, and in pursuance of an order from General Stone, assistant quartermaster-general, at Indianapolis, while engaged in aiding in firing a salute in honor of the arrival home for muster-out of the Sixty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, by the fault of thumber, No. 3 at the gun (claimant being No. 1, rammer), there was a premature discharge of the gun, blowing off the soldier's right arm, which was amputated three inches above the elbow.

It is shown by the evidence in this case that the soldier was acting under orders from Assistant Quartermaster-General Stone, of the United States Army, on duty at Indianapolis, at the time of receiving the disability which resulted in the loss of his arm, and that he was performing a military duty at the time. Your committee therefore recommend that the bill be amended by the following, after the word month, in line 9: "in lieu of all other pensions now paid him;" and when so amended that the bill pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee's amendment.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to detain the committee but a moment. Before the adjournment of the House for the recess I made a statement that was rather too broad—that I intended to object to all cases. I did not mean that. In the hurry I said more than I intended. There is no member on this floor who is more willing to vote a pension to Union soldiers in meritorious cases than I am. I believe it not only to be the duty of the Government, but that its honor requires proper provision should be made for those who have received disabilities in its defense; but I give notice here and now, not only to-night but on all proper occasions, I shall object to the granting of pensions in cases in which I believe they ought not to be granted.

It seems to me the statutes of this country are large enough to cover all meritorious cases. I will not say all cases. Perhaps there are some, no doubt many, exceptional cases of which this House ought to take notice, but it is well known to the members of this House that there are upon the pension-roll of this country to-day hundreds of names of persons who never heard the rattle of musketry and never saw the smoke of a battlefield.

Mr. FUNSTON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. FUNSTON. It is whether you mean General Blair's widow?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I do not mean any special name. I mean what you know to be true, that for political purposes by political influences names have been put on the pension-roll of this country of persons who never have rendered any service or received any disability in its service.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Name them.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I mean to condemn this system.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit a question?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I would ask you, in view of the statement you have made, why you do not name these persons?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I am going to name them when the proper time comes for me to do so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. We would be glad to know who they are. If there have been any men placed upon the pension-rolls for political purposes it is due to the country that the man who is aware of that fact should give publicity to it in order that we may know it and that their names may be stricken off the rolls. If there are members of the House who know of fraudulent pensions that have been granted to persons who have never seen service and are not entitled to them the country should know it; and I ask the gentleman now, for the sake of the country and for the sake of worthy pensioners, to define what he means and specify the persons to whom he refers.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I am here, sir, to complain of a method of procedure. I am here to complain that these pension bills are considered and passed in night sessions of the House of Representatives when none are here except those who are interested in the passage of particular bills. I am here to say to the country, and I mean to say it, that there are laws broad enough to cover cases of most—I do not say all, but of most of those who are worthy of pensions, and I am here to protest against loose action in pension cases.

You, sir, in the last Congress or in the last year spent more money for pensions than was required for all the expenses of the Government prior to the war.

Mr. STEELE. You claim that we have too much money now in the Treasury. What better use can be made than to pay it out for pensions?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. We will not have any in the Treasury if we let you go on much longer.

I want to be understood, though, Mr. Chairman, in what I say. I repeat for the benefit of the gentleman from Indiana that I will go as far as he will go to give pensions in any meritorious case. I will vote the last dollar out of the Treasury to pay any Union soldier who is worthy of it and ought to receive it. I say that the honor of the Government requires that he should be paid, and I am here to do my share toward it; my people want me to do it; but I am here also to protest against this action in sessions of this House when hardly one-sixth of its membership is present.

Now as to the case here under consideration——

Mr. PETERS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if a single pension bill was passed during the last session that did not receive the scrutiny and recommendation of the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Yes; the bills that are passed here receive the scrutiny of those, and only those, who are interested in other bills behind them.

Mr. PETERS. Do I understand the gentleman as accusing the Committee on Pensions or Invalid Pensions of negligence in the discharge of its duties?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. No, sir; by no means. I am speaking only of the fact that these bills are considered on Friday evenings when these seats are empty.

Mr. DUNHAM. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNHAM. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions or the Committee on Pensions who have reported these cases to the House are interested in other cases behind them?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Well, I expect if you look over this roll you will find a good many of the committee who are interested in these cases. Why, it happens that the very bill under consideration in this committee——

Mr. DUNHAM. But I wish to get an answer from the gentleman. Do I understand him to assert that the committee are interested in bills behind the bills which have been presented or passed here?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I do not say that.

Mr. MATSON. Will the gentleman from Virginia permit me to ask him what he does say in reference to the committee?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I have said nothing about the committee at all, except that the committee has made these reports to the House and has other bills favorably reported on the Calendar; and yet we are asked to take these bills under consideration in this House when practically no members are present except the members of the committee. We are asked to consider and pass them when the House is empty.

Mr. MATSON. I desire to know which committee is interested in these bills. If I have understood the gentleman correctly I would like to have him answer that question as to what he means.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I do not know that the committee have any interest in the passage of the bills except in so far as they have been considered and reported by them. I alluded to the committee only in reference to the question of the gentleman on the other side.

Mr. DUNHAM. It is possible we have misunderstood the gentleman on this side, but it was clearly understood here that members who reported these bills to the House were interested in other bills behind them.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Only in so far as they came from the committee. The gentleman must have understood my meaning if he had heard me correctly.

I only want to say in reference to the bill under consideration that if I understand the report, and I ask the gentleman from Indiana to correct me if I have mistaken it, this person is already receiving a pension. Is that much so?

Mr. MATSON. He is; a small pension.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. And now it is proposed to give him a pension—for what? For a disability incurred for firing a salute at Indianapolis after the termination of the war, not received in the service of the country at all. Now, I shall object, Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned; and I shall not only vote against but shall oppose this bill to the utmost extent of my power.

Mr. MATSON. This bill proposes to pension this man for the loss of an arm incurred by him while firing a salute at Indianapolis immediately after the war closed, and upon the occasion of the return of one of the Indiana regiments to be mustered out. This man belonged to the Thirty-second Indiana Regiment, and had served from the 10th day of September, 1861, to September, 1864. During that time he had served faithfully as a soldier, and he is now receiving a pension of $1 a month on account of partial deafness. The act he was performing at the time he lost his arm was a military act. He was not in the service of the United States at that time, but had prior thereto served, as I have already stated, three years as a private soldier, and was called upon by the quartermaster-general of Indiana, who had charge of these military demonstrations upon the occasion of the return home of the regiments to Indiana, to perform this military service; and while so performing it he lost his arm. That is this case. It is the case of a soldier——

A MEMBER. An ex-soldier?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, an ex-soldier——

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Let me correctly understand whether this pensioner or proposed pensioner was in the service of the United States at the time he lost his arm.

Mr. MATSON. He had been mustered out. He had belonged to another regiment but had been mustered out. That is the fact. He had been a soldier and had served three years, and is now an ex-soldier as suggested by a gentleman on my right; and he is an ex-one-armed soldier, having lost his arm in the performance of a military act. It seems to me that makes a case which appeals to the equitable feelings, the conscience, and the judgment of the members of Congress. This is not a case where there can be any question about the fact as to the manner of the incurrence of the disability or as to the fact of the disability. But the whole case is admitted to be one based upon military reasons, and is therefore a peculiarly strong case, appealing to Congress for its equitable interference because the law is deficient and he can not be pensioned under the law for this disability.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say nothing here in response to what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GEORGE D. WISE] has said in relation to the legislation at the last session of Congress more than this, that every bill of the four hundred and eleven that passed this House at the last session received the careful consideration of either the Committee on Pensions or the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Those bills, some of them, were passed perhaps when there were but few members present. But that is not the fault of those that were present. It is the fault of those that were absent. And the gentleman from Virginia, if he could have said during the last session of Congress "I am here" as often as he made that exclamation to-night, would have been less responsible for laches of that character.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Allow me to say that I did not criticise the action of the committee. I was speaking of the method of passing these bills.

Mr. MATSON. I understand the gentleman, but he was criticising the action of the House in passing these bills when but few members were present, and I repeat what I have already said, that the fact that the House passed bills when few members were present was not the fault of those who were present but the fault of those who were absent. There can not be, I apprehend, a clearer proposition than that. And we have not undertaken to pass bills that were objected to here without a quorum. If any gentleman said he believed in his conscience that a bill ought not to pass and that it ought to have the judgment of a quorum of the House, nobody pretended at any time during the last session of Congress or at any other time to deny the right of having that judgment and the right to have the action of the House upon it on the succeeding Friday during the day session, when a quorum might pass on it or the right to have it passed over informally. Nobody has denied the right to any member to have that done, and nobody will deny that right now.

This bill, I want to say again, is certainly a bill that appeals strongly to the judgment as well as to the sympathy of every man that was ever a soldier. Here was a man who had served in the Army for three years, and then in performing a military act, although he had just been mustered out of the service, lost his arm and has carried with him forever afterward the visible badge of his disability. This man comes to Congress and asks Congress to pension him because of the loss of his arm. He now draws a pension of $1 a month on account of partial deafness, and this pension is to be paid to him in lieu of all other pensions now received by him. I ask my friend from Virginia as a soldier, and all the gentlemen present who were in the Army, if they do not believe that these men who carry empty sleeves and go upon crutches ought to be the favorites of Congress as well as of the pension laws.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I was very much surprised indeed to hear the gentleman from Virginia make the charge here that it was within the knowledge of members of this House that there are hundreds of fraudulent pensioners upon the pension-rolls of the Government. I say that if there is a single member here to-night who is conscious that there is a single pensioner borne upon the rolls who is a fraudulent pensioner, or who has obtained his pension through fraud, it is his duty to make that fact known. The gentleman complains that we are passing these bills here when there are but few members present. Will the gentleman deny the claimants whose bills are reported from a committee of this House favorably any right whatever to be heard upon the merits of their claims? This whole day, which is the only day in the week that we devote to the private claims of citizens of this country, has been absolutely wasted, and I think worse than wasted, while a man who may have a claim, an honest claim, against this Government, and whose children may be absolutely suffering for the want of bread, is to be denied any hearing whatever.

We have not gone to the Private Calendar to-day, nor did we do so for many weeks during the last session of Congress. Some men of this House, for fear that some dishonest claim may be granted, would never allow us to go to the Private Calendar. I do not know but that it would be right if all these claimants were required to go into the Court of Claims to establish their claims. But we have not provided for any such hearing in these applications that come before us in behalf of men who are entitled to the bounty of the Government on account of services rendered it.

Now, the gentleman says that only members who are interested in particular bills come here at these night sessions. I have been interested, I believe, in but a solitary bill reported during the last session of Congress by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that was a case where the soldier whose widow asked a pension had lost his leg, while a member of my own regiment, at the battle of Knoxville, on the 18th of November, 1863; and it was a question of doubt with the physicians whether the loss of his leg had contributed ultimately to his death. And wherever there is a doubt upon such a question as that I would extend the benefit of that doubt to the widow and the helpless children of the soldier who shed his blood and who lost his limb in the service of his country. That was, in my opinion, a righteous claim. I was not here when it was passed, nor did I look after it. I allowed the Committee on Invalid Pensions to consider and report the bill, as they did, without any solicitation on my part.

I do not think it just to members of this House to charge them with coming here on Friday nights for the purpose of putting men on the pension-rolls for political purposes. I say to the gentleman from Virginia that during eight years of the ten that I have had the honor to sit as a member of this House we have had a Democratic Committee on Invalid Pensions; and during that time there has been no bill passed, I think, that has not received the favorable report of at least a majority of that committee.

I think that the gentleman is a little reckless in his statements here. I would ask him whether he intends to deny to these claimants for pensions, whose bills are introduced here by members and referred to the Pensions Committee, any right whatever to be heard in this House? And if we can not give them such hearing on Friday nights we can not do it at all; and we might just as well deny them all justice.

I repeat, that if the gentleman from Virginia or any other member of this House knows of any pensioner who has been guilty of fraud in obtaining a pension, or whose pension is a fraud upon the Government, it is his duty to make the facts known; not to stand here upon the floor of this House and make these reckless charges; not to make assertions of this character, unless he has proof to substantiate them. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in relation to this case, and I hope that all gentlemen will as much as possible keep this whole question of pensions out of party politics. When I am voting for or against a pension, I do not feel that I am giving either a Democratic or a Republican vote; I feel that I am voting upon the justice or injustice of the application of the man who claims a pension from his country for services rendered to that country. And I do believe that after this little episode shall have passed by we shall do perhaps less talking and more work upon the subject of pensions.

In this case the man in whose favor the bill is reported is drawing a pension—not for having his arm shot off, but for deafness contracted in the service; for he was a soldier during three years, as I understand from the report, and during those three years' service for his country contracted the disease that made him deaf; and for this deafness he is drawing through the department under our laws.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. WOLFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. For that injury this man is receiving already a pension.

Mr. WOLFORD. He is receiving a pension.

Mr. CUTCHEON. A pension of $1 a month—$12 a year.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. That is the amount fixed by law; change the law if the allowance is not just.

Mr. WOLFORD. I trust the gentleman from Virginia will have patience, and I hope my position will be satisfactory to him and every other member. It is now proposed by this bill, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to give this man an additional pension for the loss of an arm; but the injury was incurred when he was not a soldier of the United States. To grant a pension in such a case is, in the opinion of many gentlemen, carrying the doctrine a little to far. But it is not carrying it farther than I am willing to carry it, for I hold to the doctrine which I have advocated in this House, and propose to advocate, that a man who has served his country as a soldier and received an honorable discharge is entitled to a pension when afterward he becomes disabled; that in such a case he is as much entitled in equity and justice to a pension as if the seeds of disease had been sown or the injury incurred while he was in the service.

I know this is a new question; but I ask the candid attention of the gentleman from Virginia and everybody else interested in the question of pensions to a consideration of the question how far do we propose to go in granting pensions. I propose, so far as I am concerned, to go just as far as the necessities and the equities of the case demand. When a man who has served his country honorably and faithfully becomes after the war disabled for any cause other than his own negligent or unrighteous conduct, I am for giving him a pension. I am ready to settle that rule at any time—to-night or hereafter. I propose to vote for this bill not because it comes in the line of any precedent heretofore established, but because it appeals powerfully to my heart, as I believe it appeals to the sympathies of every man in this House.

Pensions must rest upon some principle of equity. We can not establish an iron-clad law upon this subject of pensions. I assume every gentleman here will admit that pensions must stop only where equity and justice stop—never till we reach that point. I believe that the justice and equity of this case demand a pension and I will vote for it. I will vote as cheerfully, and indeed a great deal more cheerfully, to give to every soldier who served his country in any war and afterward becomes disabled. I would vote for a general law on that proposition. I have said all I desire to.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House at any length, but it seems to me this bill, coming from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, is not entirely a proper one. According to his own statement of this case the injury received by this man was after he had been mustered out of the service of the United States and while executing an order of a State official of Indiana. Now, if there is any pension to be granted in this case let it be granted by the State of Indiana.

To a certain degree, Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the doctrine which has been stated by my friend from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD], that it might be right, it might be proper, that we should pass a general law which would provide for soldiers who are now decrepit, who are now suffering from disease and unable to maintain themselves and their families, and whose disability is not traceable to their military service. But, sir, if you are going to have such a law, let it apply to every one so situated, and not to one single individual who lives in Indiana, and in whose behalf our friend the chairman appeals to the generosity of the House. Let us have no special favorites here. I believe that all soldiers of the Union should be the favorites of Congress; but let our legislation treat all alike, and not favor one special individual as against others equally worthy.

I have in my mind a case in my own district where a man has had a claim similar to this pending. I believe, in two or three Congresses, a man incapacitated from any kind of labor, and who is told when he applies for a pension that his case does not fall within the law governing the granting of pensions. Here he has been denied year after year favorable consideration upon the equities of his case, and yet this man from Indiana it is proposed shall get a pension from mere gratitude and good nature. If such a course is to be taken I wish the rule to apply to such men as in the case I have mentioned who live in my district, as well as those who live in other districts represented by gentlemen upon this floor. Therefore I am opposed to this bill.

Mr. GOFF. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GEORGE D. WISE] entirely misconceives the character of the pension cases submitted to this House. The very reason they are brought here is because the cases themselves do not come within the meaning of the laws. Those laws are, like other laws of the country, to be construed strictly. They are by the Pension Department construed strictly and against the applicants. We here do not act in that respect. We give the applicant the benefit of the equities. We solve the doubt in his favor and not against him. Many of the cases submitted to the consideration of the House, in fact a majority of them, are cases which have already been submitted to the Pension Department and on account of the technical construction that department is required to give them have been rejected, and they must be before they can be considered by this House. If the evidence is full, if all the points are covered, the Pension Department allows the pension and it does not fall to Congress. In the years which have elapsed since the services have been rendered witnesses have died, officers have been lost sight of, and the applicants are unable to obtain testimony, and therefore they are not able to bring their cases within the law as it is interpreted. Those men are meritorious, those men are as well entitled to the gratitude of the Government as the men who have been more fortunate in collecting their evidence and who have received the favorable consideration of the Pension Department.

Now, when the gentleman says that many of these cases, as he himself demands, would not pass the scrutiny of the Pension Department he shows the reason why this House should give them favorable consideration and solve the doubt in their favor.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. POST] says this: that this case is not entitled to the consideration of this House because this man was not in the service at the time. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has best given the reason for that. The man served three years and incurred disabilities during that time which follow him to-day, and for which he has been pensioned. There is not a gentleman who will say on this floor the provision made therefor is adequate. So far as I am concerned any man who served faithfully during the whole war as this man did and incurred disability as this man did and who then at the close of the conflict was wounded in firing a salute that brought back to this country the old flag and the old Government, a salute which was heard from one end of the land to the other, I say for one, Mr. Chairman, I will pension him for that disability. [Applause.]

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I did not propose to address the House again to-night. I do not want to consume all of the time of this session in discussion. I want it to be devoted to the consideration of pension business. But as I have been alluded to by several gentlemen since I had the honor of addressing the House before, I wish to make in justice to myself a few remarks in reply.

I did not say, as represented by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, that I knew or that any member of the House knew, that pensions had been obtained by fraudulent means; but I did say that the granting of pensions in certain cases known to the members of the House is a fraud upon the country, and I gave a reason for it. It is well known that pensions are granted to numerous people who never heard the rattle of a musket or saw the smoke of a battlefield.

Mr. GOFF. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia a question?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Certainly.

Mr. GOFF. May there not be many such cases as that, and yet be meritorious cases?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Not many of them. I do not believe that men whose sole service was in driving a wagon or shoeing mules ought to be placed upon the pension-rolls of the Government.

Mr. GOFF. Still, sir, they had their duty to perform, and such duty, humble though it may have been, was just as essential for the success of the Union as that of men who carried the musket.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. It is not the duty which requires that a man should be treated as a hero. I have many such cases as that in my mind. I know some of them; and the gentleman from West Virginia is mistaken if he thinks that I do not understand this pension business.

I am well aware, as he says, that most of the cases which we are called upon to consider here are cases which are not of a character to fall within the limits of the broad acts of Congress, and that it requires, as he well expresses it, the mantle of equity to cover them. But that equity is to be stretched by an appeal to the member of Congress from the particular district, and if the Treasury of the United States is to be opened to cover all the cases which might be considered equitable in the judgment of gentlemen who want to retain their seats on this floor we will have an equity broad enough to cover every case that can be imagined.

Now, sir, as to the case under consideration; it gives an example of what equity will do. You have given or propose to give a pension in this case for a disability incurred not in the service of the Government. The man is drawing a pension now for services performed for the Government; but what is proposed to be done in addition? You propose to enlarge the pension laws by a special act, to cover a disability received after he was discharged from the service of the Government, and when the pensioner was acting under orders of an officer of the State of Indiana. Adhere to that rule, and you can put and you ought to put 100,000 additional men on the pension-roll of the country. We must stop somewhere. If the pension for deafness is not large enough, then make the statute large enough to cover it.

Why, we have a Pension Bureau here in Washington with hundreds of employés. At the last session of Congress you added one hundred and fifty, I believe—and if I make a mistake I hope some member will correct me—you added one hundred and fifty new employés for special examiners to travel over the country and hunt up evidence; and yet you are not satisfied with that. The gentleman from West Virginia wants the Government to go beyond that. He wants law and he wants equity. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is time that we ought to come to some understanding as to how far we are going.

I am not going to be placed—and I wish all gentlemen present, the gentleman from Indiana and all within the sound of my voice, to understand it—I am not going to be placed in a false position. I repeat now, because it was mentioned by him a few minutes ago, that I will give the benefit of the doubt to the defenders of the Union if you will prove to me that they were defenders. Why, sir, the gentleman from Indiana can not make an appeal—a proper appeal—to me as a soldier to which I will not respond with alacrity. I will vote pensions to the last dollar for Union soldiers who fought and bled for the country. But I do not want to give pensions to those who went into bomb-proof positions or who lay around the quartermasters' wagons, and I will not do it if I can help it.

Twenty years after the day of Appomattox—twenty years—and we have men who after a course of dissipation trace back disease to the time when they drove wagons in the army, and their names are to be put on the pension-rolls! I strike at them, I strike at the laggards who want to go and stand side by side with the brave soldiers who faced the storm of battle and welcomed death upon the battlefield. I I say I strike at them, and not at the soldiers. I honor the soldier for his services, and if it is necessary to increase his pension, or if it is right to increase it for disabilities received in the army, I will vote to increase it, but I will never establish the doctrine by any vote of mine, and I warn the House that it is a dangerous precedent, of giving a pension when the applicant was not in the service of the United States.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Suppose, by way of illustration, that a faithful soldier had fired a salute in Indiana over the late victory and lost an arm, do you think he ought to have a pension?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. No, I do not.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. That is precisely a parallel case with this. If he was a faithful and good soldier he is just as much entitled to a pension as the applicant in this case.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. Why, certainly. I say to my friend from Indiana if his committee will report that they find the disability was received in the service of the United States, that his pension ought to be increased, and if that be the deliberate judgment of that committee, I will vote to give it. But never, so help me God, to establish a precedent here will I vote to give a man a pension for disability incurred when he was not in the service of the Government. That is all I want to say. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MATSON. I wish only to say on the question of precedent that the gentleman from Virginia need not be uneasy on that account. There are many precedents for this case.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to ask my colleague a question. Did you ever see this man?

Mr. MATSON. No, sir.

Mr. STEELE. He is not in your district at all?

Mr. MATSON. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the words "in lieu of all other pensions now paid him."

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside and reported with the recommendation that it do pass?

The question being put, the Chairman stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 19.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I make the point in this case that a quorum has not voted. This is not a bill which ought to pass without a quorum.

Mr. MATSON. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow the bill to be reported to the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am willing the bill should be passed over informally and retain its place on the Calendar. This is a departure from the practice that has heretofore prevailed, which I am not willing to make without a quorum.

Mr. MATSON. I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlemana from Indiana make a motion?

Mr. MATSON. I do not. The gentleman from Alabama makes a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ROBERT C. M'KEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4012) to restore Robert C. McKee to the pension-roll; reported by Mr. MATSON from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Robert C. McKee, late a private in Company G, Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4012) to restore the name of Robert C. McKee to the pension-roll, report:

That Robert C. McKee enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company C, Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, July 6, 1861; and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability January 14, 1864, for total loss of vision of left eye and partial loss of the right. Also disability of left arm from a fracture, producing partial anchylosis of the elbow-joint, existing before enlistment.

December 1, 1866, he was pensioned at the rate of $6 per month for loss of sight of left eye and partial loss of right, which was increased to $8 per month July 23, 1870.

June, 1880, claimant was dropped from the pension-roll, by order of the Secretary of the Interior, on the charge that the disability for which the soldier was pensioned existed prior to and at the time of his enlistment in the military service of the United States.

The evidence taken by a special examiner of the Pension Office in support of this charge was ex parte, the claimant having no notice of the taking of such testimony, as is shown by the examiner's report to the honorable Commissioner of Pensions.

November 20, 1880, the claimant was indicted by a grand jury of the United States court at Indianapolis, under section 5438, Revised Statutes, for presenting false vouchers, &c., and on May 21, 1881, was tried by a jury of said court, and a verdict of "not guilty" rendered.

Hon. Charles L. Halstein, United States attorney at Indianapolis, in a letter to Attorney-General MacVeagh, says of the trial in this case: "The evidence was very conflicting, and on the evidence the verdict can not be complained of."

General J. J. Reynolds, a distinguished citizen of Indiana and a resident of La Fayette, Ind., during and since the war, in a statement before this committee, May 26, 1884, in support of the restoration of this soldier to the pension-roll, says that he mustered the Twentieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers into the United States service, and that from seeing the condition of this soldier at the time of his trial in the district court at Indianapolis he is satisfied he would not have mustered a man in such condition into the military service, and expressed the emphatic opinion that the disability of this soldier could not have existed at the time of his enlistment and muster into the service.

From an examination of all the evidence in this case, and the statement of General Reynolds to your committee, we are of opinion that a clear preponderance of the evidence is in favor of the restoration of this soldier to the pension-roll, and therefore report the accompanying bill to the House and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACKSON SHADDAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Jackson Shadday; reported by Mr. MATSON from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place the name of Jackson Shadday, late a private in Company B, One hundred and fortieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. Before he had concluded the reading,

Mr. BAGLEY said: I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the report.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Jackson Shaddy, report:

That Jackson Shaddy enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company B, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, September 15, 1864, and was honorably discharged July 11, 1865.

April 12, 1872, he filed a declaration for pension, alleging that while in the service and in the line of duty at Murfreesborough, Tenn., some time in the year 1864, a tumor was noticed on right leg, which caused a great deal of pain, and kept on getting worse until the 25th of October, 1869, when he was obliged to have it amputated; that prior to enlistment his leg was sound, and the disability was contracted wholly in the United States service. The application was rejected January 6, 1875, on the ground that present condition of soldier is not due to his military service.

Thomas B. McGregor, first lieutenant of claimant's company testifies, December 22, 1883:

"That he was present with the company from its muster-in until mustered out of service December 25, 1864; that claimant started with his company from Murfreesborough, Tenn., with other troops in pursuit of the rebel general Hood; marched to Clifton, Tenn., where we were placed on transports and sent to Washington, D. C.; from there to Fort Fisher, where we remained about ten days, and then went to Wilmington, N. C.; from there to Goldsborough, thence to Raleigh; from there to Greensborough, and after remaining there about two months went to Indianapolis, Ind., to be discharged.

"While lying at Murfreesborough, Tenn., a few days before starting on the above-named march, claimant complained of a soreness in his right leg, a short distance above the ankle-joint, which he represented as a kind of stinging pain, and I have no doubt he was suffering as he stated, as I was present and heard his statement concerning said leg. After lying or sitting for a length of time it would appear very painful to him to stand or walk on it, and during all of said first day's march he seemed to suffer from said leg, and during the afternoon and evening of said day he suffered therefrom quite severely. Said march to Clifton occupied, as near as I can state, about fifteen days, and during the whole of said time his leg grew apparently worse, and from that time up to the time of his final discharge his leg grew worse. There were times when, by resting a few days, the pain would seemingly be a little less severe, but its general tendency was to grow worse. Some ten or fifteen days after he first complained of said pain there appeared a slight protuberance of the skin on the outside of the right leg about three inches above the ankle-joint, and at the point where he complained of pain. This protuberance continued to grow in size until his discharge. Knew claimant for two years immediately prior to enlistment, and have every reason to believe, and do believe, that he was never afflicted with any disability of the nature above mentioned prior to or at the time of his enlistment; that the disability was contracted in the service and in line of duty."

Dr. Joseph Cole certifies, December 22, 1873:

"That I well knew claimant, and was the family physician of his father's family from before claimant's birth up to the time of his enlistment, and during all of said time I resided within a mile of the family, and was on terms of intimacy with all of the family, and I have every reason to believe, and do verily believe, that at the time of claimant's enlistment he was in sound and perfect health, and entirely free from tumor and all other diseases in any manner affecting his legs, or either of them."

Dr. William C. Sweezy testifies, December 22, 1873:

"That he was surgeon of claimant's regiment in the Army; never treated him in the service, but believes the disease first made its appearance in the winter of 1864 and 1865, while claimant was in the service. He first applied to me for treatment for said disease of leg in the summer of 1867, and when first called upon I found a tumor growing out from between the tibia and fibula, about midway between the ankle and knee, and removed said tumor; and after the wound healed he was apparently free from the disease for about six months, when quite a number of cancerous tumors made their appearance on different parts of the leg below the knee. In the winter of 1868-'69, soon after these tumors began to slough and amputation became necessary, I amputated said leg on account of said disease."

February 14, 1874, Dr. Joseph Cole testified:

"That he saw claimant in a few days after his return from the Army and he showed me the sore or disease of his right leg, and I found the same quite sore; I saw said leg every few days, from the time he first came home from the Army until it was amputated by Dr. Sweezy. When I first saw said leg the same was affected as nearly as follows: There was on the outside of said leg, and about three inches below the knee, a protuberance, which appeared to be a tumor about the size of a hen's egg, and that the same continued to grow worse until the leg was amputated in the fall of 1869. I know from personal observation that claimant was suffering from the said disease of leg continuously from the time of his discharge and return home from the Army until his leg was amputated."

Dr. R. R. Ruter, late surgeon Ninety-third Indiana Volunteers, testifies, March 11, 1882, in support of an application for reconsideration of the case filed by claimant:

"That he was personally acquainted with claimant for some time prior to the year 1861, and saw him frequently, and is satisfied that he was a sound young man; that he examined claimant in the court-room at Columbus, Ind., on or about the last of August or 1st of October, 1864; that he was examining surgeon with Dr. Collier, of Columbus; that claimant was sound in every respect, and he is satisfied from the strict examination instituted that a disabled or unsound man could not have passed, as at that time they rejected many who might possibly have stood a soldier's life."

Benjamin F. Rogers and Abraham Montague, in a joint affidavit, filed March 11, 1882, testify—

"That for ten years prior to enlistment claimant was a farmer and lived in one and a half miles of them. Before and at the time of said enlistment he was of sound health. When he returned from the war he had a lump on his right leg, which was the cause of amputation."

Andrew J. Cole, George Cole, W. W. Colton, and Alexander L. Thompson testify in a joint affidavit, filed May 11, 1882, that they were neighbors of claimant, and saw his limb a short time before enlistment and know it was sound.

The reputation of the above witnesses is shown to be good by the postmaster at Bennington, Switzerland County, Indiana.

John P. Bute, M. D., United States examining surgeon, of Vevay, Ind., in an examination of claimant March 4, 1874, says:

"Jackson Shaddy's right leg has been amputated 4 inches below the knee joint. The stump is healthy. He can wear an artificial limb without difficulty. I recommend he be paid $18 per month."

February 20, 1874, Jordan Wainscott, a neighbor of claimant, addressed a letter to the Pension Office, in which he charged that the disease which caused the amputation of the soldier's leg was the result of injuries received while a child by a fall.

On receipt of this letter by the Pension Office the case was placed in the hands of Special Examiner L. C. Black for investigation.

In this investigation a number of witnesses, all neighbors of claimant, were examined, and in this number was Wainscott, the author of the letter, and his wife, and the foundation for the letter is, perhaps, best given in the language of the examiner, who, in summing up the testimony, says:

"I append the testimony of Jordan Wainscott and his wife, Susan. The latter witness testifies that she attended a quilting party at the home of the claimant's mother prior to the war, and while there Mrs. Shaddy told witness that her son Jackson had injured one of his legs by a fall while yet a child, and that the leg still was weak and painful."

We have carefully examined all the evidence in this case, including that elicited by the special examiner in his investigation, and find that both medical and lay testimony clearly establish the fact that the soldier was free from disease at the time of his enlistment, the evidence tending to show prior disability being confined to neighborhood rumors that at some time while yet a boy he had been in some way injured by a fall; that later on in life he had fallen from a horse or been run over. But all this is brushed away by the testimony of his father's family physician, who says that he treated him in 1850 for an injury to his leg; that he was a sound and healthy young man prior to and at the time of his enlistment. The first appearance of the disease was while in the service, and this fact is clearly shown, as well as the continuance of the disease to the time of his discharge, and the final amputation of the leg, as a result of the disability. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH KALER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7169) granting a pension to Elizabeth Kaler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Kaler, foster-mother of George W. Kaler, late a private in Company E, Eighty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5310) granting a pension to Elizabeth Kaler, respectfully report:

That the claimant in this case is Elizabeth Kaler, stepmother of George W. Kaler, who enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company E, Eighty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, August 9, 1862, and was discharged December 6, 1862, on surgeon's certificate of disability. November 11, 1864, he again entered the military service of the United States as a private in Company E, Eighty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and died in post hospital, Richmond, Va., May 16, 1865, of typhoid fever. The soldier was never married.

September 19, 1879, Elizabeth Kaler, the stepmother of said soldier, filed a declaration for pension, which was rejected December 15, 1881, on the ground "that claimant had no title to pension as stepmother of the said soldier."

The death of the soldier in the service from disease contracted in the line of his duty is shown by the records of the Adjutant-General's Office, by the sworn testimony of Peter S. Troutman, captain of soldier's company at the time of his death, and now a reputable citizen of Fort Wayne, Ind., and by Isaac H. Cannon, a comrade of said soldier. It is shown that claimant was married to the father of said soldier in 1845; that claimant's husband died January 30, 1862, and that she has never remarried.

It is also clearly shown that the soldier prior to and during his military service contributed his means to the support of the claimant, who is without any means and was entirely dependent upon the said soldier for support.

This claim would certainly have been allowed at the Pension Office, except for the fact that her right to support by the soldier is not recognized by the law.

Your committee find claimant entitled in equity to a pension as the dependent stepmother of the deceased soldier, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute bill.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I want to call the attention of the honorable gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to a case of equity. The proposition here is to grant a pension to a stepmother whose claim could not be recognized under the pension laws because legally she was not entitled to support from the son. There was no relationship, no kinship; there was not a particle of her blood in the veins of the soldier. I shall oppose this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

The question being put, the chairman stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 45, noes 7.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE said: I would like to ask one question before the announcement of the vote is made. How old was the soldier at the time of the marriage of his father to this claimant?

Mr. MATSON. This woman raised him from his infancy.

Mr. PETERS. The report shows that the claimant was married to the father of the soldier in 1845, and that his father died in 1862. The soldier was mustered into the service when very young.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. In view of the answer which has been given to my question, I shall make no factious opposition in this case.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MATSON. Before the bill is laid aside I ask unanimous consent to add this amendment:

And that the amount of the pension be the same as if she was the mother of the said deceased soldier.

The amendment was adopted; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM HERRING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4752) granting a pension to William Herring; reported by Mr. MATSON from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William Herring, late a private in Company A, Thirteenth United States Colored Heavy Artillery, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The committee recommended that the bill be amended by striking out the second section.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4752) granting a pension to William Herring, respectfully report:

That William Herring enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company A, Thirteenth United States Colored Heavy Artillery, October 18, 1864, and was honorably discharged November 18, 1865.

July 25, 1881, he filed a declaration for pension, alleging that at or near Smithland, Ky., in December, 1864, he contracted small-pox, which settled in his eyes, causing disease of eyes, and finally destroying the sight of both eyes, which was rejected May 7, 1883, on the ground of no record and inability to satisfactorily connect the alleged disease of eyes with the service and line of duty.

Henry Bibb, colored, Jeffersonville, Ind., testifies, April 6, 1883:

"That he was a comrade of claimant; that the soldier contracted small-pox at Smithland, Ky., about Christmas, 1864. He was sent to the pest hospital, where he remained near two months; saw him when he was broke out and sent to hospital, and did not see him again until he returned to duty. When he returned to duty he complained of his eyes hurting him. Seen him each year from the time of his discharge, and he always complained of his eyes hurting him; said his eyes were getting worse. About four years ago he told me one of his eyes had gone entirely blind, and about two years ago I saw him at his sister's, and he was then entirely blind; lived on the adjoining farm and played and went with him up to our enlistment in the Army. He never had any disease or sore eyes before enlistment."

W. C. Miller, colored, Louisville, Ky., testifies, April 11, 1883:

"That he knew claimant since he was a small boy; lived on adjoining farm, and was raised along with him; he was in good health and free from any disease of the eyes prior to and at time of enlistment; saw him at discharge; his eyes were weak; he complained a great deal of them; one of his eyes went blind about one year ago; he has been blind in the other eye for three years; seen him almost every year since his discharge."

John Scott, alias Parsons, of Louisville, Ky., testifies, April 3, 1883:

"Knew claimant ever since he was a child; lived close to him, and run with him before we enlisted; he was sound in health and free from sore eyes at time of enlistment: was bunking with him in the Army; he took the small-pox, and was taken to the hospital at Smithland, Ky., about December, 1864; he was in hospital two or three months; saw him while in hospital; he had the small-pox, and his head and face were swollen as large as a water bucket; after his return his eyes were red, and he complained of them up to the time of discharge; affiant and claimant returned to their home in Logan County, Kentucky, together after discharge, where claimant remained about one year, and then went to Louisville, Ky. Next saw claimant two years afteward at affiant's house in Russellville, Ky., where he staid two or three weeks; his eyes were then very bad; could hardly see at all; they looked sore, and as if they were running water all the time; saw him again a year ago; he was then blind as a bat."

It is shown by the testimony of intimate associates and neighbors of claimant that at the time of his enlistment he was free from any disease of the eyes; comrades in the Army testify to his having small-pox while in the Army and in line of duty as a soldier; the diseased condition of his eyes at the time of his discharge, and continuously to the loss of the sight of both eyes, is shown by witnesses who had the opportunity of knowing the facts testified to, and whose reputation for truth is certified to by the examiner charged with the investigation of the case.

Your committee are of the opinion that the testimony in this case entitles the soldier to a pension, and recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all of section 2, and, when so amended, that it pass.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY ROYAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5304) for the relief of Mary Royal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary Royal, widow of William Royal, deceased, late a private in Company I, Fifty-ninth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and conditions of the pension laws.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5304) granting a pension to Mary Royal, having considered the evidence in the case, report:

That Mary Royal is the widow of William Royal, who enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company I, Fifty ninth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, June 27, 1862, and was honorably discharged July 17, 1865.

July 1, 1870, husband of claimant was pensioned for gunshot wound in left hip, received at the siege of Vicksburg, Miss., May 22, 1863, and was so borne on the pension-roll up to the time of his death, which occurred August 21, 1879, from dropsy of the bowels.

The application of Mary Royal, as widow of the said William Royal, for pension was rejected by the medical referee of the Pension Office May 14, 1883, on the ground that the death of the soldier was not due to his military service.

Dr. N. C. Burge, of Greene County, Indiana, testifies, October 1, 1880:

"That he was the family physician of William Royal from December 25, 1878, up to the time of his death. The soldier during this time was suffering from gunshot wound of left hip and with dropsy of the bowels, and continued to suffer with the same until death. It is his opinion that said wound caused dropsy of the bowels, of which he died. The soldier was confined to his bed most of the time he was treating him."

Dr. John M. Hanah, Greene County, Indiana, testifies September 11, 1880:

"That he attended William Royal in his last illness, and that he died August 21, 1879, and that his death was caused by gunshot wound of left hip; was his family physician from October, 1871, to the date of his death; that soldier was suffering from gunshot wound, and the ball was in his body, having entered the left hip, and having caused a condition which resulted in dropsy; soldier was gradually going down for the last two years of his life; the soldier had the ball in his body at the time of his death, and believes death was caused by the gunshot wound by keeping up a constant irritation of the system, as shown by constantly recurring boils, and so exhausting the system that general dropsy or anasarca supervened."

The condition of the wound and its resulting causes is shown by the report of the pension examining surgeon, December 13, 1875, who says:

"A ball struck him in the left hip about five inches back of the left hip-joint, and ranging backward about three inches, lodged against or in the left side of the lumbar vertebra, where it yet remains. It produces lameness and weakens his hip. When he takes cold it is very painful. I also find he has tenderness in the left kidney."

We have examined the evidence in this case and find that the medical evidence establishes the claim of his widow to a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLOTTA A. WELTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 298) granting a pension to Charlotta A. Welton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charlotta A. Welton, widow of John A. Welton, late second lieutenant of Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 298) to restore the name of Charlotta A. Welton to the pension-roll, report:

That Charlotta A. Welton is the widow of John A. Welton, who was a second lieutenant, Company E, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, and who died May 8, 1872.

It appears that the deceased soldier was wounded April 30, 1863, in the right leg, which was amputated on the 4th day of May subsequent. He was discharged June 20, 1864, and died March 8, 1872. He was pensioned at $15 per month on account of loss of left leg.

March 9, 1872, the name of claimant was placed on the pension-roll at the rate of $15 a month as the widow of the deceased soldier, and continued to receive such pension until July 29, 1878, when her name was dropped from the rolls, by order of the Secretary of the Interior, on the ground that the soldier's death was not due to the military service.

Isaac Smith, of Lovely Dale, Knox County, Indiana, testified before Special Examiner Charles R. Connor, June 16, 1878:

"That he is the father of claimant, and that he was frequently at the house of said deceased soldier during his last illness, in March, 1872, and knows that he was sick and confined to his house for about two weeks immediately preceding his death; that during his last illness he complained all the time of his injured leg hurting him, and the pain extended up his side into his chest; that the attending physicians at the time stated that death resulted from a fever caused by the amputated leg."

James H. Welton testifies, June 17, 1878:

"That he is a brother of the deceased soldier; that by reason of wounds received in battle he had the left leg amputated about midway between the knee and ankle; that from the time he left the Army to the time of his death, March 8, 1872, his stump was healed entirely but twice; that when a running sore his general health was good, but when the wound healed he seemed to decline, and the first time it healed he had a hard spell of sickness; that for some six weeks preceding his death his stump was healed and never again broke out; that by reason of the irritated condition of his stump he was never able to wear his artificial limb with any satisfaction; that he was bedfast just two weeks in his fatal illness, and complained that his leg hurt him very much; that Drs. J. H. Barnett, N. B. Sparks, R. B. Jessup, Courtney, Harrington, and Rollins treated deceased during his last illness; that in conversation with Drs. Barnett, Courtney, and Rollins, they invariably stated to the affiant that if it were not for the condition of the amputated limb they would have no fear of his recovery."

Albert C. Falls testifies to being present with the deceased soldier frequently on Wednesday and Thursday before his death, which occurred Friday, March 8, 1872, and he complained of his injured limb hurting him severely.

Samuel R. Snyder and wife, of Lovely Dale, neighbors of the deceased, testify to his general good health and that he died from fever and pneumonia.

Hon. George G. Reilly, a leading member of the Vincennes (Ind.) bar, and a reputable gentleman, testifies, June 14, 1878:

"That he was personally and intimately acquainted with the husband of claimant from 1866 to 1872, and conversed with him frequently in reference to the condition of his amputated limb; that he complained very much of its hurting him, and on one occasion, when the stump was seen by the witness, it was red, sore, and suppurating some; that he was never able to wear the artificial limb made for him, but was compelled to wear a wooden peg, and bore his weight on his knee; that he was not confined to his house or bed, but was up and about attending to business most if not all the time, though he time and again expressed a desire to submit to a reamputation."

W. N. Denny, of Vincennes, Ind., late colonel Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, testifies, June 12, 1878, to the wounding of claimant's husband in battle; to his general good health after his return home; that he at times complained of his amputated limb hurting him and making him very nervous from the shock to his system.

Dr. John H. Barnett, of Lovely Dale, Ind., testifies, June 13, 1878, that December 11, 1872, he made an affidavit in support of claimant's application for pension, in which he said:

"It was then my opinion, and still is, that his disease and death were superinduced by the amputation of his leg."

In a subsequent affidavit the witness says that he pronounced the soldier's disease pleuritis, but had not the leg been amputated he would have pronounced it a well-marked case of acute pneumonia.

Dr. Nathan B. Sparks, of Lovely Dale, Knox County, Indiana, testifies, June 14, 1878, to his professional treatment of the deceased soldier prior to and during his fatal illness; that he frequently consulted him in reference to the pain from the stump of the amputated limb; that he attended the soldier during his last illness, and, in his opinion, the amputated leg was the exciting cause of the fever which produced his death.

Dr. Robert Jessup, of Vincennes, testifies to treating the deceased soldier during his last illness, and attributes his death to pneumonia.

The testimony in this case is voluminous and conflicting, but the preponderance of the evidence is clearly in favor of the claimant, and your committee recommend that her name be restored to the pension-roll, and that the bill be amended by striking out the words "place on," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the words "restore to," and by adding the following after the word "volunteers," in line 7, "to take effect from and after the passage of this act," and that when so amended the bill do pass.

The following amendments reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions were read and agreed to:

In line 4, strike out the words "place on" and insert the words "restore to."

At the end of the bill add the words "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM BOONE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 374) granting a pension to William Boone.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that this bill be passed over informally. The circumstances are similar to those involved in the bill which was discussed so much this evening. While the two cases are not exactly alike, there is so much similarity that it would perhaps be a waste of time to enter upon the consideration of this bill to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be passed over informally.

There was no objection.

CAPT. ISRAEL STOUGH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1940) granting a pension to Capt. Israel Stough.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Israel Stough, late captain Company F, Forty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1940) granting a pension to Israel Stough respectfully report:

That Israel Stough was mustered into the military service of the United States as captain Company F, Forty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers September 25, 1861, and was honorably discharged September 23, 1863, on account of physical disability.

November 23, 1879, he filed a declaration for pension, alleging that while in the service and line of duty at Barboursville, Ky., in the month of March or April, 1863, he was taken sick with camp fever, resulting in a partial paralysis of the lumbar muscles and sciatic nerves, causing chronic disease of the same, or lumbago and sciatica, which was rejected June 30, 1881, on record evidence that the disability existed prior to his entering the military service of the United States.

John H. Rodgers testifies, July 16, 1879:

"That he was assistant surgeon Forty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and was well acquainted with claimant; that he verily believes said claimant at the date of his enlistment was a man of very good and sound health, and continued so up until affiant left the regiment, about January 15, 1863."

A. O. Mitchell, late major Forty-fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, testifies, March 15, 1879:

"That he was well acquainted with claimant; that at or near Barboursville, Ky., in March or April, 1867, said claimant was taken sick with camp fever or typho-malarial form, which seemed to affect him more or less afterward; he well remembers when said claimant was taken sick; that previous to that time he had always been a prompt and faithful soldier."

Henry Hinkle testifies, January 4, 1881:

"That he was well and intimately acquainted with claimant prior to and at the date of his enlistment; that at that time he was a man of remarkably good health in every respect, and especially free from lumbago and sciatica, or any disease of that character; that he has been intimately acquainted with claimant from the time he returned from the Army until about the month of May, 1871, and during that time soldier was and continued to be suffering with a partial paralysis of the lumbar muscles and sciatic nerves."

J. G. Arnold, M. D., testifies, April 13, 1881:

"That he has been the family physician of claimant since August, 1879, to the present time; that claimant was suffering from lumbago or sciatica; also functional disorder of the heart, caused by a chronic affection of the lumbar and sciatic nerves and general debility."

After having served in the campaigns of West Virginia and Kentucky, and participating in the battles of Fayetteville, Gauley, Charleston, Va., and Dutton Hill, Kentucky, the soldier was examined by a board of officers at Columbus, Ohio, August 13, 1863. The board say that claimant stated that when a boy he received an injury of the lumbar region by a fall on his back, and had since been subject to weakness.

Your committee have examined the evidence in this case very carefully, and find that the soldier was in good health at the time of entering the military service; that he performed the active duties of a soldier for nearly —— years, participating in the hardships and battles of a campaign in West Virginia and Kentucky; that while he may have been injured when a boy, he was regularly mustered into the service, and under the well-defined policy of the committee on the question of the physical soundness of the soldier at the time of enlistment your committee are of the opinion that he is entitled to the relief sought for, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

DANIEL H. ROSS.

The next business in order was the bill (H. R. 391) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Daniel H. Ross, late a private in Company B, First Regiment, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. This act to take effect from and after its passage.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 391) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross, respectfully report:

That the claim in this case is based on disease of the eyes, resulting from cold contracted in the military service of the United States and in the line of duty.

It is shown that the physical health of the soldier was good prior to and at date of enlistment.

Captain Ruter, Patriot, Switzerland County, Indiana, testifies, August 7, 1880:

"That claimant was a member of his company, and while in line of duty on the Mississippi River, near Saint Louis, Mo., March 20, 1862, from exposure contracted a heavy cold, which settled in his eyes, causing inflammation, which became chronic. Knows these facts from personal knowledge."

Dr. G. L. Spooner testifies, May 17, 1880, that he treated claimant in 1873 for amaurosis of the eye, which has been his trouble since 1865.

Henry Mead and Aaron Z. Taylor testify, May 17, 1880, that they have been neighbors of claimant since 1867, during which time he has been suffering with partial blindness of the eye and continuous headache, and that he has been disabled by the same each year one-half.

Asa E. Siters and J. T. Calvin, Goldsmith, Tipton County, Indiana, testify, May 29, 1882, that they have lived neighbors to claimant since he came home, in 1865, and know that when he returned home he was badly injured by some eye disease, both eyes being affected from 1865 to 1878, and that he was wholly unable to work: he has been in same condition since 1881.

Dr. Thomas C. Whaldrill, Goldsmith, Tipton County, Indiana, testifies, May 30, 1882:

"That he was claimant's family physician in 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1881, and 1882, and during those years he was troubled with his eyes, which is incurable, and he is unable to do manual labor one-half of the time."

June 15, 1881, claimant was examined by the United States examining board of Vevay, Ind., who report:

"Has double cataract. The left eye is most seriously affected. The lens of this eye is distinctly nebulous. The lens of the right eye is affected very slightly. Can distinguish near objects pretty well; can not read well, however; rated at $4."

"The records of the Adjutant-General show that Daniel H. Ross enlisted in the military service of the United States as a private in Company D, Eighteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, August 16, 1861, and was mustered out at Benton Barracks, Missouri, January 3, 1863, to enlist in the Mississippi Marine Brigade December 31, 1864, he was mustered out with the company at Vicksburg, Miss., by reason of his services being no longer required. January 26, 1865, he enlisted in Company E, One hundred and eighty-ninth Ohio Volunteers, and was honorably discharged September 28, 1865."

The records of the Surgeon-General's Office show the treatment of claimant in hospital for diarrhea, and it is on this record that he is unable to complete his claim in the Pension Office, as he has been unable to find the surgeon or any of the officers of the steamer Diana, where he was on detached service at the time of being treated. And that he has been unable to find the surgeon or any commissioned officer of Company B of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, of which he was a member at the time of the incurrence of his said disability.

The examiner in charge of claimant's case in the Pension Office says, September 25, 1882:

"I have searched in the records of office, &c., of the Mississippi Marine Brigade. Can not obtain addresses," &c.

That by reason of these facts he can not complete his case in the Pension Office.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claim of the soldier is clearly made out, and recommend that the bill be amended by inserting after the word "Regiment," in line 6, the words "Mississippi Marine Brigade," and that, when so amended, the bill pass.

The following amendment, reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, and agreed to:

After the words "First Regiment" insert "Mississippi Marine Brigade."

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALICE RILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6590) granting arrears of pension to Alice Riley.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alice Riley, of Troy, Rensselaer County, New York, mother of William Riley, late a private in Company B, First New Jersey Artillery Volunteers, in the war of 1861, a pension at the rate of $8 per month from the date of the stoppage of the pension of the said William Riley by reason of holding an appointment as clerk in the general service, War Department, March 5, 1865, up to the death of said William Riley, September 26, 1868.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6590) granting arrears of pension to Alice Riley, having considered the same, beg leave to make the following report:

The petitioner asks Congress to pass the accompanying bill, which gives her the amount that accrued to her son as pension, and which was withheld from him by reason of his holding an appointment as a clerk in the War Department, for the time for which his pension was suspended to the time of his death. Her petition to Congress states the case, and is as follows:

"Your petitioner, Alice Riley, of Troy, Rensselaer County, New York, respectfully represents that she is the mother of William Riley, deceased, private of Company B, First New Jersey Artillery Volunteers, in the war of 1861, who was a pensioner at the rate of $8 a month, by reason of wounds received at the battle of Gettysburg, Pa.

"Your petitioner represents that her said son received his pension until he was appointed a clerk in the general service of the War Department, when he was deprived of his said pension by said appointment; that since her son's death all clerks in said general service of the War Department have been paid all sums withheld from them by reason of being in said service, and that she now applies for the amount due her son from the date of his appointment, March 5, 1865, up to the date of his death, September 26, 1868, which he would have received had he lived.

"Your petitioner further represents that she applied to the Pension Office for the amount of pension which she claims is due her said son, and complied with all the rules and forms required."

She states that her son was not married, and that she depended upon him in her old age for support. She finally received a certificate, No. 28663, and was informed that the amount of pay was subject to provisions of section 25, act of March 3, 1873, which reads and provides payment only to the widow and children.

The mother asks that the amount of pension due her said son, as stated, may be paid to her, being an amount at the rate of $8 per month from March 5, 1865, when he was appointed a clerk, to the date of his death, September 26, 1868.

The committee think that this mother should have the amount asked for, although existing law does not give her a title. There is neither widow nor children to whom this amount would go under the law. The mother is clearly shown to have been dependent, and is now in needy circumstances. Her application for mother's pension was rejected on the ground that it is not known that the soldier died of any disease contracted in the service and line of duty. The amount she will receive is about $336. The committee think as the employés in the civil service received the amount withheld for the time being, that the amount which would have been paid to William Riley had he lived should now be paid to his mother, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, and that the title be amended so as to read, "for the relief of Alice Riley."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it appears to me this is not in fact a pension bill, and was not properly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, though the House, of course, had power to make the reference. I will ask that the order under which the House is now acting be read. I wish to see whether we are confined this evening to pension bills. If so, I shall make a point of order upon this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

That until the further order of this House, on each Friday the House will take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall be considered.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I see the bill is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Before that is done I would like to ask this question: If an administrator should be appointed upon the estate of this young man, could he not go before the Court of Claims and recover this amount which, as the committee say, was due the young man by the Government at the time of his death? If this young man had a claim against the Government for a pension during the years when he was working in the Department, and if he died without collecting the amount, the right to it would vest under the law in his administrator or executor—his personal representative, unless there is some provision in the pension laws which would operate to the contrary. I would like to hear from some gentleman on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama submit the question to the Chair as a parliamentary question?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. No, sir; I submit it to the gentleman who has charge of this bill.

Mr. MATSON. I refer the gentleman from Alabama to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN ALSTYNE], who introduced the bill.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this bill, and I copied it from a bill which had been introduced in the previous Congress, but at so late a day that it was not acted on. The facts are simply these: The son of the proposed beneficiary had been getting a pension by reason of wounds received in battle. By virtue of his qualifications and personal merits he received an appointment under the Government as a clerk in the War Department. The Pension Bureau, or the authorities controlling that question, had established a rule that all persons receiving a pension who were subsequently appointed to a Government office should not receive the pension so long as they were in the service of the Government.

Mr. WOLFORD. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Certainly.

Mr. WOLFORD. Had the Pension Department any authority for establishing such a rule?

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. The law itself was to that effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was formerly the law.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. Subsequently that law was changed, so that all the persons serving the Government in a civil capacity who were entitled to pension received their back pay. After the death of this young man his mother applied to the Department for a pension on the ground of being dependent, and that the death of the soldier was in consequence of the wound he had received in the service. The proof, in the judgment of the department, failed to show that fact, and the application was denied. She then came to Congress for relief. Her bill was introduced, and by accident I happened to meet the member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions having this bill in hand while at the office of the Pension Department, and the matter was called to the attention of that department, and they stated that all the equities were in the interest of this woman, and that had the department the power they would not hesitate to grant the pension.

Now, as to the question which has been raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] the law is this: The right not existing to this pension on the part of the deceased soldier at the time of his death no person under God's heaven had a claim to it. If an administrator had been appointed he could not have obtained it; and this woman is only entitled to it by the gracious act of this House.

I submit to you, sir, so far as equity and justice are concerned—you may call it charity if you please—this is a case which addresses itself with great force to the favorable consideration of the House. This soldier was faithful and brave, and received his injury in the service. His mother is a woman of refinement and culture. She is extremely poor, and her necessity demands that she should receive the recognition she asks. Therefore I hope any objection either to the form of the bill or its merits will be withdrawn, and that it will be permitted to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BAGLEY] having resumed the chair, Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report back sundry bills with various recommendations.

Bills of the following titles, reported from the committee without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 4012) to restore Robert C. McKee to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Jackson Shadday;
A bill (H. R. 5304) for the relief of Mary Royal; and
A bill (H. R. 1940) granting a pension to Capt. Israel Stough.

Amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House to bills of the following titles were severally agreed to, and the bills as amended were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 391) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross;
A bill (H. R. 298) granting a pension to Charlotta A. Welton;
A bill (H. R. 4752) granting a pension to William Herring;
A bill (H. R. 7169) granting a pension to Elizabeth Kaler;
A bill (H. R. 3065) granting a pension to Emma De Long; and
A bill (H. R. 6590) granting arrears of pension to Alice Riley.

The bill (H. R. 2635) granting a pension to John H. Cook, reported from the Committee of the Whole House adversely, was laid upon the table.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the several votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MATSON (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House, in compliance with a previous order, adjourned till Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Petition of Mary H. Bush, to have her claim referred to the Court of Claims to correct errors in the decision of Southern Claims Commission—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of the Louisiana Educational Society, in favor of the Blair educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. FORNEY: Joint resolution of General Assembly, State of Alabama, relative to the completion of the work on the Muscle Shoals, in said State—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. A. S. HEWITT: Papers relating to the claims of Gustave Elsberg and Jacob Amberg—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Petition of 800 citizens of Massachusetts, for the passage of the resolution of Mr. HOPKINS relative to the transportation of cattle—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PAIGE: Petition of citizens of Summit County, Ohio, for a pension to Elizabeth Adams; also, for a general pension law—severally to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, of citizens of Summit County, Ohio, for the equalization of bounties—to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

By Mr. RIGGS: Petition of Post No. 289, Department of Illinois, for passage of H. R. 6463—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Petition of Ensign Gilbert Morton, for relief—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill, with Senate amendments, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. ARNOT: Of soldiers of the late war, from the State of New York.

By Mr. BAGLEY: Of citizens of Greene County and of Prattsville, N. Y.

By Mr. BELMONT: Of C. A. Bates and 75 others, citizens of Queens County; of William Underhill and 54 others, citizens of Richmond County, and of Andrew Chickchester and 65 others, citizens of Amityville, N. Y.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Of E. S. Frazier and others, of Milford, Me.

By Mr. BOYLE: Of citizens of Belle Vernon, Pa., of Fall City, and of Harrison City, Pa.

By Mr. BREITUNG: Of citizens of Crystal Falls and of Evart, Mich.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Of citizens and ex-soldiers of the counties of Wayne, Randolph, Rush, and Delaware, Indiana.

By Mr. BRUMM: Of citizens of Clinton, Pa.

By Mr. COSGROVE: Of citizens of New Frankfort, Mo.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Of citizens of Shelby, Mich.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Of Joseph Littlefield & Co. and others, of East Stoneham and Lowell, Me.

By Mr. DOCKERY: Of citizens of Daviess and Mercer Counties, Missouri.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Of Horace Bisbee and 98 others, of Monroe County; of James F. Herrington and 82 others, of Washtenaw County; of Eli Winchell, and 63 others, of Hillsdale County; of Milo Smith and 117 others, of Washtenaw County, Michigan.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Of H. R. Anthony and others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. FYAN: Of citizens of Seneca, Mo.

By Mr. GEDDES: Of W. F. Walcott and 51 others, citizens of La Grange, Ohio.

By Mr. GIBSON: Of citizens of West Virginia.

By Mr. H. H. HATCH: Of citizens of Indian River, of Elmira, and of Vassar, all in Michigan.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Of C. R. Ingraham and 40 others, citizens of Afton; and of S. S. Morrow and 20 others, of Thayer, Iowa.

By Mr. HILL: Of C. E. Reynolds and 50 others, of Henry County; of J. B. Wibel and 64 others, of Ashton; of H. B. Ferguson and 65 others, of Paulding County; of Washington Young and 150 others, of North Baltimore, and of C. M. Walling and 200 others, of Milton Centre, all in Ohio.

By Mr. HOUSEMAN: Of A. P. Meyer and others, of Sparta; of Frank Storms, Plainwell, Allegan County; of H. H. Hatliff and 100 others, of Kiddville, Ionia County; and of George W. Rockwell and 100 others, of Allegan, Mich.

By Mr. HOWEY: Of citizens of Hunterdon County, New Jersey.

By Mr. JOHNSON: Of W. H. Tefft and others, of Ticonderoga; of W. H. Dunn and others, of Weaverton; and of S. A. Ormsby and others, of Horicon, N. Y.

By Mr. KEAN: Of 28 citizens of Kingston, N. J.

By Mr. KELLEY: Of 62 residents of Philadelphia, Pa.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Of citizens of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

By Mr. LAMB: Of Bruce Post, No. 273, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana; and of 103 citizens of Crawfordsville, Ind.

By Mr. McCORMICK: Of citizens of Hoadley, Ohio.

By Mr. MILLARD: Of citizens of Lake Ridge, N. Y.

By Mr. MITCHELL: Of citizens of Ansonia and of Moodus, Conn.

By Mr. MURRAY: Of W. C. M. Brookins and 100 others, of Eaton; of W. H. C. Steele and 25 others, of Gratio; of James Woodward and 200 others, of Montgomery County; of W. D. McKemey and 100 others, of Dayton, and of 3,000 inmates of the National Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio.

By Mr. PAIGE: Of Jacob Adams and others, of Summit County, Ohio.

By Mr. RANNEY: Of John H. Jackson and others, of Boston, Mass.

By Mr. REED: Of citizens of Yarmouthville, Me.

By Mr. ROCKWELL: Of George A. Shepard and eighty others, of Sandisfield, Mass.

By Mr. J. H. ROGERS: Of citizens of Arkansas.

By Mr. ROWELL: Of citizens of Kane and of Stanford, Ill.

By Mr. SEYMOUR: Of W. F. Bellany and others, of Woodbury; of Marshall W. Dowd and others, of Westminster; and of James R. Strout and others, of Fairfield County, Connecticut.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Of citizens of Springfield, &c., Ill.

By Mr. STEVENS: Of 209 ex-soldiers.

By Mr. STORM: Of soldiers and citizens of Pike County, and of Capt. C. B. Brockway and 150 others, of Bloomsburg, Pa.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Of William S. Wood and 56 others.

By Mr. THOMAS: Of 63 citizens of Belknap, and of 64 citizens of Pulaski County, Ill.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Of 327 citizens of Hamilton and other counties, Illinois.

By Mr. WASHBURN: Of 220 citizens and soldiers of Anoka, Minn.

By Mr. WHITE: Of 63 citizens of Rochester, Minn.

By Mr. WOOD: Of citizens of Delphi, Ind., and of Atar City, Ind.

By Mr. WORTHINGTON: Of J. S. Atherton and 63 others, of La Fayette; of L. W. Ewing and 62 others, of Oneida; of D. H. Holcomb and 60 others, of Ravenswood; of J. E. Thomas and 65 others, of Wataga; and of T. A. Boyd and 180 others, of Lewiston, Ill.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 15, 1884.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, as required by law, lists of allowed and disallowed claims for losses by postmasters from fire, burglary, and other casualties. The Chair understands by a note at the foot of the letter that the documents referred to have been sent with a similar communication to the House of Representatives. The letter, if there be no objection, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon the subject of the right of way required by the Jamestown and Northern Railway Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation in Dakota; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs setting forth the embarrassment to the service growing out of the provision in the law requiring that the appropriation for the support of the Indian industrial school at Lawrence, Kans. ($50,000), shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance of not exceeding $175 for the support and education of each scholar; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs inclosing a claim for $2,000 of the bureau of Catholic missions of Washington, D. C., on account of the support, education, &c., of twenty additional pupils at the boys' school on the Flathead reservation in Montana under its control during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, in excess of their contract for that year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VEST. I suggest that it should go first to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I think that would be the appropriate reference. I do not see the chairman of the committee here, but I know he takes considerable interest in that matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, if there be no objection, the reference will be changed from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair hears no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Timothy Kibby, of Dayton, Ohio, praying for relief in the form of back pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a memorial of James W. Smith, of Springfield, Ill., first vice-president of the International Federation of Trade and Labor Unions of the United States and Canada; a memorial of Mark L. Crawford, president of the Chicago Trade and Labor Assembly, on behalf of 30,000 workmen; a memorial of the Chicago Trade and Labor Assembly; and a memorial of Richard Powers, of Chicago, vice-chairman of the legislative committee of the labor organizations of the United States, urging the passage of the bill to prohibit the importation of foreign labor under contract. I move the reference of the memorials to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. BLAIR. The labor bill to which the memorials presented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] have reference was reported from the committee favorably and is upon the Calendar. I therefore suggest that the memorials lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the memorials presented by the Senator from Illinois, instead of being referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, will be laid upon the table.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of Theodore J. Eckerson, major and quartermaster, United States Army, praying to be placed on the retired-list of the Army on January 22, 1885, with additional rank; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a memorial of members of the Society of California Pioneers and others, praying that relief be granted Rev. C. M. Blake, chaplain United States Army, retired; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of citizens of Nebraska, praying that a pension be granted Polly Young, widow of Jesse Young, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Lincoln Post, No. 140, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, praying for the publication in the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Bourbon County, Kansas, praying for legislation relative to New York Indian lands in that county; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM presented the petition of Sally C. Mulligan, mother of James S. Mulligan, late Company I, Twenty-first Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for arrearages of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of Hugh S. Thompson, governor of South Carolina, James F. Tylar, Ashbury Coward, Charles H. Simonton, George L. Buist, S. McGowan, H. McIver, F. W. McMaster, and the faculty of the South Carolina College, in relation to House bill 7498 to establish agricultural experiment stations; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of officers of the Army, praying for the passage of the bill to facilitate promotions throughout the Army by retiring from active service, upon their own application, officers of the Army who served in the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Patrick Henry, commissary-sergeant United States Army, Fort Sidney, Nebraska, praying legislation favorable to private soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Decatur, Ill; a memorial of cigar-makers of Peoria, Ill.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Springfield, Ill.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Jacksonville, Ill.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Morris, Ill.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Alton, Ill.; a memorial of August Schulze, of New York; a memorial of the Chicago Trade and Labor Assembly; a memorial of cigar-makers of Ottawa, Ill.; a memorial of tobacco-dealers and cigar-makers of Chicago, Ill.; and a memorial of the Illinois Peace Society, remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN. I present a petition from soldiers resident in many parts of the United States making the following prayer:

We, the undersigned, ex-soldiers of the late Union Army, desirous of perpetuating in the best possible manner the memory of the late Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, do most respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to purchase the faithful representation of him in Miss C. L. Ransom's full-length life-size portrait, and to give it a suitable place for preservation and exhibition in the Capitol in Washington.

I also present 241 petitions, signed by 7,608 discharged soldiers, to the same effect.

I desire to say in presenting these petitions that I have frequently examined the portrait referred to and I consider it a most excellent likeness of General Thomas. I hope the Committee on the Library will take action in reference to the matter and make a report either for or against the proposition. I should be very glad myself to see a favorable report made, for I think it is a very good portrait, and Congress ought to purchase it.

I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I present the petition of the National Eclectic Medical Association, asking the Congress of the United States to enact a bill to secure to the medical profession equal rights in the service of the United States as an act of justice to a large number of citizens, an improvement and reform of the former practice and demanded by the best interests of individuals, &c. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of Arnold A. Rand and Albert Ordway, of Washington, D. C., praying that the Government purchase their collection of photographic negatives illustrating the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of F. D. Hammond Post, No. 141, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts; the petition of Moses Ellis Post, No. 117, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, and the petition of Henry Bryant Post, No. 98, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, praying for the publication in the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I present certain papers which are not in the form of a petition, but which relate to a private bill now before the Committee on Military Affairs, being the bill (H. R. 263) for the relief of George F. Bicknell. I move the reference of the papers to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

A petition of members of the Stationers' Board of Trade of New York, praying for the passage of a national bankrupt law; and

A petition of business men of Des Moines, Iowa, in relation to the enactment of a bankrupt law.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2422) for the erection of a statue to the memory of General La Fayette, reported it with amendments.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them adversely; and they were indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 1671) for the judicial ascertainment of the facts in private claims, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1534) in relation to courts and judicial proceedings in the Territories.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, which was directed by a resolution of the 11th of February, 1884, to examine and report what legislation is necessary, if any, to restrict the appointment of special assistant attorneys and special agents or detectives in the Department of Justice, submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported a bill (S. 2436) to enable the President to accept invitations of foreign governments to international exhibitions and to appoint commissions thereto; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am instructed by the committee to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read at length for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read the second time at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object. Let it be printed, and it can be called up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PORTS OF PORTLAND AND PORT TOWNSEND.

Mr. DOLPH. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2391) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, to report it favorably, without amendment, and to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GARLAND in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PLATT. I should prefer to have the bill read first for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It extends to the port of Portland, Oreg., the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," and the privileges of the first and seventh sections of the act to the port of Port Townsend, in Washington Territory; the privileges in each case to be exercised on the same terms and conditions applicable to other ports as provided in the act of which this is amendatory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT OF OMAHA.

Mr. DOLPH. I am also instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2269) to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the port of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, to report it favorably without amendment. The bill is favorably recommended by the Treasury Department, and I am directed to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill reported by him be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only criticism I have to make is that I do not see why the Senator does not have all these places named in one bill. We have already passed one in regard to Portland, Oreg. The original law, of which this is an amendment, embraced quite a number of ports. Probably it is proper that Portland and Omaha should also be named; but it seems to me that one bill would cover the whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the consideration of the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to know, as a matter of practical administration of the office at Omaha, how goods can be appraised there. There is no appraiser's office at Omaha, I understand.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that the surveyor of customs, there being such an official at Omaha, has the power of appraisement under the law and the rules of the Treasury Department. This bill in its present form is one that is recommended by the Treasury Department, and they say that no additional officer is needed at that port.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to know that. That is probably true at present, but of course if these several ports are made ports where goods are to be regularly entered and appraised we shall soon have all the machinery of a custom-house found to be necessary at each place. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, however.

Mr. McPHERSON. I think I shall object to the further consideration of the bill at this time. While, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] says, the law does permit the present customs officers to appraise goods, I think in the majority of cases where the operation of the law has been extended new officers have been appointed. Until I can examine more fully into the circumstances I should like to have the bill go over.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to say to the Senator from New Jersey that Omaha is one of the ports mentioned in the act of June 10, 1880. It was then admitted to the right of immediate transportation of dutiable goods, but was excluded by the action of the Secretary of the Treasury under the proviso to that act, which was construed by him to grant him that power. The matter has now been referred to the Treasury Department, and in the present condition of affairs, there being such a vast increase of importation of goods at that port, the Secretary now recommends that this privilege be granted to that port. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will withdraw his objection and allow the bill, which has passed the scrutiny of the Treasury Department and also of the Commitee on Commerce, to become a law.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to say further, that with respect to the scrutiny of the Treasury Department, of which the honorable Senator speaks, upon the question of appointing new officers, sometimes they do not scrutinize as closely as I should like to have them do. I think no harm will come, no particular damage can result to the interests of Omaha, if the bill should go over for a day or two, as it probably will under my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he called for objection, and stated (as the Senator from Iowa had taken the floor, he saying that he had no objection, and as the Chair heard no objection), that the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; but inasmuch as the Senator from Iowa had risen, the Chair will treat the objection of the Senator from New Jersey as having been made at the time. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill may come up as unfinished business to-morrow. It is important that the question should be decided for that port as soon as may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill objected to by the Senator from New Jersey may come up at the head of the Calendar under Rule VIII to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not know the necessity of this special and particular case. Perhaps I should be willing to have the bill come up to-morrow morning; perhaps I should make no objection to it then, but——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to state that debate is not in order.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I only wish to explain the reason of my objection, if unanimous consent can be given for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from New Jersey will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better proceed with the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2437) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gordon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2438) granting a pension to Rachel Fleming Cellar; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2439) authorizing the Interstate Rapid Transit Railway Company to build a bridge across the Kansas River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2440) for the relief of Benjamin F. Fox; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2441) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois," approved May 9, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2442) to increase the efficiency of the infantry branch of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2443) granting an increase of pension to Polly Young; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2444) granting an increase of pension to General S. W. Price; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 2445) to regulate the letting of mail contracts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2446) for the relief of William M. Keightley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LAPHAM introduced a bill (S. 2447) to remove the charge of desertion against Daniel Morris, of Company F, Fortieth Regiment of New York State Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2448) for the relief of Sally C. Mulligan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 2449) to provide for the distribution of the Statutes of the United States and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to designated incorporated bodies, institutions, and associations within the several States and Territories; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WILSON. I have received a communication from the Secretary of the Interior approving the object of the bill. Although the communication is quite brief I shall not ask to have it read, but I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The paper was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 26, 1884.

SIR: Replying to your communication of the 24th instant, regarding the supply of the Jefferson County library with certain public documents, I have the honor to say that no copies of the Statutes at Large or of Revised Statutes are furnished this Department for distribution. It receives only a sufficient number of copies for its own use and the use of its several bureaus and offices. These documents are now put at the disposal of the honorable the Secretary of State, under whose supervision they are distributed, and from whom it is possible that those needed to complete the set in the library above mentioned may be secured.

In this connection I beg to say that the only two important documents printed by the Government with which depositories of documents in the several States and Congressional districts of the Union are not supplied from this Department are the Statutes of the United States and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, provision having been made for furnishing said depositories with every other document ordered by Congress. It is very much to be desired that some provision should be made, without unnecessary delay, by which the RECORD and the statutes should also be included in the documents furnished these institutions, in order that there may be found at every depository of public documents a copy of these, among the most important of Government publications, as well as of those for the supply of which provision has already been made. A joint resolution embodying such a provision, submitted with a statement of reasons for the same, would doubtless be adopted by the Senate, as it would probably be admitted that if any documents are to be supplied to institutions as depositories of Government publications, these certainly ought to be included in the number.

Very respectfully,

M. L. JOSLYN,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. JAMES F. WILSON, U. S. Senate.

Mr. WILSON introduced a bill (S. 2450) to repeal the joint resolution approved June 14, 1878, authorizing the purchase of such plate-iron and other material as may enter into the construction of steam-boilers for the Navy without advertising for bids to furnish the same; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Expenditures of Public Money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that reference will be made.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that that is a matter which should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to say that the Committee on Expenditures of Public Money has no disposition to encroach upon the jurisdiction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but that committee is considering this subject. I wish to have the bill considered in that connection, and then if we come to a conclusion I shall have no objection to the bill being reported and sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs, if it is deemed proper.

Mr. HALE. The bill relates to a very important part of the operations of the Navy Department, and ultimately I think it should go to the committee representing that branch. If the Senator's committee is considering that subject, with the understanding that he has mentioned, I have no objection to its going to that committee first.

Mr. WILSON. I have certainly no desire to assume any jurisdiction belonging to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and if there should be in the course of the consideration of this subject any seeming encroachment I should be willing to have the subject, when resolved upon by the Committee on Expenditures of Public Money, go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the reference suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Expenditures of Public Money.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 2451) for the protection of forests on the public domain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2452) granting a pension to Mary M. J. Frank; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2453) to amend the act giving approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLER, of California, introduced a bill (S. 2454) to provide for the enlargement of the Yosemite Valley and Mariposa Big Tree Grove grants; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COINAGE OF SILVER DOLLARS.

Mr. MORRILL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall direct the suspension of the purchase of silver bullion and the coinage of standard silver dollars at the mints of the United States, under the act of February 28, 1878, whenever the amount of silver coin, in excess of silver certificates, shall exceed $70,000,000; and the purchase of bullion and coinage of standard dollars, as aforesaid, shall be resumed at any time when the same shall be required in order to keep and retain in the Treasury an amount of silver coin in excess of silver certificates of not less than $60,000,000.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase as bullion any trade-dollars which may be presented previous to the 1st day of February, 1886, in sums of not less than $20, and to pay therefor the market value of silver bullion when so presented, and in addition — per cent. premium. And the trade-dollars so purchased shall not again be reissued, but shall form a part of the silver bullion authorized to be purchased from time to time under the act of February 28, 1878."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its

Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4012) to restore Robert C. McKee to the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Jackson Shadday;

A bill (H. R. 5304) for the relief of Mary Royal;

A bill (H. R. 1949) granting a pension to Capt. Israel Stough;

A bill (H. R. 391) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross;

A bill (H. R. 298) granting a pension to Charlotta A. Welton;

A bill (H. R. 4752) granting a pension to William Herring;

A bill (H. R. 7169) granting a pension to Elizabeth Kaler;

A bill (H. R. 3065) granting a pension to Emma De Long;

A bill (H. R. 6590) for the relief of Alice Riley; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 2041) granting the right of way to the city of Newport, R. I., over the breakwater at Goat Island;

A bill (S. 2402) authorizing the Secretary of State to procure duplicates of certain French and American medals; and Joint resolution (S. R. 191) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution concerning the opening ceremonies of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition at New Orleans, La., on the 16th instant.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (7428) to authorize the Hillsborough National Bank to change its name to that of the First National Bank of Hillsborough, Ohio; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 289) authorizing the Superintendent of the Census to continue the work on the Tenth Census.

DEBATE ON SPANISH TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further bills or joint resolutions that order is closed. "Concurrent or other resolutions" are in order, and the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], which went over under objection. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK December 11, as follows:

Whereas a commercial treaty of great importance has been negotiated between the United States and Spain, which was made public by the King of Spain to such extent that it was cabled from Madrid by the Times of New York city, and given to the American people by that journal before the same was presented with becoming solemnity and secrecy to the Senate;

Whereas the provisions of said treaty materially affect the subject of revenues and taxation, involving no serious questions of diplomacy and state secrets, the discussions thereof should be in open session, so that the people may be fully apprised of the reasons why said treaty should be ratified or rejected: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to report an amendment, or additional rule, requiring that treaties which concern matters of revenue shall be considered in open session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MILLER, of California. As the Committee on Foreign Relations has a similar resolution to this now under consideration, I move that this resolution be referred to that committee.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question that that should be considered in secret session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I raise the question that this resolution should be considered in executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that this resolution be considered with closed doors. Is that request seconded?

Several SENATORS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. May I be referred to the rule under which the request is made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XXXV is as follows:

On a motion made and seconded to close the doors of the Senate, on the discussion of any business which may, in the opinion of a Senator, require secrecy, the presiding officer shall direct the galleries to be cleared; and during the discussion of such motion the doors shall remain closed.

Is there a second to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HAWLEY. I second the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is seconded. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate, with closed doors, proceeded to consider the resolution. After sixteen minutes the doors were reopened.

THE NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has been formally invited to attend the opening ceremonies of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition to be inaugurated at New Orleans on Tuesday, December 16, 1884; and

Whereas the exigencies of the public service prevent their attendance on said day; and

Whereas the President of the United States has decided to open said exposition by telegraph and to start the machinery thereof by electricity from the Executive Mansion in the presence of his Cabinet and the representatives of foreign powers; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States entertains for said exposition the best wishes and desires to lend to its success its countenance and good-will: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring therein), That the President of the Senate, together with a committee of thirteen Senators to be appointed by him, and the Speaker of the House together with one Representative or Delegate from each State and Territory of the Union to be selected by him, be requested to attend at the Executive Mansion on Tuesday, the 16th instant, at 12.30 p. m., to witness on behalf of the Congress of the United States the opening of said exposition by the President, and to adopt and forward thereto such address of congratulation as may seem appropriate to the occasion.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the resolution of the House of Representatives be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

RECIPROCITY TREATIES, SO CALLED.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the morning business is now through, I desire to call up a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is not yet concluded. The call was for resolutions, opening with the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], which came over from a previous day. Resolutions are still in order.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas the Legislature is the department of Government by which commerce should be regulated and laws of revenue passed; the Constitution in terms communicates the power to regulate commerce and to impose duties to that department. It communicates it in terms to no other. The representatives of the people, sitting in their legislative capacity, with open doors, under the eye of the country, communicating freely with their constituents, may exercise this power more intelligently, more discreetly, may acquire more accurate and more minute information concerning the employment and interests on which this description of measures will press, and may better discern what true policy prescribes or rejects than is within the competence of the executive department of the Government: Therefore,

Resolved, That so-called reciprocity treaties, having no possible basis of reciprocity with nations of inferior population and wealth, involving the surrender of enormously unequal sums of revenue, involving the surrender of immensely larger volumes of home trade than are offered to us in return, and involving constitutional questions of the gravest character, are untimely, and should everywhere be regarded with disfavor.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the resolution be printed and lie on the table. I may desire to submit under certain contingencies some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

SURVEY OF NICARAGUA CANAL ROUTE.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to inform the Senate whether any orders have been issued by the Navy Department for the purpose of sending a surveying party to Central America in order to make a survey of the route for the proposed Nicaragua Canal, and, if so, under what authority of law such orders were issued; and if such orders have not been issued, whether any expedition for the purpose indicated is contemplated by the Navy Department or any preparation being made for the same, and, if so, the nature, extent, and cost of the arrangements made or contemplated.

BILLS RECOMMITTED.

Mr. INGALLS. Order of Business 785, being the bill (H. R. 2136) granting an increase of pension to Merlin C. Harris, was adversely reported from the Committee on Pensions and now stands on the Calendar. Additional evidence has been received, and I ask that the bill may be recommitted for the purpose of further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill indicated by him be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. In that connection I offer additional evidence in support of the claim, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Pensions with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be received and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. I also ask that the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of Hugh Dougherty, which was indefinitely postponed at the last session, may be recommitted. I suppose I should first ask that the vote indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered, although the parliamentary period has elapsed, but additional evidence has been received in support of that claim also, and I desire to obtain further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate at the last session indefinitely postponing the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of Hugh Dougherty be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The Chair begs to state to the Senator from Kansas in reference to the recent action of the Senate on the bill (H. R. 2140) for the relief of Hugh Dougherty, that it appears by the Journal of the Senate that the bill is still in the possession of the Committee on Pensions, and has never been reported.

Mr. INGALLS. I was otherwise advised. Let the matter remain open until it can be further examined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued unless objection be made.

SPANISH RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask leave, out of order, to present a petition from a representative meeting of cigar-makers of Leavenworth, Kans., in relation to the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only object because objection was made the other day to similar petitions being presented in open session, and I therefore, as other Senators have, presented similar petitions in another place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received, without stating the question, some of these remonstrances, inasmuch as the Senate, by an order, had made public the text of the treaty. The Chair thought under those circumstances remonstrances might be received in open session, which otherwise the Chair would not have received without the direction of the Senate in a case where the secrecy of the text of the treaty had not been removed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I can only say that if that is concluded to be best I shall hereafter present such petitions in the open Senate, but it will open the door to the presentation of arguments and remonstrances and memorials, and will tend to bring about what I desire, the open discussion of the treaty. I merely call attention to the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the distinction is between the case of a treaty in respect to which the injunction of secrecy upon its text has not been removed and one in respect to which the injunction of secrecy has been removed. In the case of the Spanish treaty referred to, the Senate took off the injunction of secrecy and the text of the treaty was printed. The Chair therefore thought, the right of petition by a citizen of course being sacred in either case, that it might be made manifest by presenting a petition in such a case in open session, which the Chair would not have received had not the Senate ordered the injunction of secrecy to be taken off.

Mr. CONGER. I have two petitions from citizens of Michigan on the same subject, which I desire to present. I have presented, under what I supposed to be the ruling of the Chair heretofore, four or five in executive session——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is not entitled to state anything that took place in executive session.

Mr. CONGER. I will say then for the information of my constituents who send me these papers that I am very glad of the opportunity of presenting them in open session, as there is no other way in which they can be informed that I have presented their petitions and that the Senate has received them. That may be proper, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask leave to report a resolution from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent to make a report at this time from the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the letter of the Secretary of State dated December 12, 1884, and the accompanying reports of United States consuls on labor in Europe, be printed, and that —— additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate, —— copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and for the use of the Department of State 5,000 copies, and 10,000 copies of the Secretary's letter.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT AKRON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII is now in order.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the last session of the Senate I believe all the bills reported in regard to the erection of public buildings except one were acted upon, so as to be sent to the other House. There is one bill for the erection of a public building at Akron, Ohio, on the Calendar, No. 870 in the Order of Business, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which I ask the Senate to consider now, so that it may be placed in the same position as the other bills of that character. It was overlooked probably by oversight. I should like to have the action of the Senate upon it. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 870, being the bill S. (1838) for the erection of a public building at Akron, Ohio, be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the committee that reported that bill whether their exceptions as to the administration of the criminal law of the State would make the criminal law of the State operative as a law binding on the conduct of persons. For instance, if an assault be committed in the post-office, or a theft, or a robbery at night, and battery, the bill allows the administration of the criminal law of the State. That would seem to be merely confined to the right to make arrests there, and to hold a criminal court there, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. SHEFFIELD] well suggests. I think we ought to go as far as to say that it may be lawfully done, and the precedents of the Senate seem to imply that it may. We ought to say that the criminal laws of the State shall be in force and operation. I do not see why all the laws of the State should not be; for instance, if a runaway match should take place and the marriage ceremony be conducted in the post-office, I do not see why it should not be binding according to the State law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] reported the bill.

Mr. VEST. That matter has been very often discussed both in the Senate and before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, particularly by the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. This is the form which has been adopted in the committee, and we consider it ample to cover the case suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts. The bill is in the ordinary form. All the bills in regard to the construction of public buildings have this provision in them. We considered that distinctly to provide for the administration of justice within the limits of the building.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I think he will find on examination that there is a great variety of phraseology used in limiting this cession of jurisdiction. There are several different forms in our legislation. I would suggest, beginning in the nineteenth line, to strike out the words "except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein" and to insert in lieu thereof, "that the criminal laws of said State shall be in force and its civil and criminal process may be served therein." I make that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "except," in line 19, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the criminal laws of said State shall be in force and its civil and criminal process may be served therein.

Mr. VEST. With due deference to the Senator from Massachusetts, I do not think that amendment is necessary; but, not to be critical about it, I shall not make a point. The "administration of justice," as a matter of course, covers the whole subject. A law can not be administered unless it be in force within the limits of that building.

Mr. HOAR. Why not?

Mr. VEST. Because there would be no law there at all. If the position of the Senator from Massachusetts be correct, as soon as you enter one of these public buildings the laws of the State would not be in force. I say they would be in force there. There is no question in regard to their being in force there. There has been a point raised, and the Senator from Florida has repeatedly made it, especially in a case in which he was of counsel for the State of Florida, where a murder was committed in a public building. There this point was raised by him and the court decided against him. He raised the point that the laws of the State could not be administered there, that there was no jurisdiction of the State authorities. The point was overruled both in the circuit court of the United States and by the Supreme Court. Taking that decision—and the subject has been frequently discussed—we have always thought, in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that the words "administration of justice" covered the entire subject.

Mr. HOAR. Whether the Senator be right or not, the bills under which those cases went up had a different phrase; but I will not put my recollection against his on that point. I think he will agree with me that the proper phrase, where you wish to reserve that jurisdiction in the ceded territory, is to affirm the operation of the law of the ceding power; and to use the language that the administration of the criminal law of said power may be had therein or may exist therein is a very clumsy way of preserving the force of the law itself. It gives simply power to arrest and perhaps power to try. That would be the meaning of it. It seems to me my method is better to cover it entirely.

Mr. VEST. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITURE OF OREGON LAND GRANT.

Mr. SLATER. I move that the bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon be made the special order for Thursday, the 18th instant, at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 761, being the bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon.

Mr. PLATT. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable under the rules.

Mr. PLATT. Does an objection carry it over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to make the motion at this time.

Mr. SLATER. I think I was not understood by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator, but the Chair is obliged to put the question in the form known to the rules. The bill must first be taken up. Then the disposition of it proposed by the Senator will be proper. Perhaps the Senator from Connecticut did not hear the statement of the Senator from Oregon. The object of moving to take up the bill now is to move to make it a special order for a future day.

Mr. PLATT. Will that question be open to debate when the motion is agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be debatable when the bill is taken up. The question is now on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, that the bill be taken up for consideration.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 181) to declare forfeiture of certain lands granted to aid in the construction of a railroad in Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon now moves that the bill be postponed until Thursday next, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. SLATER. And made the special order for that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOAR. I object to the special order part of the motion. I do not think we can afford to make so many special orders at this short session.

Mr. PLATT. I rose for the purpose of saying that I hoped the Senate would make no more special orders except it should be with reference to such matters as are of great and overshadowing importance. We have now four special orders, I think, on the Calendar, and I have some matters which I consider of as much importance as any of these which have been made special orders—of as much importance as the matter which the Senator from Oregon desires to have made a special order—and I do not wish to have them displaced and those brought up before my matters which have priority upon the Calendar, and which I certainly think ought to be considered as much as any of those bills as have been made special orders. I do not think it is fair to the other business of the Senate to go on making special orders as we are making them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. SLATER. Mr. President, we have had this bill up on two occasions in the morning hour, and desiring to avoid the consumption of the morning hour by this bill I thought it best to select some day in the near future when it could be considered. I do not think it will take long now to dispose of it; possibly an hour, perhaps less than that; and I selected Thursday as perhaps the most convenient day for the Senate and the less likely to interfere with other business. I think that no antagonism of a serious character can occur by fixing it for that time. Certainly it is an important measure and ought to be considered. It is a House bill, and if we are to have any legislation on this subject it is time that the Senate was considering and putting the bill in a shape to have some agreement between the two Houses. I shall insist on the motion.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I desire to ask a parliamentary question, and that is this: If this bill be made a special order for Thursday next, would it or would it not take precedence of the special order already made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would not if the date assigned for them is before the date named by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The first special order on the Calendar is for the 11th of December at 2 o'clock; the second special order is for the 16th of December at 2 o'clock; the third special order is for the 17th of December at 2 o'clock, and the fourth special order is for January 8, 1885, at 2 o'clock. Each of these special orders but one is fixed for a day prior to the day mentioned by the Senator from Oregon. It is not at all probable that all these three special orders can be disposed of before that time, so that if the bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon were made a special order for the 18th there is no probability whatever that it can be considered at that time.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Senate is aware that there is a disagreement between the two Houses in respect of a bill very similar in its character to this, one of the land-forfeiture bills, that of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company—a very important bill, involving a great number of acres of land. The report has not yet been prepared so as to be submitted to the Senate. But this whole question relating to the Atlantic and Pacific, the Southern Pacific, and this Oregon road, and perhaps other roads, is before the Senate in such form that we are obliged to consider it some time during this session, and it ought to be at an early day. The pressure of the other branch of Congress for the forfeiture of these land grants, as indicated by the votes, is very heavy. The House seems to have strong opinions on this question, and of course the Senate must take up the matter and dispose of it; otherwise it must assume a rather unusual responsibility to public opinion. I hope that this whole subject will be considered together.

Perhaps before the 18th of this month, certainly I think before the 20th (though I suppose the 18th may be the day for beginning the recess), the Senate may have an opportunity to come to a final decision upon the question whether these land grants are to be forfeited outright without making any provision of law for having the rights of any persons disposed of or not; whether we are going to decree the forfeiture of these land grants and leave the parties to hunt up their remedies in various different courts of the country, or whether we are going to provide some remedy by which these cases can be speedily heard if not summarily heard.

I trust the Senate will set down the case for the 18th, because perhaps by that time a precedent will have been established by vote of this body upon a precisely similar question, which will enable us to dispose of it very speedily one way or another. Either the House will have receded or the Senate will have receded from the attitude they occupied at the close of the last session of this Congress, or these bills will have to go by the board. These are the three alternatives presented.

I hope the Senate will agree to make this case a special order because of the relation it has toward the other cases now pending before this body.

Mr. PLATT. I have no desire whatever to delay the consideration and settlement of the questions which arise upon this bill, and I would be perfectly willing that the Senate should go on considering it as it has been considered on former occasions, in the morning hour. It has to a certain extent the character of unfinished business which has been considered in the morning hour, and I think it is perhaps entitled to be finished in the way in which its consideration has begun. But it is perfectly manifest to Senators who represent measures of public importance here that if they consent to making these special orders from time to time, a few measures are to be considered out of their time and other matters of public importance are not to receive consideration. I do not think it an orderly and proper way of transacting the business of the Senate, and it is therefore that I am opposed to this order, not because I do not wish to have this bill considered and settled, but because I think it better for the entire business of the Senate that we should make no more special orders at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until Thursday next at 2 o'clock and made the special order for that time.

The motion was agreed to by a two-thirds vote.

SLATER NATIONAL BANK OF NORTH PROVIDENCE.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 2393, Order of Business 937, for present consideration. It is a bill to change the name of a national bank.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of the bill indicated by him. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2393) to change the name of the Slater National Bank of North Providence, R. I.

It provides that the name of the Slater National Bank of North Providence, R. I., shall be changed to the Slater National Bank of Pawtucket, R. I., whenever the board of directors shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, confirmed by a vote or the written consent of stockholders holding two-thirds of the stock of the bank, and cause a copy of such action, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will announce the appointment of the committee, in pursuance of the concurrent resolution of the two Houses adopted to-day, in reference to the opening of the exposition at New Orleans. The Chair appoints the thirteen Senators required by that resolution to be the committee to attend at the Executive Mansion at half past 12 o'clock to-morrow, Messrs. LOGAN, DAWES, CAMERON of Wisconsin, CAMERON of Pennsylvania, HARRISON, MILLER of California, RIDDLEBERGER, PENDLETON, BUTLER, VEST, JONAS, SLATER, and WALKER.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had appointed certain members of the House of Representatives the committee on the part of the House to attend at the Executive Mansion and witness the opening of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition by the President on the 16th instant.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that we proceed now to the consideration of the order for 2 o'clock, the Dakota bill. As it is understood that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] desires to address the Senate upon some resolution he introduced the other day, I ask that we may go at once to the Dakota bill with a view of completing it if possible before he asks to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of what is known as the Dakota bill at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARLAND. If the Senator from Indiana has perfected his bill, or done all he desires to do in that direction, I now offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, which I ask the Secretary to read at length. It is not long.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether it is as printed. Is the substitute as offered by him exactly as it was printed?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir. I have not looked over it to see if there are any errors in it, but I offer it just as it is printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That all persons residing within the limits of the Territory of Dakota qualified by the laws of said Territory of Dakota to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention; and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as by the laws of said Territory persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assembly thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said convention shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the Territory, in districts established by law, in proportion to the population in each of said districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making said apportionment, by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information obtainable; that said apportionment shall be made by the governor, the chief-justice, the associate justice for the first judicial district, the associate justice for the fourth judicial district, and the surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota, or any three of them; and the governor shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid to be held on the 4th day of June, 1885, which proclamation shall be issued at least sixty days prior to the time of said election; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificate to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territory regulating elections therein for Delegate to Congress. The number of delegates to said convention shall be one hundred and twenty; and all persons resident in said proposed State who are qualified voters of said Territory, under the laws thereof, at such time as the constitution to be framed shall be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection, shall be entitled to vote upon the question of such ratification or rejection, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe.

SEC. 2. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the city of Yankton on the second Tuesday of August, 1885, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution for said proposed State.

SEC. 3. That in case a constitution shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, said convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said State for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at such time and places and under such regulations as may be prescribed by said convention, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who, with the governor and chief-justice, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for said constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said declaration, constitution, and ordinances; whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, if said declaration, constitution, and ordinances shall conform to the requirements of this act, to lay the same before Congress.

SEC. 4. That at the election at which the question of adopting the constitution is voted on there shall be submitted also, by ordinance of such convention, the question of the division of such Territory on boundary lines to be fixed by such ordinance; and the qualified voters of the Territory of Dakota shall vote directly for or against the division of such Territory; and the vote on such question of division shall be cast, canvassed, and ascertained and certified in the same manner and under the same rules and regulations as the vote on the adoption of the constitution is required to be by section 2 of this act.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for defraying the expenses of the said convention and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislature: Provided, That any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, what is known as the Territory of Dakota was formed under an organic act approved on the 2d of March, 1861. It seems from the best information I can get that the word "Dakota," adopted at that time, signifies "leagued." Thus organized, this Territory has made rapid strides to prosperity and to a high state of civilization, as was indicated by the Senator from Indiana in his speech and also in the written report that he made. I do not controvert the fact of the great advancement of the Territory; and taking it by analogy to the previous cases where Territories have become States, so far as population is concerned and so far as all the materials of civilization, so to call them, are exhibited, they are exhibited to a very marked degree in the history of this Territory. Under this organic act of March 2, 1861, this Territory has remained unaltered or unchanged except in a few trifling instances of readjusting and changing the boundary line between it and Nebraska in one case, and between it and the Territory of Idaho, I believe, in another.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, is it not true that in the original act for the organization of the Territory of Dakota her western line extended clear to Washington Territory?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes; that is so, as I recollect, though I have not examined it recently.

A question in reference to this Territory has been before the Committee on Territories of this body ever since I have been a member of it, and that is now nearly eight years, and it was before the Committee on Territories prior to the time when I came into the Senate, under a bill introduced by Senator Windom in 1876 to organize the Territory of Pembina in the northern portion of Dakota, and it was that proposition, as I take it, that the vote was had upon which was read the other day from the papers sent to the Chair by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. There seems to have been afterward some confusion in ascertaining that vote, but from the examination I have made I believe that was the proposition on which the vote was taken.

Shortly after I came into the Senate Mr. Hamlin introduced a proposition to create the Territory of Pembina in the northern portion of Dakota. Mr. Windom afterward introduced another proposition. Shortly after that time Senator Saunders, who was then chairman of the committee, reported a bill in favor of organizing a Territory, to be created out of the northern portion of Dakota Territory, to be called Pembina, and leaving the southern portion of Dakota Territory, as it now stands, to be Dakota Territory. Subsequently to that, perhaps a year or more, Senator Saunders introduced and had referred to, and he reported from, the Committee on Territories a bill similar in many respects to the bill now under consideration; that is, to admit the southern portion of Dakota Territory as a State. He accompanied that bill with a written report, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], as a member of the committee, speaking in behalf of the minority, composed of himself, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], and myself, presented a written minority report against the admission of the southern portion of Dakota as a State, which report he used extensively the other day in the able remarks which he made on the bill now before the Senate.

Shortly after that the Senator from Indiana brought in the present bill, with his written report, to create a State of Lincoln, changing the name from Dakota, out of the southern portion of Dakota Territory.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is mistaken. The State is called Dakota and the Territory Lincoln.

Mr. GARLAND. I may be mistaken in that. These, in short, not being very precise or accurate as to dates, have been the propositions in reference to this Territory since its organization in March, 1861, so far as I am acquainted with them.

Pending all this inquiry before the committee numerous delegations have appeared, and I am free to say that a majority of them have been in the advocacy of the measure now proposed by the Senator from Indiana. Some of those delegations have been non-committal on the proposition, some have opposed a division of the Territory, and some have advocated the admission of the Territory as it now stands. As I stated before, I am frank to say that the sentiment of a majority of them, so far as they have spoken, has been in favor of the measure now before the Senate under the guardianship of the Senator from Indiana.

With all this contrariety of opinion, and with all this conflict of views in connection with the fundamental objection so strongly stated by the Senator from Missouri, I am not prepared to vote for the dismemberment of this Territory and for the erection of one portion of it into a State, and I know that I have considered the subject maturely, and I believe I have considered it impartially, with a view of acting with the strictest justice to all interests and all parties concerned. When Governor Ordway made his report after he was sent there as governor, a copy of which I have in my hand, he did not take sides in this controversy, but on the contrary, so far as he spoke, by fair and just implication he would seem to favor the admission of the Territory as it stands as one State. I will ask the Secretary to read portions of his report, commencing at the place marked on page 28 down to the mark on page 29.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The proposed division of the Territory from east to west on the forty-sixth parallel, each portion retaining the famous name of Dakota, with a suitable prefix, appears to be satisfactory to both sections. A still further division, cutting off all that portion of the Territory west of the twenty-fourth meridian of longitude west from Washington, which includes the Black Hills and mining districts, has been pretty fully discussed and still has strong advocates. If three divisions were made it would leave Southeastern Dakota, or that portion south of the forty-sixth parallel, with about 100,000 inhabitants and about 50,000 square miles of Territory; while Northern Dakota, or the wheat-growing region, would have from 60,000 to 70,000 inhabitants and an area of about 40,000 square miles. Both of these sections are being settled up so rapidly with such an enterprising and well-to-do class of settlers that each division will soon have the number of inhabitants which will be required under the new apportionment to form a Congressional district. The third section, containing about 60,000 square miles, would be likely to remain as a Territory for a longer period.

The formation and admission of one new State from the vast territory now embraced in Dakota are questions so prominently engaging the attention of the Government and the general public that they must speedily be met and solved.

From a careful examination and consideration of these important questions, I am clearly of the opinion that the shortest and safest road to Statehood will be through a comprehensive enabling act, prepared by the most experienced members and committees of Congress. This act should contain ample provision for the future protection and safe-keeping of the 5,000,000 acres of school lands now held in trust by the Government to found a system of common schools. It should also provide for an increase of the membership of future Legislatures to not less than one hundred in the lower house and thirty-six in the upper branch, with corresponding membership in constitutional conventions. These members should be elected from single districts, formed and fixed in the enabling act by reference to the latest assessment rolls of polls and estates as well as the last census report, thus giving the people, many of whom are new settlers, an opportunity to select men whom they know and can safely trust to represent them in all the deliberative bodies which shall be charged with the high duties of laying the foundations and molding the institutions of the new State.

If these and other safeguards are thrown around the people through the enabling act, the transition from Territorial government to Statehood can be made easy and beneficial to the people.

If, on the contrary, the people are to be thrown into Statehood with all the hasty and imperfect enactments now existing unrevised, with the small membership in the Legislative Assembly, and with the present unequal and unjust apportionment of members—in some instances making legislative districts larger than some States—the bitter financial and other misfortunes entailed upon Minnesota and adjoining States by their small and irresponsible early Legislatures will be sure to overtake the people of Dakota and check real progress and development for several years.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement in the nature of a personal explanation?

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I stated the other day in speaking on this question that ex-Governor Ordway had appeared before the Committee on Territories and had advocated the admission of this Territory as a State. I did not say at that time that he advocated the division of the Territory, for I never so understood; and the report just read carries out my idea and my statement that he advocated the admission of the whole Territory as a State.

I make this statement now because mutual friends of Governor Ordway and myself have said to me that they thought I had misrepresented his position in what I said. The record shows—the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with my speech—shows that when he appeared before the Committee on Territories he advocated a bill for the admission of the Territory of Dakota. I never said he was in favor of the division of the Territory.

Mr. HARRISON. In that regard, as there was some difference of recollection between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from South Carolina on the one side and myself on the other, as to the position of Governor Ordway, permit me to say that what the Senator from Arkansas has just said as to what he understands the governor's position to be from the report which he has had read at the desk, was exactly my understanding of the position of Governor Ordway with reference to the question of division, namely, that he was holding off from it. I do not know that I would go so far as to say, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, that he was opposed to it; indeed he has only stated that as an inference rather than as a fact.

Mr. GARLAND. Now, Mr. President, the purpose of reading this report of Governor Ordway was not with a view of getting up any controversy with reference to the facts about his position one way or the other, but it was to lay before the Senate some information which I desire to have in order to make the remarks which I intended to make in regard to this measure. I think the fair inference, as I said just now, is that Governor Ordway in his report made in 1881 was in favor of the Territory of Dakota being admitted as a State as it now stands. He says:

The proposed division of the Territory from east to west on the forty-sixth parallel, each portion retaining the famous name of Dakota, with a suitable prefix, appears to be satisfactory to both sections.

That is, he states what appears to him to be the view of the two sections of this Territory north and south in reference to their wish or desire to run this line and divide the Territory into two portions, north and south. Governor Ordway does not say in this report that he knows it to be a fact, but he states that it appears to be satisfactory to them, and he himself, I think it may be said, curiously avoids committing himself to one proposition or the other except that by fair and legitimate inference he is in favor of admitting the Territory of Dakota as it stands as one State.

This report was made, as I stated just now, in 1881. The showing made by the Senator from Indiana in his report is to the effect that certainly since that time the population of the Territory has increased from ten to fifteen, I might say probably twenty per cent., so that which may have been satisfactory in 1881 to both sections of the Territory might not be satisfactory now if the voice of the Territory was heard. There is no mistaking the facts that the Senator from Indiana has put in black and white before us, and there is no disposition to escape from them on the part of anybody that I know of. It is plain that this Territory has increased since that time in population 10 to 15 or possibly 20 per cent. We have no very recent data as to the population of that country, none in fact has been presented as far as I know since the report made by the Senator from Indiana; but the information is all the time that the Territory is increasing in population; and yet we have not had a fair and we have not had a certain expression of opinion from the people of the Territory as to whether they wish to be disintegrated and put into two Territories and ultimately two States.

The organic act of 1861 is very significant. The Territory was created for some purpose, and being thus leagued, the northern and southern portion of it, it has reached a high state of civilization and a most wonderful state of prosperity according to the reports made here; and at this long distance and this vast lapse of time since we had information from that country we are asked to pass an act of Congress to partition the Territory which in its combined northern and southern sections has attained such a high state of prosperity and advancement.

The mere fact of a north and a south natural division furnishes no reason for such a political division. In all the States nearly we have just such a natural division in territory. In my own State we have it—south or low lands and the north or the high lands. In one there is a fitness and adaptation for grain and stock, and in the other cotton is the staple. But this is no reason for making a South and a North Arkansas; in fact, this very diversity strengthens and makes more powerful the entire State as one. Such may be the case in Dakota, and indeed I am disposed to believe it is. The dismemberment may dwarf a large and powerful Territory into two insignificant States.

We are all in favor of admitting Territories as States with due regard to the Constitution and laws. I do not believe there is any party or faction of a party in this country that is not in favor of what is called and known so well in political language as "local self-government;" and what my amendment asks to be done in this respect is simply that the voice of the people be taken in legal method and by the proper and necessary appliances to ascertain the fact as to whether they wish to be disintegrated or partitioned and divided in this way.

Great questions come up to vex us about these matters. This Territory has stood thus for nearly a quarter of a century, lacking now not quite three months. It has been a Territory with these slight alterations of boundaries between Nebraska and the Territory and Idaho and the Territory, and has stood thus, lacking now only two or three months of a quarter of a century. In that time they have erected public buildings of various sorts; they have made vast improvements of different kinds; they have incurred a Territorial debt, the last information I have in regard to which was presented to the Committee on Territories by a committee of gentlemen who appeared here in 1882, in the form of a pamphlet prepared by them and submitted to the committee urging the admission of Dakota Territory as a State. There I find the following:

The financial condition of the proposed State is most excellent. The warrants are paid on presentation and there is no current indebtedness save such as is covered by the receipt of current taxes. The entire bonded indebtedness is $90,000, issued and to be issued for the penitentiary and insane asylum, in 5-20 bonds bearing 6 per cent. interest, which were sold at 3½ per cent. premium so far as they have been sold.

I have made efforts to ascertain whether that debt still exists or whether it is larger or less than it was then, but we may reasonably suppose that it is no less than it was at that time. I do not care what the debt may be and I do not care what provision you make in your enabling act or your admission act in reference to the assumption of this debt by one part of the Territory or the other, it is always a vexing and will continue to be a vexing question. Under the legal principle lying at the bottom of this question, the debt would follow every portion of the Territory as it was when the debt was contracted. It does not matter where the Territory may be sent by any law you pass, whether you institute one or more States or Territories, every particle of the debt attaches to every particle of that Territory. This is a question for the entire people of the Territory to determine whether or not they wish to be dismembered as to this debt or what disposition they will make of it. We know in the old State of Virginia what the question has been in reference to her debt. It has been adjudicated to attach to every portion of West Virginia as well as every portion of the soil of the old State, and we know that Mr. Blaine in his recent book in very strong and powerful language urged and advocated the policy of the General Government paying this large debt of $30,000,000, or more, because of the dismemberment of that State by Congress for the purposes of the General Government.

I instance this merely and for the purpose alone of showing that here is a question we do not get rid of; that we should have these people to speak upon, we should have these people express their voice upon, as to what they are to do with it, and where it is to be located. We know we had trouble here on this question formerly, when the Senators from Maine filed an earnest protest against this Territory being admitted until the debt of the county of Yankton in Dakota was properly adjusted. Difficulties having arisen out of the question it went to the Supreme Court in a case between some banker in the State of Maine and the county of Yankton.

This and other questions connected with this matter are questions on which we should have a free, frank, and open expression of opinion by the people of the Territory. They might two years ago have wanted a division and they may not want it now. It does not necessarily follow that they want it now because it was favored then. The latter portion of the amendment which I propose is to have the people pass upon the question of division.

There are three simple provisions in the amendment which I offer as a substitute. One is, that there shall be a convention of the entire Territory, the delegates thereto to be elected by the qualified voters of the Territory. That convention, when elected, shall make a constitution, that constitution to be submitted to the popular vote. Then, at the same time, by ordinance of the convention, the people of the Territory are to be called upon to vote on "division" or "no division." This vote taken upon the constitution and upon "division" or "no division," is to be certified and sent to the President of the United States, and he is to lay the same before Congress; and then, the whole matter having been voted upon by the people of the Territory, Congress will have it before it for action.

Mr. President, the only difficulty about this is that there may be some delay caused by it; but by this delay we make a certain and fixed rule by which to get at the popular voice as to the wish of the people of that Territory, a great and important Territory, that has achieved wonders in the march of civilization in the last quarter of a century. Ought they not to be heard upon the proposition? Ought they not to send here what they propose as their organic law for us to pass upon it and to pass too upon the question of division or no division? I can not see any objection to this in reason or in justice, and the Senator from Indiana will do me the justice to say that upon the Committee on Territories I have been in favor of adopting some means by which to get at the voice of the people upon the proposition. Take it to yourselves, Senators. What people would like to have this question disposed of for them by the Congress of the United States situated hundreds and hundreds of miles from the place, with these conflicting reports, these antagonistic statements made before the committee of this body, and with propositions here so repeatedly urged before the Senate, first to make a northern Territory called Pembina, then for the Statehood of the whole Territory, and then for the Statehood of the southern portion of the Territory?

Mr. President, without detaining the Senate, for I have said as much as I care to say upon this occasion, it seems to me the three propositions contained in my amendment must meet the approval of every Senator who has considered this question as I have considered it now for about eight years.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I took occasion to say the other day when addressing the Senate upon this subject, that if any Senators here felt that the expressed wishes of the people of Dakota upon the question of the division of the Territory would be influential with them on their votes upon this bill, I should not oppose a proposition to test the sentiment of the people of the present Territory of Dakota upon the question of division by a direct vote upon that question. I adhere to the proposition I made then, and if the Senator from Arkansas or any one feeling with him that the expressed wishes of the people of this Territory upon this question should be controlling, feeling with him that if there is a popular majority in the whole Territory in favor of this division, then Southern Dakota ought to be admitted as a State—if he or any holding that view will prepare an amendment to this bill reported by the committee providing that before a constitutional convention is assembled at all the distinct question, ay and no, upon the division of this Territory on the forty-sixth parallel shall be submitted to all the people and shall be voted upon, and that in case the vote shall be against division the convention provided for in this bill shall be called for the whole Territory, and in case the vote is in favor of division it shall be called for the southern half of the Territory, I will not oppose it. On the other hand, Mr. President, I should be glad to see that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber were willing to meet us upon such a proposition. I should be glad to see it, because it would give some hope of the passage of the bill through the other branch of Congress.

But the proposition of the Senator from Arkansas is not that at all. His substitute proposes to call a convention for the whole Territory, and it provides that that convention shall proceed to frame a constitution, I suppose for the whole Territory. It would be a novel thing for a constitutional convention to undertake to frame a constitution for only a part of the Territory from which they had been assembled. I take it then that his proposition is that they shall frame a constitution for the admission of the whole Territory of Dakota as a State. When they have framed that constitution, the amendment proposes that it shall be submitted to a popular vote; and that the convention shall frame, and submit with the constitution, an ordinance upon the subject of a division of the Territory upon a line to be determined by the convention. It is made imperative upon the convention to submit such an ordinance. It is left optional with the convention to name the line upon which the division shall take place, whether it shall be an east and west line, or a north and south line, or a northeast or a northwest line.

But suppose the Senator's scheme of organization to have progressed so far; suppose the delegates assembled from the whole Territory to have met, to have agreed upon the terms of a constitution, to have prepared the ordinance for its submission, and to have prepared an ordinance to be voted upon by the people providing for a division of the Territory on the forty-sixth parallel, and suppose at that election the people vote to divide the Territory on the forty-sixth parallel, will the Senator from Arkansas tell me what the next step under his amendment would be?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir; there are two or three steps. We might adopt, as has been done in some cases, the necessary measure for the immediate admission of the one or the other division, or both, if we saw proper.

Mr. HARRISON. Upon the constitution framed?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir; or we could pass—there are three different ways to meet it—an enabling act, properly speaking. We could adopt a measure something like the Senator now has, exactly like it if it suited the vote upon the question of division, and there need not be any further delay about it.

The Senator will bear in mind that in this amendment of mine, of course, in making provision for calling a convention it was not necessary, if it could have been done at all, to have made a provision for two conventions, one in the northern and one in the southern portion of the Territory. That is the difficulty that exists in the proposition to which I see the Senator's mind is directed; but taking the Territory as an entirety, there is one convention for the Territory to propose a constitution, and the people vote upon it and upon the question of a division. If the division does not carry, there is a constitution on which to admit the entire Territory as a State. If the division does carry, then we shall simply have to pass an enabling act to meet the two particular sections.

Mr. HARRISON. Precisely. I thought I understood the legal scheme of the Senator from Arkansas, and it is a subtle one, it seems to me. It provides that if the people vote against a division then the work of the constitutional convention is to be efficient, and then they are in a shape to be admitted as one State into the Union; but if they shall vote, exercising their choice, in favor of two States, the whole machinery up to that point falls to the ground: and then we must begin de novo, as the Senator says, with a new enabling act. Does the Senator think that leaves the question to be settled without Congressional influence or suggestion by the people of Dakota when he says to them, "If you vote against division the constitution which has been framed and submitted to you may be made the present basis of the admission of the whole State; but if you vote in favor of division we will put you back where you were at the beginning, and you may then come to Congress and ask an enabling act by which you can take the initial steps to organize a Territory?"

If they vote in favor of division, then they must come to Congress again as suppliants and ask for an enabling act. That is a direct suggestion bordering closely upon a command that they shall adopt the suggestion of bringing the State in under one constitution as one State. It does not leave the question to be settled in a free, unbiased, and untrammeled way.

Of course it would not do under the Senator's plan to say that the constitution thus adopted could be presented by a fraction of the Territory, whether the north half or the south half, as the basis upon which either might be admitted as a State, because it would be impossible for a convention representing the whole Territory to frame a constitution for one-half of it. It would be impossible for them to agree upon a seat of government until they could know whether the seat of government selected was to be one for the whole Territory or for the north half or for the south half of it.

So, under the scheme proposed by the Senator from Arkansas, these people are invited to call a constitutional convention; that convention is directed to go on and frame the fundamental law of the proposed State, and when they submit it to the people we say to them, "If you will come in as one State all of this machinery is made efficient and you may come in as now; but if you prefer to come in as two, you must await our pleasure in the future."

If it be the single purpose of any Senator on the other side of the Chamber to ascertain the sentiment of the people of Dakota upon the subject of division, if he feels that that sentiment would be controlling of his vote upon the question of the admission of the southern half, then I am entirely willing that there shall be incorporated in the bill a provision taking the vote of the people as a preliminary step to calling a constitutional convention. Let us settle it before we call the constitutional convention. Let it be known before those gentlemen assemble whether they are to frame a constitution for the whole Territory or for half of it. They can not do their work intelligently unless that question is settled for them in advance. But I must oppose the subtle proposition of the Senator from Arkansas, which enables the admission to go forward progressively from this act, provided the people vote to bring it in as one State, and cuts off the whole proceeding and makes it inefficient to advance the Territory one single step if they vote for a division.

Mr. President, I do not intend to repeat what I said on the subject of the sentiment of the people as to division, but I may remind the Senator from Arkansas that, since that distinguished delegation from Bismarck met with the committee a year ago, the Democratic Territorial convention of Dakota assembled this last summer and did its work, and adjourned, and I desire to remind him that those delegates in the Democratic convention, assembled as I may assume, upon a fair ratio and upon a fair distribution throughout the whole Territory, resolved that it was the wish of the people of the Territory that it should be divided upon the forty-sixth parallel. This simply completes the chain. All of the political conventions of both parties, all of the Legislatures, every popular convention that has spoken upon the subject, has spoken in favor of division.

Not only that, but the public buildings in the Territory which have been erected have been erected with reference to division. When a penitentiary was built in South Dakota one was built in North, and so with their normal schools and agricultural colleges and every public building. They have duplicated them, putting one in the southern part of the Territory and one in the northern part, so that the idea of division is thoroughly ingrained.

I have no sort of objection, however, as I said before, if the Senator will prepare an amendment which will bring out an expression of the people on this subject, and then let this proceeding go forward either in a convention of the whole Territory or a convention of the southern half of it. If he will do that, we shall not have any controversy about it at all.

As to the debt to which the Senator from Arkansas alluded, I cannot state now to the Senate the amount of it, but I have information from the highest sources in the Territory that the debt has been kept distinct; that if a public building was erected in South Dakota by a loan, the series of bonds was made to relate to that particular work and kept distinct; that if one was erected in the northern part of the Territory the same course was pursued; so that the provision in the bill that Southern Dakota shall assume the bonded debt for those public buildings erected in the southern part of the Territory completely equalizes and distributes the debt of the Territory, and there can be no room for any sort of controversy between the two sections of the Territory as to the amount of debt that each should assume.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have not the slightest objection to ascertaining the public sentiment of the Territory of Dakota, upon the subject of division, but I must specifically and strenuously object to any vote taken in that Territory controlling my vote as a Senator on this floor. The Constitution devolves upon each Senator the duty, irrespective of the sentiment existing in any locality, in any Territory, of determining whether the interests of all the States and all the people of all the Union should admit that Territory as a State or not. I distinctly stated the other day that even if the requisite population existed (and I believe in every case it should be at least equal to that required for a member in the popular branch of Congress), that is not the end of the question. The question further presents itself, What are the institutions of the proposed State? What is its geographical locality? Is it to the interest of the people of the whole Union that a new member should be admitted? I do not care if every Democratic convention that ever has assembled, and every individual Democrat, man, woman, and child, in that Territory should tell me that they wanted it admitted, that does not settle this question at all. My oath is to be consulted and my opinion, and I have no right to try to escape from either.

For four years Dakota Territory has been kept out by gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber; not upon the ground that there was not enough population, for they always claimed that there was; not upon any geographical ground; but upon the ground that the people were not fit for government as a State; that they did not pay their honest debts, and that they trampled upon a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States; that they were guilty of the great crime of nullification, and that therefore they were not fit to assume the dignity and the rights and the majesty of Statehood. Recent events in the Territory have not made the character of that people as a law-abiding people any higher or more reputable than it was then. It is true that that opposition is withdrawn upon the other side of the Chamber because the debts have been collected that they refused to pay—it was a question of money it seems—but the people of Dakota, according to the telegrams now flashed over the wires, are still in a state of rebellion, that terrible word out of which so much capital was made in the recent canvass. They are now rebelling against the constituted and local authorities. I have before me a Dakota paper just placed upon my desk, coming through the mails this morning. It says: "A bloody riot. One thousand men surrounding the town of Frankfort, in Spink County. The militia of the Territory on its way. The United States troops demanded by the governor" to enforce the mandate of a Territorial court which ordered certain records to be placed in the hands of the sheriff. For all that I know (the probabilities now are in that direction) there is open, flagrant war going on in the Territory of Dakota at this very instant. Because there is sufficient population, are we to admit this turbulent population as a State into the Union? I say that recent events have not removed the force of the argument that has been made for four years on this floor against admission.

But the Senator from Indiana used as his principal argument the other day the vote at the recent election, showing an increase of 58,000, and then putting the ratio of three in a family to each vote, he made out more than the ratio necessary in Southern Dakota for admission as a State. Mr. President, I have very little confidence in that vote. As I said the other day, I know the spirit of the men who controlled it. I have seen them before the Committee on Territories for six long years. I have seen the political adventurers who have got up this vote and have controlled it. I have had occasion to say before on this subject, and I repeat it, that they can vote, in my judgment, just as many as they please, if doing so would bring about the local objects they have in view.

Since the debate the other day, and before the telegraph brought the news of this war in Dakota, I received a private letter from a gentleman with whom I have very slight acquaintance. I do not choose to read his name in the Senate, because he is a citizen of Dakota, but any Senator can have the letter, the original of which I hold in my hand, if he chooses to inspect it. I will read a portion of it upon the subject of elections in Dakota and the enormous increase of vote of which the Senator from Indiana spoke. He is speaking in regard to the location of town sites; I had occasion to say the other day what recent events have most conspicuously proven to be true, that the gentlemen in Dakota who have been manipulating this whole thing were there to make money out of town sites; that the question was how much money and how many offices each one of them could accumulate for himself. Now, says this gentleman—

> On a proper showing counties were organized by the governor appointing three commissioners, who would locate the county seat and appoint the county officials. These commissioners were generally men who had a town site.

Everybody has a town site on the plains in the West, and all those who live in the mountains have a mine. That is a safe proposition:

> These commissioners were generally men who had a town site, and in locating the seat of government did not fail to remember the advantages of their town site. When there were several town sites in a county it took some time on the part of the governor to determine the proper persons for the office of commissioners; and when he finally selected the men the losers would charge bribery on the governor, stating what he received for selecting the other fellows. It was generally a half interest in the town site selected.
>
> At a general election a vote of the people would be taken on selecting the county seat and the "place" receiving the largest number of votes would be the victor. At the last election a large number of counties voted on that proposition. To illustrate, in Spink County—

The very county where this war is now flagrant—

> a vote was taken, and Frankfort received or rather returned her vote as voting for her site over 700 votes, when it is apparent that in that precinct there were not five hundred persons, counting men, women, and children; and the same is true in every county where a local question like the above was voted upon.

That sort of vote is the basis upon which the Senator from Indiana says that they made an increase of 58,000. Sir, in that remote locality where the law hangs but loosely upon the settlers, and where the instinctive idea of almost every man is to resort to force, to violence, in order to carry out his purposes, we can very well understand how this state of things should be found to exist.

I have now before me the debate from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon the bill to make the Territory of Pembina out of the northern portion of the Territory of Dakota of which we spoke the other day. In that debate the argument that was made in favor of a division of the Territory, conspicuously by Mr. Windom, then a Senator and afterward Secretary of the Treasury, was, that there was an entire dissimilarity of relations, social, political, and commercial, between the northern and southern portions of the Territory of Dakota. I said the other day what is to-day the absolute fact, that this argument goes for nothing, because that state of things has ceased to exist; that a railroad system is now in existence in Dakota which binds together with iron bands the people of the northern and southern portions of that Territory, that they are homogeneous, and there is no great natural boundary line between Northern and Southern Dakota. I have in my hands a letter which I ask the Secretary to read. I shall not give the name of this gentleman, but I will say that he is the chairman of the Democratic county committee of one of the largest counties in that Territory.

Mr. HARRISON. Of what county, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. VEST. The county in which Bismarck is located.

Mr. HARRISON. That will identify him, I think.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to giving his name myself. Let the Secretary read the portion of the letter that is marked. The latter part of it refers to another Senator, and I do not care to have that read.

The Secretary read as follows:

BISMARCK, DAK., December 11, 1884.

RESPECTED SIR: You are right. There is no valid, physical, or commercial reason for the division of Dakota. We are big, but not as big as California or Texas. The distance objection is fast becoming obsolete. We have one railroad, Fargo Southern (over which the militia passed to-day to quiet the rumpus in Spink County), connecting the so-called sections. We have another to Jamestown from the south, barring a gap of sixty miles ready for ties and rail. From Ellendale, Aberdeen, and Ordway, in Central Dakota, three surveys have been made to Bismarck, and the boast is daily that two or more roads will be built to the new capital next year or the year after at the latest. Only the times have prevented the Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad from being in Bismarck to-day. S. S. Merrill, its noted manager, purchased one hundred and twenty acres adjoining the town for the avowed purpose of getting a location for his roads, shops, &c. It is generally believed the Rock Island is coming. The country south of the Northern Pacific is all covered with settlements and a complete chain of civilization is established. Distance is no bar. Industrial interests, excepting the Black Hills' mines, are the same, and a more harmonious constituency for present or future government can not be found.

* * * * * * *

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST.

Mr. VEST. The gentleman who wrote that letter is personally well known to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. He is a man of high character and entire reliability. I stated that he was chairman of the Democratic county committee. I did it because the Senator from Indiana undertakes to say that the sentiment of the Democrats of that Territory is in favor of a division. That would not affect my vote, as I said before, but the salient point in this whole discussion exists and can not be controverted (and it exists there and will exist so long as the Territory itself exists), that those people are connected together as much as the two portions of my own State or the northern and southern portions of any State now in the Union. No reason exists for this separation; there is not a scintilla or shadow of pretext for it except the ambition of local politicians. As a matter of course, if it is to be left to the vote of those people, the politicians would by some means or other bring about a vote which would achieve the result that they have had in view for the last ten years.

The Senator from Indiana says they have built public edifices both in the northern and southern portions of the Territory. Have they built two capitols? Does the Senator pretend to say that all the public buildings which are necessary for a State government have already been constructed? Then I say if that has been done it is an additional argument why those people should not be admitted into the Union. If without consulting Congress, if with the idea that they could force this thing through in the shape that they wanted it, they have gone to work and expended the money of the people in erecting buildings in advance of the action of this body, it is an additional reason why they should not be admitted as a State.

Now, sir, a single word more and I am done with this question. I have discharged my duty in committee and out of it. I know it is charged by the partisan press, the Republican press, that every man who opposes this bill does it because he is a Democrat. Sir, in the light of recent political events I can bear that charge with equanimity. The people of the United States have settled the question as to whether the Democratic party is not entitled to as much consideration for patriotic motives as our political opponents. No amount of clamor, no amount of abuse or detraction will ever make me cast a vote here for a division of the Territory upon the facts and arguments as they have been produced. No living man can bring an argument here why the Territory should be divided, except it be upon the interested clamor of politicians and political adventurers who have crowded the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent at this time to lay aside the pending order to take up the resolution I offered a few days ago, on which I desire to make some remarks.

Mr. HARRISON. The proposition is to lay the pending bill aside informally, I understand.

Mr. HILL. Informally, temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS). The Senator from Colorado asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the pending bill be informally laid aside in order that a resolution offered by him may be taken up for consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. GEORGE. With the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I ask leave to submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes. I move that it lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 4012) to restore Robert C. McKee to the pension-roll;
A bill (H. R. 5021) granting a pension to Jackson Shadday;
A bill (H. R. 5304) for the relief of Mary Royal;
A bill (H. R. 1940) granting a pension to Capt. Israel Stough;
A bill (H. R. 391) granting a pension to Daniel H. Ross;
A bill (H. R. 298) granting a pension to Charlotta A. Welton;
A bill (H. R. 4752) granting a pension to William Herring;
A bill (H. R. 7169) granting a pension to Elizabeth Kaler;
A bill (H. R. 3065) granting a pension to Emma De Long; and
A bill (H. R. 6590) for the relief of Alice Riley.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 15, 1884.

Ordered, That Mr. W. C. OATES of Alabama, Mr. J. H. ROGERS of Arkansas, Mr. BARCLAY HENLEY of California, Mr. J. B. BELFORD of Colorado, Mr. E. W. SEYMOUR of Connecticut, Mr. CHARLES B. LORE of Delaware, Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON of Florida, Mr. THOMAS HARDEMAN of Georgia, Mr. R. R. HITT of Illinois, Mr. C. C. MATSON of Indiana, Mr. D. B. HENDERSON of Iowa, Mr. B. W. PERKINS of Kansas, Mr. J. E. HALSELL of Kentucky, Mr. E. JOHN ELLIS of Louisiana, Mr. NELSON DINGLEY of Maine, Mr. G. W. COVINGTON of Maryland, Mr. THEODORE LYMAN of Massachusetts, Mr. E. B. WINANS of Michigan, Mr. H. B. STRAIT of Minnesota, Mr. H. S. VAN EATON of Mississippi, Mr. J. J. O'NEILL of Missouri, Mr. W. J. GREEN of North Carolina, Mr. JAMES LAIRD of Nebraska, Mr. G. W. CASSIDY of Nevada, Mr. OSSIAN RAY of New Hampshire, Mr. JOHN KEAN, jr., of New Jersey, Mr. J. J. ADAMS of New York, Mr. D. R. PAIGE of Ohio, Mr. M. C. GEORGE of Oregon, Mr. H. H. BINGHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. JONATHAN CHACE of Rhode Island, Mr. J. J. HEMPHILL of South Carolina, Mr. A. J. CALDWELL of Tennessee, Mr. J. W. THROCKMORTON of Texas, Mr. L. P. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. C. T. O'FERRALL of Virginia, Mr. EUSTACE GIBSON of West Virginia, Mr. JOSEPH RANKIN of Wisconsin, Mr. G. H. OURY of Arizona, Mr. J. B. RAYMOND of Dakota, Mr. THEODORE F. SINGISER of Idaho, Mr. MARTIN MAGINNIS of Montana, Mr. F. A. MANZANARES of New Mexico, Mr. JOHN T. CAINE of Utah, Mr. THOMAS H. BRENTS of Washington, and Mr. M. E. POST of Wyoming be the committee on the part of the House to attend at the Executive Mansion and witness the opening of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition by the President.

SPANISH RECIPROCITY TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith to the Senate a communication of this date from the Secretary of State, in relation to the reciprocity treaty recently signed between the United States and Spain. CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 11, 1884.

SILVER COIN AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by Mr. HILL December 4, 1884:

Resolved, That in the existing depressed condition of the industrial interests of the country, and in presence of the great fall which has taken place, and is still in progress, in the wages of labor and in the prices of the products of farms, workshops, mills, and mines, the recommendations of the President and of the Secretary of the Treasury that the coinage of silver dollars and the issue of silver certificates shall be immediately and unconditionally prohibited are calculated to create alarm, and thereby aggravate the difficulties of the situation; and that, to the end that the public mind may be quieted by the assurance that if the total volume of the currency is not to be enlarged in correspondence with the increasing population and exchanges of the country, it shall at least not be reduced by suspending the coinage of silver dollars, the Senate declares its opinion to be that no valid reason exists at the present time for imposing any new and additional restrictions upon either the coinage of silver dollars or the issue of silver certificates.

Mr. HILL. The recommendations in respect to silver contained in the recent annual message of the President and recent annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury are such as to require some expression of the opinion of this body They are inopportune to an alarming degree when falling prices prove that money is deficient rather than too abundant. They are singularly ill-timed in view of the monetary conference of the Latin Union to be held on the 15th of next month, which must be influenced unfavorably to silver if this country shall indicate a disposition to abandon its support and shall actually depreciate it by ceasing to coin it. Furthermore, these recommendations are extraordinary and extreme in their character in this, that they advise the summary prohibition not merely of the further coinage of silver dollars, but of the further issue of certificates for the 187,000,000 of those already coined. As the certificates are daily paid into the Treasury for taxes they will disappear altogether from the circulation if there are no new issues or reissues, and with the inevitable result of making the Treasury the owner of one hundred and forty-seven millions of the one hundred and eighty-seven million silver dollars now coined. In this statement I assume that the channels of circulation will absorb only about forty millions of silver in the metallic form. The consequence must be that there will be no gold in the ownership of the Treasury. It is impossible that the Secretary does not foresee this result, and no motive for his recommendation can be suggested except the belief that the accumulation of silver in the Treasury to the exclusion of gold would lay a foundation for a future demand that the silver dollars already coined shall be demonetized, melted down, and withdrawn from use as money. It is plain that the real scope of the policy of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury is not merely to prevent a further issue of the silver-dollar money, but to insure the destruction of the amount now in existence, by depriving it of the facility of circulation which it acquires from the use of certificates and by forcing into the ownership of the Treasury the whole of it except the forty millions or thereabouts which will circulate in the metallic form.

In respect to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury it is keeping well within the bounds of a proper reserve in language to say that his several times repeated affirmations that the United States has outstanding "gold obligations" amount to an open defiance to the law-making power, to which he and all executive officers owe obedience.

There never was a gold obligation authorized by law in this country, and no obligation was ever issued by it expressed to be payable in gold. I am quite aware that during the discussions of 1876 and 1877 it was claimed that certain bonds expressed to be payable in coin were by the bondholders understood and expected to be paid in gold; but the law-making power in the act of February 28, 1878, directing the resumption of the coinage of the silver dollar, settled all doubts by declaring that such coin should be a "tender for all debts and dues, public and private," and in addition to that the great bulk of the bonds of the United States now in existence, that is, $906,297,103 out of a total of $1,182,147,100, have been issued and bear date since the law of February, 1878.

On this subject I prefer to give my views by quoting the language of an eminent citizen of New York who has filled the offices of Attorney-

General of the United States and minister to England, Hon. Edwards Pierrepont. In a letter to the New York Times of April 18, 1884, Mr. Pierrepont says:

> There is not an outstanding bond, coupon, or greenback issued by the United States which may not be lawfully paid in silver. Not one of them on its face or back, or in the statute authorizing the issue, or in declaration or resolution of Congress, has any proviso that they shall be paid in gold. And the act of February 28, 1878, directing the coinage of silver dollars, declares that such dollars "shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract."

It is asserted in both the President's message and the Secretary's report that one of the consequences of the payment by the Government of all its debts in silver would be the impairment of the national credit, although no explanation is given how a refusal to pay gold can injure the character of a country which has never promised to pay gold, and which has a law on its statute-books admonishing everybody who deals with it that the standard silver dollar is, and shall be, a tender for everything which it owes, unless it is "otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract."

To-day and always since the resumption of the silver-dollar coinage the Government has paid more or less silver dollars or silver certificates to its creditors of every description, including the holders of its bonds, and all the while its credit has been growing stronger instead of weaker. It is only in its clearing-house transactions with certain banks, notably the banks of the city of New York, that it pays nothing but gold or greenbacks as a matter of special favoritism. This is not in conformity with the spirit of the act of Congress passed in July, 1882, forbidding national banks being members of any clearing-house having a rule excluding silver and silver certificates from use in paying clearing-house balances. The New York Clearing-House had adopted such a rule in 1878, but abrogated it when the act of 1882 was passed. The abrogation was merely nominal, as there was substituted for it a tacit understanding that neither the United States assistant treasurer nor any other member should offer silver or silver certificates in payment of balances. Upon that understanding the United States assistant treasurer has acted to this day with the knowledge of the late and present Secretary of the Treasury. This is a practical nullification of a law of Congress and is the sole cause of there being any silver dollars held and owned by the Treasury. If the law of 1882 had been carried out, or if Congress can by new legislation compel the present administration to carry it out, or if the incoming administration shall voluntarily carry it out, every silver dollar now coined, or which can be coined for years to come under the act of 1878, will go into active circulation, in the certificate form, and thereby uphold prices and revive languishing industries.

The practice at the New York Clearing-House is described in the following extract from the late report of the Treasurer of the United States:

> As a consequence of the inability of the Treasury under the existing practice to use either the silver dollars or the silver certificates in its settlements with the New York Clearing-House, where by far the greater part of its disbursements is made, the available gold ran down from $155,429,600 on January 1, 1884, to $116,479,979 on August 12, 1884, while the silver dollars and bullion on hand, not represented by silver certificates outstanding, increased during the same period from $27,266,037 to $48,603,958.
>
> As a temporary expedient to stop this drain of gold from the Treasury the assistant treasurer at New York was directed to use in payments to the clearing-house United States notes to the extent of one-half of the payments. But the amount of these notes in the Treasury, which at the time of the commencement of this mode of payment had accumulated beyond its needs, has now become so much reduced that they are no longer available for such payments to any considerable extent.

All debts due from the Government, which, when owned by the New York clearing-house banks and presented for adjustment at the clearing-house, are paid by the assistant treasurer in gold or greenbacks, and never in any part in silver or silver certificates, are precisely the same kind of debts which, if presented at the Treasury at Washington, or at any place where there is no clearing-house, are paid more or less, and sometimes wholly, in silver or silver certificates. A draft for the salary of a justice of the Supreme Court, or a coupon of a Government bond, if presented at the Treasury in Washington, is paid wholly or partly in silver or silver certificates; but if the same draft or coupon is transferred to a New York bank it is paid wholly in gold or greenbacks. In other words, it is not the character of the debt which determines under this practice in what medium it shall be paid, but it is the character of the party to whom the debt is transferred and by whom it is owned and presented. This practice is based upon the strange theory that the bankers of New York are entitled to the special prerogative of refusing any kind of lawful money to which they happen to have a dislike, and that to pay them in silver will ruin the public credit, while at the same time that credit receives no injury if the same silver is paid to other people upon identically the same claims against the Government.

There is not in either the President's message or in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury a single valid reason given for the discontinuance of the silver coinage or the issue of silver certificates. It is true that $40,000,000 out of the $187,000,000 already coined are now held and owned by the Treasury, but it is equally true that $138,000,000 in gold are held and owned in the Treasury, or three and one-half times as much as of silver dollars. No reason is given or can be given why the Treasury ownership of silver is more injurious to the public interests than its ownership of gold. It being the opinion of the Treasury officials that a certain amount of coin must be kept to protect the redemption of the greenbacks, it is plain that to give up the present ownership of forty millions of silver dollars would compel the locking up of forty millions more of gold. That there are now any silver dollars in the Treasury is caused solely, and, as I believe, intentionally, by the refusal of the administration to execute the act of 1882 according to its plain intent, by paying out silver and silver certificates at the New York clearing-house.

Both the President and Secretary predict that the continued coinage of silver dollars under the act of 1878 will at no distant day drive out all the gold which is now in circulation, but they do not affect to give any reasons for such an apprehension, and I shall endeavor to show before I close my remarks that there is no foundation for it whatever.

This great question of preserving the ancient and constitutional standard of money in this country, gold and silver, upon which depends the value of every species of property and the relative position of debtors and creditors of every class, is to be settled by the logic of facts and figures, and not by unsupported assertions and predictions, no matter from how high a source they may come.

I hope to convince the Senate that the measures proposed by the President and Secretary are so alarming and dangerous in their character that this body should adopt such declaratory resolutions upon the subject as will put the public mind at rest by assuring the country that there is no danger that these measures will receive the sanction of Congress.

If a further depreciation of the value of silver bullion, which would result from the stoppage of the coinage of silver dollars, affected only the interests of persons engaged in mining for silver or in extracting it from the ores, it would be a question of local consequence and of no national importance; but it is inevitable that any action on the part of the United States which would produce a further disparity between the price of gold and silver bullion would be a blow at the very foundation of bimetallism.

It is not only good policy on the part of the United States to retain the use of both gold and silver as money metals, but it is one of the highest duties which rests upon our Government to so legislate as eventually to bring about and preserve a parity in the bullion value of the coins of the two metals.

The consumption of gold in the arts and for the purposes of luxury and display will divert more and more of that metal, and is at this time diverting its entire annual production from monetary use. This is a fact which receives in the discussion of the policy of coining silver much less consideration than it is entitled to. Furthermore, the rapidity with which the consumption of gold for other purposes than money has been enlarging in modern times is not generally known. No full and detailed exhibition of it was made till 1881, when Soetbeer published exhaustive presentations of the world's production of gold and of its consumption in the arts outside of Africa and Asia during the fifty years ending 1880. No European statistician enjoys a higher reputation, and as he was the most conspicuous leader of German silver demonetization he will not be suspected of a purpose to represent the situation as more unfavorable than it really is to the theory that gold alone can suffice for the monetary wants of mankind.

The statistics which he collected show that the average annual gold production of the world was $134,000,000 for the decade ending with 1860, and $113,000,000 for the decade ending with 1880. It fell to $101,000,000 in the year 1880.

Mr. Burchard, the Director of the Mint, gives as the gold production of the world for the calendar years—

1881	$103,023,078
1882	98,6 9,588
1883	94,027,901

Soetbeer has furnished extensive tables showing the consumption of gold in the arts. He shows that outside of Asia and Africa the consumption rose from $18,000,000 as the annual average of the decade ending with 1860 to $55,000,000 as the annual average for the decade ending with 1880.

In the last annual report of the Director of the Mint he estimates the consumption of gold in the arts in four countries, namely, United States, Great Britain, France, and British India, at $53,000,000.

It is safely deducible from the figures given by Soetbeer and the Director of the Mint that the annual gold consumption of the world, inclusive of British India, does not fall short of the production for the past year, namely, $94,000,000.

The consumption of gold in the arts and for luxurious display, according to the figures of Soetbeer, is three times what it was twenty years ago, more than four times what it was thirty years ago, and nearly five times what it was forty years ago. If the figures of the consumption in 1823, made by Chabral and adopted by Humboldt, are correct, it is to-day between eleven and twelve times greater than it was sixty years ago. Senator Hunter, of Virginia, said correctly in his report on the coinage in 1852, that "the demand for gold and silver in the arts will be very nearly in proportion to the wealth of society." Who will undertake to set bounds to the future increase of this demand, when it is recollected that opulence, as a consequence of inventions and discoveries which give to man a constantly enlarging command over the forces of nature, is increasing by strides without example in the history of the human race?

Inasmuch as it is not within the limits of reasonable anticipation that the future yield of the mines can keep pace with the increase of the consumption, it is inevitable that the future demand for the arts will make a disastrous draft upon the gold now in monetary use.

An increase of the production of gold is of course possible, but there are no present indications of it, and there is no certainty that it will ever occur. Its decrease is equally possible and more probable. It has decreased largely, taking the whole period together, since 1856, and during no part of that period has it increased. Its consumption in the arts has fully overtaken the production, and there is nothing in the past history of the metal to induce us to hope that the future production can possibly keep up with such an increase of the consumption as is now plainly inevitable. There is, in short, as clear a certainty as is ever attainable in conducting human affairs by a forecast of the future that while increasing population and exchanges will be constantly requiring more metallic money, mankind are doomed to have constantly less of it if silver is stricken down from its immemorial position as one of the moneys of the world.

In addition to the certainty that the money of the world will be subjected to the drain of an increased consumption of gold, there is an imminent danger, if the policy of depreciating and thereby discrediting silver is persisted in, that it will be subjected to another drain of vast and unknown dimensions from the diversion of Asiatic hoardings from silver to gold.

The London Times of May 7, 1883, in the course of an article upon the rise, which it admits to have taken place, in the value of gold, says:

> The adoption of a gold standard for India, or, still more, the choice of gold in stead of silver for hoarding purposes in the East, would so change all the conditions of the problem as to upset all calculations.

It must be true from the nature of the case that the further divergenee between the values of gold and silver bullion will tend to diminish the confidence of the people of Asiatic countries in silver, or, what is the same thing, to inspire them with a greater confidence in gold as the repository of wealth laid up for the future. The Times is right in speaking of the possible change of Eastern hoardings from silver to gold as of more consequence as affecting the relations of the two metals than the introduction of gold coinage into India.

This view illustrates the enormous risk of any such experiment on our part, hopeful in no aspect, as the closing of our mints to silver, upon the theory that we can bear the consequences better and longer than England and Germany, and thereby force them into a bimetallic treaty. England has the power, and will certainly exercise it, to close the India mints against silver when we close ours; but, aside from that calamity, the closing of our mints to silver would result in such a depression of the price of that metal that eastern nations would lose confidence in it and devote their hoardings to the other metal. With silver discredited and gold drained away to Asia to disappear forever among its hundreds of millions of people, as silver has disappeared for more than two thousand years, Europe will have nothing before it but an era of paper money, and America, by destroying the Eastern market for silver, will have thrown away in a mad experiment the everlasting resource of wealth which it possessed in the silver mines found everywhere in the great mountain range which stretches unbroken from Patagonia to Alaska.

All the conditions have changed since the beginning of the agitation for a single metallic standard. There was then a greater production of gold and a much less consumption in the arts.

To now contract the volume of money by one-half (which is the ultimate object of most of the persons who urge the stoppage of our silver coinage, and which would probably be the ultimate effect) by the method of demonetizing one of the metals which has heretofore constituted its mass is wholly indefensible. It must be some great object which induces those who originated such a policy to persist in it after the course of events has so clearly demonstrated the injury and injustice which it must inflict upon the world.

Certain classes, having the whole world as tributaries, by a system of national debts which has in itself reached fabulous proportions, and which is re-enforced by a vast amount of other public as well as corporate and individual indebtedness, seek to increase the tribute in the form of interest which they are enjoying by the noiseless and insidious process of increasing the value of the money in which it is paid.

Gold monometallism, which increases the value of credits and in a corresponding degree the burden of debts, is naturally a favorite policy in England, for the double reason that the creditor classes, by whom it is dominated, are enriched by that policy, as against the debtor industrial and tax-paying classes at home, and that the English people as a whole are enriched by it as against the rest of the world, which is involved in an enormous indebtedness to them.

The London Economist of April 21, 1883, closed its comments upon an address in which Mr. Goschen had pointed out the recent rise in gold and fall in general prices by saying:

> There is some consolation to us in the fact to which he directs special attention, that any increase in the purchasing power of gold is a benefit to creditors. Nearly every nation on the face of the globe is indebted to us, and the result of an appreciation of gold is that we obtain a larger quantity of their commodities in settlement of our claims.

H. H. Gibbs, an ex-governor of the Bank of England, says in an article in the British National Review for July, 1883, that the following ideas, being precisely those of the Economist, are constantly pressed upon the English public:

> England is a creditor nation. The scarcity of gold has made that metal more valuable, and she must needs be the gainer by this, and must continue to be still more the gainer if gold becomes scarcer still. Is it to be expected that she should throw away this advantage?

The same reasons which make gold monometallism a favorite policy in England make it a favorite policy in every country and in every section of all countries in which the creditor classes are dominant. Quite as naturally it is not a favorite policy in countries and sections of countries which are heavily loaded with public, corporate, and private debts.

It was not a fortuitous circumstance that when the silver coinage law was passed in the Senate over the President's veto by a vote of 46 to 19, 13 of the 19 votes were given by Senators from New England, New York, and New Jersey. These States have 16 Senators, and the 3 not voting were paired so as to neutralize the vote of 6 Senators who were friendly to the law, so that the entire Senatorial representation of the eight Northeastern States without regard to party lines (5 of the 16 being Democrats and 11 Republicans) supported the veto in one solid and unbroken column, either by voting or pairing.

We must be prepared to expect that the ramified pecuniary interests engaged in this scheme, stimulated as they are to the intensest efforts by the vastness of the profits which success in it will bring to them, controlling the policy of governments in some important countries and having numerous allies and adherents in every country in Europe and in this country, will maintain the struggle to the last moment. It is in the great power of the gold propagandists and in their persistency, arising from the vast interests at stake, that the difficulties of the question of the monetary standard lie.

No careful student of the subject can fail to arrive at the conclusion that the abandonment of the use of silver as a money metal must lead to one of the following results: Either the world must suffer an enormous contraction of the volume of money and a corresponding fall in prices, or it must resort to the use of irredeemable paper money.

It is a most extraordinary delusion to suppose that by closing our mints to silver, and by thus bringing on a great fall in the price of this metal, we can compel the countries of Europe to enter into a bimetallic treaty and resume its coinage. Such an expectation is based upon two propositions: First, that the financial distress which our stoppage of the coinage of silver and the consequent fall in prices of all commodities will bring upon Europe will compel its ruling classes to return to bimetallism; second, that it will so disarrange the Indian exchanges as to force England into bimetallism.

I may be pardoned in answering the first proposition by repeating a few words that I have before uttered on this floor:

> It is said sometimes that if the United States shall go to a gold standard by arresting the coinage of silver it will bring on such a contraction of money, fall in prices, and depression in trade and industries that Europe will be forced to restore bimetallism; while this country, from its greater natural resources, can better bear the strain and can afford to wait until commercial distress causes a change of policy on the other side of the Atlantic. But are we sure, or is there really any reason to believe, that any degree of enhancement of the value of money, or fall in prices, and of that commercial and industrial distress which is inseparable from a fall in prices, would have any other effect than to induce the interests which are now actually dominant in both England and Germany to cling to the gold policy with a more relentless perseverance? Did we find that the industrial distress in Europe from 1873 to 1879, unparalleled as it was in degree and duration, served in any manner to persuade those interests to relax that contraction of money which was not only the real but the avowed object of their gold policy?
>
> How was it in the United States in 1878, when brankruptcies were multiplied on every side; when an enormous proportion of the property of the country was being foreclosed and auctioned off at sheriff's sale; and when the violence of starving and desperate tramps was restrained only by displays of the military force of the nation? Did the interests in this country to be benefited by a gold standard then relax in the slightest degree the tenacity and aggressive vigor with which they insisted upon it? Are the bankers of London and Frankfort so sensitive to tender and humane impulses, and so accustomed to prefer the good of others to their own, that they will forthwith abandon a policy, however much it may enrich themselves, as soon as they are satisfied by a trial of it that it is injurious to the community around them?
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The monometallists of England and Germany manifestly have no apprehension of being driven into silver coinage by our abandonment of it. The fall in prices and the increased value of money which would result from the closure of our mints to silver are precisely what they desire. And after the trial they have had of their own power during the unprecedented commercial and industrial distress which followed the German silver demonetization they have no occasion to distrust their ability to compel submission among their own people to any degree of financial misery which may come from the practical adhesion of the United States to the policy of discarding silver as money.

As to the effect that such a step on our part would have upon the Indian exchanges, it can not be denied that we should depress the value of silver bullion by throwing our whole product upon the world's market; but we can not depress the value of the Indian rupee. England can prevent that by closing the Indian mints. The London Economist of June 24, 1882, says on this point:

> We admit that if the government, while other countries were slaughtering their silver wholesale, were to permit the unlimited coinage of the rupees the depreciation would take place, but what is to prevent the coinage of rupees under such exceptional circumstances being stopped? This would tend further to depreciate silver but to steady the rupee.

A well-informed European observer (Professor Lexis) says, in a paper translated from the German and printed in the New York Banker's Magazine of December 1, 1882:

In my opinion the expectation would prove itself unfounded that England might be put at a disadvantage and forced into the bimetallic league by the cessation of American coinage. This measure would probably have the result of stopping the coinage in India.

The practicability of keeping a steady ratio of exchange between the English gold sovereign and the Indian silver rupee by limiting the coinage of the latter is shown by the fact that the silver florins of the Dutch East Indies, estimated at 220,000,000, which is equal to $88,000,000, are by the same method of limiting their coinage, as prescribed by a Dutch law passed in 1877, kept at a parity with the florins of gold and silver circulating in Holland.

The policy pursued by the United States in coining silver under the act of 1878 has checked, if it has not completely arrested, what seemed at one time a general movement throughout the world toward silver demonetization, notwithstanding the fact that the moral effect upon the world of the act of 1878 had been greatly weakened by the persistent efforts for its repeal and by mistaken anticipations abroad that its repeal was probable. The coinage of silver by the United States has sustained its price at a nearly uniform rate, notwithstanding the great and unprecedented falling off, owing to causes believed to be temporary, of the demand for silver in China. Further, if the Secretary of the Treasury had exercised the discretion given to him by the act of 1878 upon legitimate considerations, and with a proper regard to the large domestic industry of silver mining and to the importance of preserving bimetallism, as well as to the momentous interests involved in maintaining prices and saving the debtor classes from ruin, and had coined $3,000,000 instead of $2,000,000 per month, the whole of our silver production which is available for coinage would have been kept out of the markets of the world, and the old relation of market value between gold and silver bullion would, in all probability, have been restored. But in spite of all adverse circumstances it is undeniable that since we reversed our action of 1873, by passing the law of 1878 to resume the silver-dollar coinage, no single step in the direction of the demonetization of silver has been taken in any part of Europe.

Our silver legislation of 1878 would undoubtedly have produced by this time much greater effects abroad, and in all probability would have already resulted in an extensive international accord upon the coinage ratio of the two metals if the confidence of Europe in the steadiness of our policy had not been weakened by circumstances which are too well known and which have been most unfortunate in their consequences. From all the information within my reach I believe that the question of the monetary standards would have been satisfactorily settled before this time if doubts of the finality of the decision reached in 1878 by the American Congress, by extraordinary majorities and after the most thorough discussion, had not been inspired abroad by the persistent clamors of the newspapers of our Atlantic cities, which are the only ones read and quoted in Europe, and by the reiterated recommendations for the stoppage of the silver coinage which have been made by both Presidents and Secretaries of the Treasury.

In all European countries in which parliaments exist the opinions of cabinets not only follow but foreshadow legislation, because cabinets resign when they can not command legislative majorities. It is natural, therefore, that Europeans should attach to the recommendations of our executive officials a degree of importance as affecting and indicating legislation which they do not possess under our system of government.

However it may have been brought about, it is certain that an expectation has thus far prevailed in Europe that our silver coinage will be abandoned and that the influence of this country in favor of silver has been thereby for the time being nullified. After the lapse of some period, longer or shorter, the policy of this country, if it is persevered in, will come to be regarded abroad as one of the fixed facts of the situation, and it will then have the influence upon the actions of other countries which it ought to have.

I have briefly referred to some of the advantages which have accrued from the coinage of silver under the act of 1878. Now let us examine some of the objections which have been urged by the opponents of silver coinage to the continuance of this policy.

Much has been said about the accumulation of silver in the Treasury, which is denounced as an idle and costly waste in the loss of interest and otherwise. At the close of last month the total amount of silver dollars and silver bullion in the United States Treasury was $149,745,075. There were outstanding silver certificates to the amount of $104,988,531, so that the Government ownership of silver dollars and of silver bullion amounted to only $44,536,392.

At the same time the Treasury held in gold coin and bullion the sum of $231,389,361, and the gold certificates outstanding were $93,374,290, making the actual Government ownership of gold coin and bullion $138,015,071.

Thus after nearly seven years' experience under the silver-coinage act of 1878 it appears that of the total coinage of 187,180,829 silver dollars 147,424,285 were in active circulation in either the metallic or certificate form. The prediction that they would be a dead weight which must be carried by the Treasury and would exclude gold from it has been completely falsified. Of the metallic full-tender money belonging to the Treasury more than three-fourths is gold.

So long as the country believes it to be wise policy to hold a metallic reserve for the redemption of the greenback there must be coin of some kind accumulated and held unused in the Treasury, and how can it be said to be more idle or costly to pile up silver for that purpose than it is to pile up gold? The more silver dollars are owned by the Treasury, the more gold dollars can be spared from it and set free to sustain the trade and business of the country.

The objection that the Treasury has not vault room for the accumulation of silver dollars, if we continue to coin them and to receive them on deposit, is too frivolous for consideration. The bank of France held on November 13, 1884, 1,028,288,051 francs in silver money, equal to $200,000,000, which is largely in excess of the amount in all the Treasury vaults and mints of the United States, including standard dollars, fractional coin, and bullion.

In receiving silver on deposit and issuing certificates for it the Treasury realizes from the loss and destruction of certificates a direct profit which exceeds many times over the cost of providing storage room. But the cost of the storage room for either of the metals, even if there were no direct compensation for it, is a wholly unimportant consideration in comparison with the vital and overshadowing interests involved in maintaining a proper volume of the monetary currency, which determines the price of property, the wages of labor, the burdens of the tax-payer, the relations of creditor and debtor, and the prosperity or depression of industries. It is trifling with a question transcending nearly all others in its importance to complain of an expenditure of $200,000 on vaults for the custody of silver by a Government which has spent eight millions on a post-office in New York and four millions on a post-office in Boston (a large part of it in architectural and artistic displays), which is spending millions annually upon public buildings in every part of the country and for all sorts of purposes and with very little attention to economy in their construction, and which never lacks either money or disposition to use it in constructing in Washington monuments, museums, and hot-houses for the supply of bouquets to members of Congress and other officials.

Another objection to silver coinage, and a much more important one, is based upon the apprehension that its continuance will cause a depreciation of the silver dollar relatively to the gold dollar, a necessary result of which would be the expulsion of gold from circulation and its exportation from the country.

In a speech which I had the honor to deliver in this Chamber about two and a half years ago I presented somewhat at length the most important facts bearing upon this subject. I do not desire to traverse the same ground again, but a very brief reference to the views then presented may not be out of place at this time.

We had then coined 105,000,000 of full legal-tender silver dollars. There was no disparity of value between our silver and gold coins, and I think it was clearly shown that no disparity could occur until we should coin enough silver dollars to supply the total metallic money required by the country; that there can not be a discount on silver coins without such a premium on gold coins as will expel them from circulation, and that such an expulsion is impossible until the silver coined exceeds the amount below which our metallic circulation can not be reduced. In other words, that so long as specie payments are maintained silver dollars can not become the sole coined money of this country until they are struck at the mints in such numbers as to exceed the smallest figure to which the whole metallic currency of the country can fall.

The total metallic full-tender money of this country on the 1st day of last October, as stated by the Director of the Mint, was—gold $610,535,028, and silver $187,315,233; total, $797,850,261, including both gold and silver bullion in the mints for coinage. There is no reason for believing that this amount is more than our fair distributive share of the metallic money of the world, or that it is more than enough to maintain the equilibrium of prices in this country with the general range of prices in foreign countries. At the present rate of silver coinage we will not reach this amount in twenty years.

Our coined silver, under the act of 1878, has now reached $187,180,829, and notwithstanding it has been confidently asserted that the coinage of silver could not be pushed at the furthest beyond $100,000,000 without depreciation, there is not a symptom of lessening value or acceptability.

When the issue of gold certificates was resumed in October, 1882, it was predicted by the New York press that they would soon expel the silver certificates from use. This was also the unhesitating conviction of the late Mr. Folger, the Secretary of the Treasury, who said, in his annual report of December, 1882:

The amount of silver certificates outstanding November 1, 1881, was about $66,000,000, and the amount outstanding November 1, 1882, was about $65,500,000. Inasmuch as by recent legislation the Secretary is required to issue gold certificates, it is to be looked for that the place of the silver certificates will be, to a great extent, supplied by gold certificates, as the latter are furnished in convenient denominations, and it is just to suppose that a certificate payable in a coin worth but 88 per cent. of its nominal value will be displaced by one worth fully its nominal value.

But the fact is that since this prediction of the Secretary of the Treasury was made there have been constantly calls upon the Treasury for silver certificates in exchange for gold, dollar for dollar and cent for cent, and instead of the displacement of the silver certificates in circulation by the gold certificates, they have increased from $65,000,000 in November, 1882, to $74,000,000 in August, 1883, to $88,000,000 on the 5th of December, 1883, to $96,000,000 on the 29th of December, 1883, and to $105,000,000 at the end of last month.

Heretofore in discussing this question I have considered it sufficient to show that with a coinage of silver dollars limited to 28,000,000 per annum they could not depreciate relatively to gold dollars for many years to come. I will now submit to the Senate reasons for believing that, at the same rate of coinage, they will never depreciate.

The distinguishing financial circumstance in the case of the United States is the enormous excess of the growth of its population, wealth, and exchanges over the growth of other countries, and of Europe in particular. It may be stated, as a reasonable expectation, that at the end of this century, now only sixteen years distant, our population will equal the combined numbers of the German Empire and of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. Our fractional share of the aggregate metallic money of the commercial world must, therefore, steadily and largely increase. This much is certain.

The absolute amount of our money must also largely increase if there is an expansion of the metallic and paper money of the commercial world corresponding with the general increase of population and trade such as will maintain existing prices.

In modern times the increase of wealth is more rapid than that of population. The least measure of the increase of money necessary to save prices from falling, which is proposed by any financial authority, is an increase proportioned to that of population, which would be for this country 3 per cent. per annum. If we compute the total volume of our money, gold, silver, and paper, at fifteen hundred millions, and most authorities make it more while none make it less, it requires now forty-five millions a year and will require more as the total volume becomes greater. The actual expansion of the currency since the resumption of specie payments in 1879 has been at a rate considerably larger than this, and the evidence is conclusive from the condition of our foreign trade, of which the balance is favorable, that our prices are not too high relatively to prices abroad, or, in other words, that our money is not in excess of our proper distributive share.

If the United States was an absolutely stationary country, it would be true that an annual coinage of 28,000,000 silver dollars would finally drive out some other kinds of money, but $28,000,000 is much less than the annual increase of our total money during the past five years. It is clearly less than the increase necessary to keep up our prices. It is less than the increase which we shall probably be able to obtain, and it is also less than the increase which it ought to be our policy to obtain. There is therefore no reason to suppose that an annual coinage of 28,000,000 silver dollars will ever of itself, and without an increase of our paper money, expel any of our gold money or even prevent some degree of its enlargement.

It is often said that in dealing with European nations we must liquidate in gold the balances of trade when they are against us, because silver has no rights of coinage, and is therefore not a money metal in Europe; and that, on the other hand, when the balances of trade are in our favor we will be paid in silver. Paying Europe in gold but being paid by Europe in silver would sooner or later transfer our gold to the other side of the Atlantic. But in truth Europeans can no more pay us in silver than we can pay them in that metal. They could pay us in our silver dollars if they possessed any, but they have none, and they can not get any except at the price of gold dollars. Their own silver coins can not be disposed of in this country at a better rate than 80 per cent. of their value at home. As to silver bullion, it is as commercially impossible that it should be sent here from Europe as that coals should be sent to Newcastle.

We are the chief silver-mining nation in the world, and our total home demand for silver in the arts and at the mints (with our annual coinage of $28,000,000) is less by about ten millions annually than the home production. The excess, whatever it is, must be sold abroad, and must always be, as it is now, put at a price which will force its sale in foreign markets. During the three fiscal years ending June 30, 1884, the excess of our exports of silver over imports was $29,584,783, or at the rate of about $10,000,000 annually. The flow of silver from the United States to the London market will continue constant until all the facts of the situation are changed. It is as idle to apprehend an import of silver coin or bullion from Europe as to apprehend an import from the same quarter of timber, wheat, petroleum, naval stores, or cotton. No silver from Europe will ever be "dumped" upon this country until commodities move from dearer to cheaper markets.

The necessary effect of the whole situation is what we know as a fact of observation, that the money balances due to us from Europe are received always in gold, and in nothing else. The other kinds of money which we use, namely, silver dollars, greenbacks, and national-bank notes, would be accepted by us with equal readiness, but foreigners possess neither, and can not obtain either at less than their face value in gold. Our position is precisely like that of France, in which silver francs are at home of the same value as gold francs, but are worth only four-fifths as much anywhere outside of the Latin Union. When the state of the exchanges requires the transmission of money from Paris to London or to New York, it is only gold which can be sent, because it is only gold which will be accepted. But it is equally true that when London and New York send money to Paris it can only be gold, because they have no French silver francs.

France is not drained of its gold, because the balance of its foreign trade is at least as often favorable as it is unfavorable. Nor does a temporary outflow of gold depreciate silver in France or impair the confidence of the French in silver. That was shown three years ago when the outflow of gold was on a very large scale. They know that the outflow must go to the length of exhausting, substantially, all their gold before a disparity between their gold and silver coins will arise, and of such an outflow they neither have nor need to have any apprehension. The experience of the Dutch has been precisely the same.

The official figures of the movement of the precious metals in our foreign trade since the silver-coinage law of 1878 went into operation show conclusively that there is no foundation for the theory that the coinage of silver must necessarily expel our gold.

Taking first the case of silver, it appears that there was a continuous net export (that is, an excess of exports over imports), including coin and bullion, during the six fiscal years ending June 30, 1884, as follows:

Year ending June 30—	Export of silver.	Import of silver.	Net export of silver.
1879	$20,409,827	$14,671,052	$5,738,775
1880	13,503,894	12,295,914	1,227,980
1881	16,841,715	10,544,238	6,297,477
1882	16,829,599	8,095,336	8,734,263
1883	20,219,445	10,755,242	9,464,203
1884	26,051,426	14,594,945	11,456,481

Taking next the case of gold (coin and bullion together), there was a continuous net import during the five fiscal years ending June 30, 1883, as follows:

1879	$1,037,334
1880	77,119,371
1881	97,466,127
1882	1,789,174
1883	6,133,261

The fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, was the first one since the passage of the silver-coinage law of 1878 to show a net export of gold. The export was $41,081,757; imports, $22,831,317; net export, $18,250,440. This is not a large export for a country with an annual production of about $30,000,000, and even with the proper allowance for the consumption of that metal in the arts it does not imply any decrease of our gold money. So far during the current fiscal year there has been a net import of gold.

During the four months ending October 31 last this net import amounted to $8,344,169, and was large during November, for which exact figures are not obtainable.

From figures furnished to me a year ago by the Mint Bureau, supplemented by the official figures to this date, it appears that between March 1, 1878, and November 30, 1884, there was a net import of $177,793,530 of gold; that between the same dates our gold mines yielded about $236,000,000, and that the consumption of gold in the arts in this country was about $63,000,000. The following table shows the increase of gold in this country from March 1, 1878, to November 30, 1884:

Net import	$177,793,530
Production of our mines	236,000,000
Total	413,793,530
Deduct for consumption in the arts	63,000,000
Net increase	350,793,530

The editors of a leading paper in the city of New York recently declared their opinion to be that "there is positively no limit to human stupidity and credulity in matters relating to finance." It can only be upon some such views of the illimitable gullibility of mankind that it can have been so persistently maintained that an annual coinage of 28,000,000 silver dollars must necessarily soon expel all our gold, in face of the fact that it has absolutely increased $351,000,000 since the coinage of silver was resumed.

An objection to our present silver coinage, which is perhaps urged more than any other, is the deficiency in respect to the weight of the silver dollar. Many persons who claim to be bimetallists, and to favor the continuance of the coinage of both metals, assert that they are opposed to making any more dollars of 412½ grains. They demand that the coinage ratio of gold and silver should be made to conform to the market ratio of the two metals, which is now nearly 19 to 1.

When the present silver-dollar law was passed various attempts were made to change it so as to conform more nearly to the actual market ratio at that time, but all such attempts, after full consideration, were voted down in Congress. Our legislators at that time saw clearly that to make our ratio 17 or 18 or 19 to 1 would increase the difference, already somewhat embarrassing, between our ratio and that of the European countries (which was 15½ to 1 in all of them except Holland, in which it was 15⅝ to 1), and would render it impossible for them to resume the free coinage of both metals, because a ratio here above 16 to 1 would drive all our silver to their mints. Our legislators saw that no international arrangement would be possible in respect to the coinage of gold and silver except upon the same ratio, or very nearly the same, and that to establish and to adhere to a ratio above 16 to 1 would put an end to any hope of a monetary accord with Europe. This reason for not raising our ratio above 16 to 1 is as cogent to-day as it was in 1878.

The full-tender silver money in Europe (including French Algeria) is stated in the October report of our Mint Bureau for 1883 at $880,017,000, having now a bullion value of only 80½ per cent. in gold. If we should add silver enough to our dollar to make the bullion in it worth a gold dollar, the nations of Europe could not bring up their silver coin to the point required in order to conform to our new ratio except by incurring a loss of $172,000,000. Nobody believes that they would entertain for a moment the idea of submitting to a sacrifice so enormous.

It is not possible, under present circumstances, however important and desirable it may be, to have any steady equality between the bullion values of the gold and silver dollars. So long as the mints of the commercial world, including our own, are either closed entirely to silver, or coin it only in quantities limited as they are at present, a part of the production will be thrown on the markets, to be sold as a commodity, for use in the arts and for export to Asia, and, like everything else sold as a commodity, the price of it will constantly fluctuate. Nothing can be more absurd than the idea of governing our mint ratio by such a market price as that, up to-day and down to-morrow. If we should add 15 cents now to our silver dollars we may find next year that they are at such a premium as will carry them all to foreign countries, or to the melting-pot, and the year afterward that we must add another 5 or 10 cents to bring their bullion value up to their coin value.

It is possible to preserve a steady relation of value between the gold and silver coins of a country so long as the coins of the metal, cheaper for the time being, do not wholly expel from use the coins of the other metal. But we have no right to expect, and we shall never see, a steady relation of value between gold and silver sold as commodities, until some country, or combination of countries, having an importance relatively to the commercial world equal to that possessed by France in 1803, shall coin both the metals without limit. That would steady the relation now, as France steadied it for seventy-one years prior to 1874. There is no occasion for abandoning the expectation that a combination may be formed by the United States with European countries, or at any rate with American countries, of which several besides our own are rapidly rising into importance. It is only necessary that we should convince mankind by a firm perseverance in our present coinage of silver that we are inflexibly resolved that it shall remain one of the moneys of the commercial world.

The equalization of the mint and market relative valuations of the two metals is not a thing to be undertaken in a hurry. It is prudent to delay it until it can be seen whether existing divergences are permanent or only merely temporary, and also until it can be seen pretty clearly what the new market relative valuation is to be. Our predecessors in this Government have always acted upon that view. In 1821, in consequence of the resumption of specie payments in gold by the Bank of England, the silver price of that metal was everywhere enhanced, and in this country the premium on gold rose to from 6 to 8 per cent. The premium continued, although it gradually declined about one-half; but it was not till 1834, or after a lapse of thirteen years, that our mint ratio of the metals was changed by reducing the amount of gold in the gold dollar. The men of that day knew that the change in the market ratio of the two metals was caused by the English resumption in gold, and they waited to see what the ultimate effect of that resumption was to be. When afterward, as a consequence of the unprecedented gold yield in California and Australia, such a premium arose upon our silver coins as to cause their disappearance by melting and export, the measure adopted by Congress in 1853, upon the report made in 1852 by Senator Hunter, of Virginia, was limited to the reduction of the weight of our small silver coins, and to making such coins subsidiary and a tender for only $5. Adopting the views of Mr. Hunter in that respect, Congress thought it best to defer to a future day, when the new market ratio of the metals should be more definitely settled, the adjustment of a new mint ratio between gold and the silver dollar having a full-tender capacity. In fact, no further Congressional action took place, although the premium on the silver dollar continued for twenty years afterward and amounted to 3 per cent. in February, 1873, when an act was passed which, as was discovered three years later, stopped the minting of the silver dollar altogether.

There was no time for twenty years prior to 1874 when to have produced an equality of bullion value it would not have been necessary to have added to the weight of the gold dollar or to have reduced the weight of the silver dollar.

If our predecessors thought it proper, before acting upon the question of changing our mint ratio between the metals, to wait so many years in order to see the permanent effects of the gold resumption in England and of the Californian and Australian mining discoveries, we may well be slow and cautious now, when the market relation of the metals has been so violently disturbed by silver demonetizations and closures of mints to silver in Europe, and when debates, as yet uncertain in their outcome, are still in progress in so many European countries as to their future policy in respect to silver. No man can to-day fairly say of any proposed mint ratio that it can be relied upon to be in correspondence with the market ratios for six months to come. Until we can certainly better our condition by changing our mint ratio, we had better let it alone. We know that it values silver 3 per cent. lower than it is valued in $880,017,000 of European full tender silver coins. We know that if we raise our mint ratio above 16 to 1 it is a step which must be retraced if we ever come to a monetary treaty with France and other European silver-using countries.

It will cost us $31,000,000 to raise the weight of our silver dollar in the proportion of 83½ to 100, besides the considerable expense of recoining it, which is a large sum to venture upon a not very promising experiment.

Of all those in the Senate and House who say that they have no objection to what they call an honest silver dollar, I have not observed that any one of them offers a bill specifically prescribing how much more silver shall be put into the dollar. General denunciations of the present dollar are easy, but it is more difficult to define the exact change which they will take the responsibility of recommending.

It would certainly be inopportune to increase at this time the weight of the silver dollar and raise our minting ratio between the metals above 16 to 1, which would render a bimetallic treaty with European powers impossible, at the same moment when the opponents of silver are concentrating their forces in support of a measure to suspend its coinage, of which the alleged purpose is to drive Europe into bimetallism by the coercion of a distress in which we must necessarily become full participants. It is an affront to the intelligence of mankind to hold up bimetallism as an object to be sought by any measure however dangerous, and certain to be calamitous in its immediate effect, and at the same time to create, by putting more silver into the dollar, a new and insurmountable obstacle in the way of any monetary concert with other countries. In view of the dangers, foreseen and unforeseen, which must attend a change in the money which has been employed by mankind as far back as history goes, the following words, with which a debate on the monetary standard in the French Senate in January, 1876, was closed by Dumas, are as appropriate as they are impressive:

> Those who approach these questions for the first time decide them at once; those who study them with care hesitate; those who are obliged practically to decide doubt and stop overwhelmed with the weight of the enormous responsibility.
>
> The quantities of the precious metals which are now sufficient may become insufficient. Nobody can guarantee that the present vast production of gold will continue. The placers are found on the surface of the earth and may be exhausted by the very facility of working them. In presence of the unknown which dominates the future, we should practice a prudent reserve.

Within a year or two the opponents of the silver dollar instead of demanding absolutely, and in so many words, that its coinage shall be stopped, make the more plausible demand that it shall be coined only to the extent necessary to meet the call for it at the Treasury. Several bills to this effect were introduced into the last Congress, in both the Senate and House, and the measure was recommended in the annual report of 1882 of the Secretary of the Treasury. Nothing can be more ingenious than the phraseology in which this proposition is clothed, but it will not bear the test of a close examination.

The demand in this country for the coinage of silver was not based upon such a preference for silver over gold, and especially not upon such a preference for silver over paper kept equal to coin by convertibility, as would induce anybody having a warrant upon the United States Treasury to demand its payment in silver. It is notorious that the people of this country almost universally prefer to handle convertible paper rather than either of the metals. As between the two metals silver is the least convenient, by reason of its greater weight and bulk for the same value. It would only be in rare and exceptional cases that anybody would demand silver in preference to gold at the United States Treasury or anywhere else. It was not a preference for silver over gold which induced the support of the silver-coinage law of 1878.

It was the inadequacy of gold, in point of quantity, which led the country to demand that it should be supplemented by another metal, admitted to be less convenient, but the inconveniences of which could be mainly avoided by the use of certificates. What the country wanted was not silver money as a matter of preference, but more metallic money than could be obtained from the gold mines alone. It was the necessity of silver coinage, as a means of averting a contraction of money disastrous to mankind, and the general desire of the country, based upon that and other public considerations, that there should be such a coinage, which constituted together that demand for silver dollars which induced Congress in 1878 to order them to be struck at the mints, and which has induced subsequent Congresses to continue the same policy. That is the only kind of demand, for any species of money, which can legitimately be taken into account by legislators, in either creating currencies or in regulating their volume. But according to the new rule proposed to be applied to silver dollars, the amount coined is to be regulated by the calls for them by a particular class of persons who may have the right to receive payments at the Treasury. On this plan the silver coinage will be dependent as to the amount of it, and indeed as to whether there shall be any at all, not upon the general public interest of the country or upon the law-making power, but upon the caprice and personal interests of individuals.

If this is the proper method of regulating the coinage of silver, no reason can be imagined why it is not equally the proper method of regulating the coinage of gold and the issue of greenbacks. If no more silver should be coined, why should any more gold be coined than there is a demand for at the Treasury? And if as much silver should be coined, why should there not be as many greenbacks issued as there is a demand for at the same place? If this new rule of issuing money was applied to gold and to greenbacks the coinage of gold would imimdiately cease altogether, while the issue of greenbacks would be enlarged. The holders of greenbacks have had them redeemed in gold since January 1, 1879, if they desired it, but have very rarely desired it. The total amount of gold demanded for their redemption has been absolutely insignificant. Since the same date very few persons, if any, having the right to be paid money at the Treasury have desired to be paid in gold in preference to being paid in any other money.

The Senator from Ohio, when he was at the head of the Treasury, was obliged, for the purpose of economizing the use of bank notes and greenbacks, to issue an order requiring persons having the right to payments to accept a part in silver and a part in gold. At no time during the past six years has there been any appreciable demand for gold at the Treasury. If the coinage of gold was subjected to the same rule that it is proposed to apply to the coinage of silver, the Secretary would not have the right to coin gold so long as he had enough already coined to meet demands upon him; and therefore, as there has been all the time a large amount of gold in the Treasury, the coinage of that metal must have ceased during the past six years, and there is no probability that there would be any coinage of it for years to come. But the fact that no preference has been shown for gold the past six years does not prove that there are not considerations of the highest public importance which require the coinage of gold.

The time is most inopportune for stopping the coinage of silver when our bank-note currency is undergoing a considerable contraction, and when it is by no means certain that Congress will be able to agree upon any measure which will avert its further and greater contraction. The situation in respect to our paper money is admitted on all sides to be a very grave one. The volume of the greenbacks is fixed absolutely by law, while the volume of bank notes tends to diminish from the cancellation of the Government bonds upon which they rest. Their contraction has not been seriously felt because their place has been supplied by silver.

Why should the United States, the principal silver-producing country of the world, attempt this dangerous experiment of stopping its coinage or of suspending for a time its purchase? What is there in the condition of the business of this country which demands it? At the present rate of coinage there is no possibility of depreciation of the silver dollar for years to come. The volume of money is not too large, as shown by a tendency to falling prices. There is no inflation of the currency, and it is contraction rather than inflation which is now threatened.

By the addition of $187,000,000 of silver to the money of the country we have increased its volume and have thereby in some measure sustained the wages of labor and the prices of the products of the soil and of the factory. Of the many and dire disasters predicted as the result of this addition it is not pretended that a single one has yet been realized, and the dates for the fulfillment of the prophecies of evil are constantly postponed. In this state of things the country will, I hope, conclude that it is wise to let the silver-coinage law alone so long as it works well, and that it is unwise to throw away its important and admitted advantages from a fear of prospective, certainly far-distaht, and perhaps wholly imaginary dangers, and for which, if they shall ever come, our successors may be trusted to find appropriate remedies.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have purposely for a number of years avoided discussion of the silver question because I regarded the act of February 28, 1878, as in the nature of an experiment, and I wished to see that experiment fairly tried and tested by the logic of experience. Therefore I have not sought directly to change the legislation as it stood on the statute-book, but chose to abide the experiment entered upon by the friends of silver. They no doubt thought the peremptory issuing of a limited amount of silver coin would restore the old ratio of value between silver and gold, and if that could be done it would, I confess, have been one of those desirable results that would greatly benefit all classes of our own people and be a benefit to mankind at large.

I suppose every Senator agrees with the proposition that bimetallism is the best public policy if it is attainable. It has been decided over and over again by the most intelligent nations of the world that silver and gold, traveling side by side, should be the standards of all values. They have changed in their relative market value, but the change has been met by the changing legislation of the times. Alexander Hamilton probably more tersely stated the necessity of bimetallic money than any writer who has followed him, by depicting the great evil it would be to confine the circulation of the world, the money standard of the world, to a single metal, the changes of which might cause a great fluctuation of values. The bimetallic standard of money is accepted by the great body of intelligent men in the United States as the wisest public policy; but this concession is always accompanied with the declaration that these two standards of coin should be made equal to each other according to their general market value, so that the market value of the metal in one tested by the legal ratio should be as near as practicable to the market value of the metal in the other.

It is impossible to make them exactly of the same value, because for two thousand years the relative value of these metals has been changing, but the changes were slow and for years imperceptible. In the last four hundred years a greater change has occurred. Four hundred years ago, prior to the discovery of America, eight ounces of silver were worth one ounce of gold. Now it requires eighteen ounces of silver to be worth one ounce of gold, and in the mutation of time the relative value of the two metals has been met by the laws of the intelligent nations from time to time. The general drift has been the fall of silver or, what is the same in effect, the rise of gold, but this variance has not always continued, for the discovery of gold in California caused gold to decline in relative value, and this continued until the Comstock mine caused a decline in silver. Even with these fluctuations, these two metals have maintained their relative value more nearly than any other two great national productions.

The act I have referred to was passed when from various causes the decline of silver became marked; and this act was designed to check the decline and to restore silver to its legal relation to gold; and now, Mr. President, I say the experiment has been tried. It was entered into for the highest possible object. It has been properly tested. Seven years, nearly, have passed away since the act of February 28, 1878, was passed. The law has been in full force during all that time. The total coinage since that time, by the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury, was $185,000,000, now about $187,000,000. The total amount of these silver dollars now in circulation among the people is $41,000,000, or less than one-fourth the amount coined. The balance belongs to the Government of the United States, and is in the Treasury of the United States.

What has been shown by this experiment? Let us see. In the first place, it has been shown that the law of Congress has not restored silver to its old relation to gold. When that law took effect the silver in the silver dollar was worth only 91 cents in gold. The hope of those who tried the experiment was that if we should give a substantial occupation to all the silver mined in our own country, or the great body of it, we should restore the relation so that the silver in the dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver would be equal to 25.8 grains of standard gold. That expectation has been disappointed. On the contrary, under this law from which so much was expected silver has steadily gone down year by year.

Although we have absorbed $2,000,000 a month to purchase silver bullion for coinage, and have coined 28,000,000 silver dollars a year, and in this way have withdrawn from the market the great body of the domestic production of this country, silver has steadily gone down in relative market value. I have looked at the prices paid; I have them before me. According to the reports of the Director of the Mint from the year 1878, the first year during which this law was in operation, it appears that in 1878 one ounce of fine silver was worth $1.18, or the silver in a silver dollar was worth 91 cents. In 1884, after seven years of experience, an ounce of fine silver is worth in the market $1.11, which means that the silver in the silver dollar is worth between 85 and 86 cents; so that now, instead of 412½ grains of silver being equal to a dollar in gold, it requires, as near as may be, one ounce, or 480 grains of standard silver, to be equal in market value to a gold dollar.

So, then, this first expectation of the friends of the bill has utterly failed. Not only has this law not restored silver to its former ratio, but it has gone down gradually in the face of a determined effort on the part of the United States to prevent that depreciation. It only shows that although the Government of the United States is very powerful in money affairs in this world, it is not powerful enough to prevent that inevitable and continuous depreciation of silver compared with gold that has gone on since the discovery of America, and no power on this continent can prevent that gradual widening of the margin between these two metals. The only question to me of practical politics is whether we ought not ourselves to respect what we can not resist, and not, like King Canute, wait until the tide overwhelms us. Should we not change our ratio, as other nations have done before us, and seek by adapting our coinage to the relative market value of the two metals to check the depreciation of silver, or at least to coin silver at the same value we pay for it, and not try to make a delusive profit out of our own citizens?

But there was another expectation which has not been realized. It is shown that the silver dollar will not circulate among the people. It was firmly believed when the law was passed that the silver dollar would be taken everywhere, and to a certain extent it is taken everywhere as a matter of convenience; but that this silver dollar will not be hoarded or laid away in the stockings of the most ignorant man in the United States, that it will not be received and held with confidence, is shown by the experience of the whole country. Only forty-one millions of silver dollars are now in circulation, and any attempt to force the circulation of silver dollars has proved utterly unavailing. Every Secretary of the Treasury who has been in office since the passage of that law has tried his utmost to induce the circulation of the silver dollar.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator allow me to inquire whether while he was Secretary of the Treasury he did not succeed—it was in the last year of his administration, I believe—in buying about eighty or ninety millions of gold coin with silver certificates?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. I will come to that presently.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator explain how he managed that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will do that with the greatest pleasure, and if I do not answer the Senator I will give it up; but I want to go on now in the order which I have proposed to myself.

That this silver has not circulated is shown by the fact that but $41,000,000 of silver dollars are now held by the people, while the enormous sum of $334,000,000 of gold coin is now held by the people of the United States according to the last report of the Director of the Mint. Whether that is exactly the sum or whether it is more or less no man can tell; but that is the estimate of the Director of the Mint, who is known to be in favor of the silver standard. So that gold, which is measured by its market value in all the markets of the world, does circulate and is hoarded in large masses by banks and by private individuals, and yet the silver dollar, known to be of less market value, is not hoarded, but is kept in the Treasury of the United States.

That this silver dollar will not circulate as money except to a limited extent is shown by these figures. It is maintained at par with gold like paper money, by being received for all dues to the United States; and there is the answer to the inquiry, and the pertinent one, made by the Senator from Alabama. Why were we able to exchange silver certificates for actual gold coin and bullion? It was because we received those silver certificates as the equal of a gold certificate and of gold coin.

Mr. MORGAN. They were redeemable in silver.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were by law and on their face redeemable in silver, but in fact and by law they are redeemable in gold while we are at the gold standard. They are receivable for all public dues, they are receivable in payment for everything; and therefore a merchant or a man desiring to purchase wheat or cotton in the South (and most of these transactions occur at New Orleans, where the silver certificates were issued in exchange for gold bullion sent to buy cotton) received the silver certificates because they were convenient to handle, they could be paid out as an equivalent of gold, they were treated by the Government of the United States as gold, and they are now to-day the equal of gold—not that the money in which we agreed to pay them is equal to gold, but because all the people and Government of the United States receive them as gold, and as long as we treat them as gold they will be as good as gold. Why is the United States note the equivalent of gold coin? Because the United States has promised to pay its notes in coin and maintains a policy which keeps them at par in gold coin, although the United States has not in its vaults to secure their payment more than 30 or 40 per cent. of gold or silver coin to meet each paper dollar, and because a great country like ours treats them as gold, redeems them as gold. This makes a paper promise that has no security behind it whatever in the present state of the money market as good as gold coin, because the people regard it and receive it as good as gold and convertible into coin if demanded. That is the reason why to-day gold is given for silver certificates. Gold is deposited, and as a matter of convenience rather than to handle the gold coin and bullion, especially coin of foreign countries sent here to purchase our domestic products, it is exchanged for that form of paper money which people can get and which they can use as the equivalent of gold.

Now, sir, this silver that we have coined and of which we have such an enormous stock can not be exported to any country in the world; not a dollar of our standard silver dollars floats anywhere. It is not exported. Why is that? The Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL], in his carefully prepared speech, says the reason why the French silver will not go abroad is because it is not worth as much as the nominal equivalent in gold coin, and our silver dollar will not circulate as silver abroad in any country in the world because it is not worth as much in intrinsic market value as the gold dollar. Our silver bullion goes abroad; but when it goes abroad it goes at 480 grains of standard silver to the dollar—its market value—and not at the nominal value we put upon the coinage. And, sir, if anything should happen to this country, any adversity in trade, any change in the balance of trade, this dollar piled up in our Treasury would only be worth so much bullion by weight and tale, and not by what we choose to coin it at. The Government of the United States, in dealing with its citizens for silver bullion, deals by the same harsh rule. It buys of my friend the Senator from Colorado silver at its market value. My friend from Colorado buys the raw bullion which he refines at its market value. He does not allow a dollar for 412 grains of standard silver, nor does the Government of the United States. Both demand 480 grains for a dollar. In other words, we treat it as a merchantable commodity, and, like a merchant, we pay the price it commands in the market. The people have a right to take your stamped dollar or not, as they choose, and they do not take it freely, because in the markets of the world for export it is only worth one dollar for 480 grains, instead of one dollar for 412½ grains. That is what you pay for it, and yet you ask them a dollar for 412½ grains. You put your stamp upon it at a cost of less than one cent and offer your own people for one dollar what costs you eighty-six cents.

Mr. President, you must remember that in case of any adverse balance of trade—and such things have happened often; I trust it may not now, and I do not think there is any sign of it now—but whenever it does happen that there is an adverse course of trade or remarkable events should spring up in Europe to make a drain upon this country for money, what money could we send? Will it be silver coin? No; it will be gold. Every dollar of that balance of trade must be measured in gold coin of the standard of $25\frac{8}{10}$ grains to the dollar. The Senator expresses surprise that people in New York, where nearly all their commercial transactions are based upon foreign values, should rather refuse to accept silver as the basis of their payments. When they are called upon to settle balances from New York to London those balances must be paid in gold, and your silver dollars are not worth anything but the commercial value of the bullion in them, while the gold coin and the gold bullion will pay these balances and travel all over the world.

Now, sir, suppose a state of affairs should come which would lead to the exportation of gold, what would be the inevitable result? The mass of gold now in the Treasury would be gradually drained away, how rapidly no man can tell; drained away silently, moving across the water. Suppose an alarm should be sounded that the gold will disappear from our country, and that all our standards of value were to be based upon silver which will not go abroad and will not be taken abroad, do not Senators know that that would create the most fearful contraction of the currency in this country that we have ever witnessed? The suspension of specie payment in 1837 brought this country to the very verge of bankruptcy, and because in the wild improvidence of those times they cared neither for silver nor for gold, they wanted red-dog money, paper money issued by banks all over the country. The result was that when the credit of these banks failed and their notes ceased to circulate as money and there was a demand for real money, there was no money to pay and the country was bankrupt. We can not be brought to such a position, because even if we were driven down to the silver standard we still should have a solid basis of coin to rest upon, but it would be coin worth 15 or 16 per cent. less than the par of gold.

What would be the effect of that upon all business? Laboring men who still would receive their dollar worth only 85 cents would think they were getting a dollar, while in fact they would be cheated out of the 15 per cent.; their wages would not advance so as to meet this premium, while sagacious and shrewd business men, knowing the exact relation of these moneys to each other, would make their commercial arrangements suit. They might not lose, but the men who labor, the smaller tradesmen of the country, the farmers of the country, who do not understand the mysteries of exchange, would certainly find a dollar worth only 85 cents, with a purchasing power of only 85 cents, substituted in place of the dollar of gold coin worth 100 cents on the dollar in all the markets of the world. What kind of a contraction would that be? The very moment that a gap of one half of 1 per cent. occurred between gold and silver, that moment the gold would be hoarded and exported and shipped to other countries, and that would make a sudden contraction of all that mass of money upon which our great business transactions rest.

It is this fear that excites the minds of business men, and it can not be eluded by any such reasoning as that of my honorable friend from Colorado. Business men in the world use weights and measures, not nominal coins; but weights and measures according to the values of the world. They would hoard and export and sell at a premium the gold of the country, leaving the silver to measure the ordinary transactions of life. And that would create a contraction more marked, as I said, than any other event in our history, perhaps, except the panic of 1837, when there was an entire dropping out of the whole system of paper money of the country and of all the money of the country.

Mr. President, look at the inevitable result of this thing if it should happen. The Senator says it will not happen. I hope to God it will not. It will not if Congress is wise and our people are strong. I do not think it will, because I think the strength of our country will enable us to carry more and more in the Treasury of the United States of this idle money which in an emergency is only good to sell at so much a pound. Because we are strong we are able to bear this load, but we can not go on indefinitely. If we come to the single silver standard, then a pound sterling of England's which is now $4.86 will be worth $5.56; a franc of France which is the second monetary standard of the world, instead of being a little less than 20 cents, would be worth 23 cents. All the money arrangements of this country would be deranged by the sudden fall in the standards of value, which can not be measured except by a man shrewd and wise, a business man who studies out these decimal fractions to their last figure, while the mass of our people, believing still they have the dollar of the daddies, think they have as much purchasing power as they had in former times, but they will find they are deceived.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question for information. There is no Senator better informed on this subject than himself, and I should like him to answer me this question. According to his theory the coinage of silver will drive gold out of the country; if so, how does it happen that there is more gold in the country to-day than there was when the silver bill passed?

Mr. SHERMAN. The answer to that is very obvious, that for a number of years we have had the good fortune until the last two or three years of having the largest balance of trade in our favor probably in the history of mankind. At one time it amounted to enormous sums, and that brought gold, and nothing but gold, to pay that balance of trade. It only illustrates the argument I have made that where the balance of trade is in our favor it does not make any difference what we have for money; it is all the gold standard. When it is against us, then the gold goes off. But what was the condition of those countries which had to send us their gold in 1876, 1877, 1878, and along there? Many of those countries were brought almost to the verge of destruction when they had to send to us for food. We drained the Bank of France of gold, and at one time it appeared as if the Bank of France would totter to its fall, because it had an enormous accumulation of silver coin and the gold was steadily drained off.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I would ask the Senator if it would not be wisdom to wait until the balance turns against us before we venture to reverse our silver policy?

Mr. SHERMAN. Ah, it will then be too late. You must remedy these difficulties before they occur, and even before they begin to approach, because the very moment the balance of trade turns against us or some event occurs which demands enormous sums of money in a European war, or something of that kind which we cannot foresee, the drain comes. The drain comes from the gold of the country, because that is the only money that will circulate all over the world. That gold measures all values.

If we should ever come to a single silver standard we separate ourselves then from all the civilized and Christian nations of the world in our commercial transactions. Although France has a double standard like ourselves, yet she maintains with the utmost care the standard of gold, and whenever the gold begins to diminish she watches and strengthens her reserve, and so with Germany and all the powerful countries of the world; all their transactions are based upon the gold standard. If we go to the silver standard, we then recede from our association and fellowship with all these commercial nations and take our place by Japan—no; Japan is now a gold country—take our place with China and the South American republics, and we separate ourselves from the great, powerful, Christian, intelligent, and civilized nations of the world in our financial operations.

Mr. President, Senators may say to me it is easy to criticise, but what remedy do you propose, what have you to suggest. My friend from Colorado has said that we who are opposed to continuing the coinage of silver do not propose anything. Well, how foolish it would be for us to propose anything; how idle it is for the Secretary of the Treasury to say anything about it. You can not change this law, or speak of silver until a popular sentiment in this country demands it, or until some great danger which wise men like you ought to perceive threatens the country, when public opinion and the good sense of the people will compel a remedy. Therefore it would be idle for those who entertain my opinions about this matter to offer remedies until the time comes when the public mind will listen to some discussion on the subject.

My first idea is to stop the coinage of the silver dollar. The time the silver bill was proposed I happen to know, and I think my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will bear me witness, that it was not expected then that the law would continue forever. It was not expected that this enormous accumulation of silver dollars piled up in the Treasury would be continued for all time. It was supposed a time would come when either the effect of this law would bring us back to the old ratio of 15½ or 16 to one, or else that we would adopt a new ratio, with the concurrence of foreign nations, and therefore the law introduced by the Senator from Iowa provided that while this coinage was going on we should commence an international negotiation to try and get a new ratio. Everybody felt that a new ratio was necessary. But that failed. Now, I do not know anything better than first to stop the coinage of the silver dollar and await events. The Senator from Colorado says that would create a still greater depreciation of silver. I do not believe it. I did not believe that the passage of the bill would appreciate silver, nor has it, nor do I believe the stoppage of the coinage of silver would depreciate the value of silver bullion to the miner.

I am as much bound to respect the interests and take care of and foster the people of Colorado as I am those of Ohio. I do not believe it, because the market will absorb the silver; at any rate, our owning it does not seem to prevent its depreciation, and our coining it has not stopped the slow and gradual decline. Indeed, sir, it has declined more since the passage of the law of 1878 than it has in any other period of fifty years before. So that has not helped it. I would, therefore, stop the coinage of silver.

Again, I have no objection whatever to continuing further negotiations, but I am sorry to say that I do not think this is a very hopeful project. I wish I could see it. I think that Great Britain at least has deliberately made up its mind that it will not change its coinage law, that it will treat silver simply as a subsidiary coinage and gold as the standard of value. But behind England is the enormous population of India, which absorbs more and more of silver and they still demand it. England is very much embarrassed by that question; her exchanges are constantly disturbed; her bonds and railroad securities based upon silver are constantly disappointing the expectation of the holders of those securities in England. So there is a growing feeling in that country that so far as India is concerned they are willing to negotiate, not for Great Britain but for India. They will negotiate just as Spain is negotiating for Cuba and Porto Rico and not for herself. There may be some hope with France also. The great trouble is that her silver standard is still lower than ours, 15½ to 1. To the French people the restoration of silver to its market value compared with gold would be an enormous loss. Probably the Senator does not overstate that, but they must see that the time is coming when they must meet this loss.

It may be asked what remedy do I propose. Why, sir, if I had the power I would enact this day in a law five lines long that every dollar hereafter issued from the Treasury of the United States should contain 470 or 480 grains of standard silver. I would recoin every silver dollar. What is the objection to that? It will cost us some money? No, it will not cost us any money, because we have made a nominal profit in the Treasury of the United States by buying bullion of our miners at market value and coining it at a nominal value. We have a great fund in the Treasury of the United States called the silver-coin profit fund. That silver-bullion profit fund is a fraud upon the miner. I say I would coin a silver dollar containing 470 or 480 grains. The precise market value of an ounce of standard silver, nine-tenths fine, now is one dollar and two mills. To coin a dollar weighing just one ounce troy would be to slightly underestimate silver, because that coin would be worth a little more than a dollar. I think that the silver dollar ought to be of a less value somewhat, but approaching the market value of a gold dollar, and contain from 470 to 475 grains.

That is a question which ought to be determined by a careful analysis of those values, by a careful study of the value of silver for a number of years, and even if the coin should be reduced so low as 460 grains, yet, as that approaches within 3 or 4 per cent. of the market value of silver, it would not be so objectionable. I would place it so low that the miner of this country would, when the new coinage was adopted, get more for his silver bullion than he does now. I would stake my reputation, what little I have—I would stake everything I have—that if the Government of the United would coin a silver dollar worth in market value a gold dollar, or within 2 or 3 per cent. of it, that silver dollar would be received as the silver dollar of mankind; then our silver dollar would go to China, it would go to India, it would go anywhere, because it would be measured by its market value.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Would you then open the mints for the free coinage of silver at the ratio stated?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think I would, although I should not have much objection to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that connection I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a further question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there is a necessity for increasing the amount of silver in a dollar to make it current, what is there to prevent the bankers and moneyed men of the world, in other words, the gold-bugs, from still discrediting it and requiring still more silver to be put into the dollar? We believe the fixed purpose of the men who advocate a monometallic system to be to discredit silver altogether and drive it out of the coinage of the world.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish I could cure my friend from Kentucky of the idea that the bankers, or business men, or moneyed men of the world have the power to do what he supposes. They have no power over this question. The United States has no power over this question, but the United States Government is stronger than all the moneyed men of the world. The United States has tried this experiment to advance the value of silver and it has failed. No, sir; market values are mysterious qualities made up by a combination of circumstances, no man can tell how or when. If anybody could make market value he might soon become the richest man in the world or that ever was in the world. I think it could be quoted from the experience of those who have made great fortunes that when they undertook to reason merely about what the market value would be they have almost always been disappointed. Nobody can make the market value of an article that is circulated all over the world, that exists to the amount of three thousand millions of dollars of each metal. It is utterly idle. It is like the ocean, great and strong. The market value of gold and silver will seek its level, and neither potentate nor power can change it, and the money kings are as weak as King Canute in resisting the tide.

Mr. President, the Government of the United States might do what I propose without loss. It so happens that we have bought silver in a constantly falling market from the rate I mentioned awhile ago from $1.18 an ounce fine down to $1.11, and the silver profit that we have in the Treasury is almost sufficient, yes, it is sufficient—I have had the computation made—excluding the forty-one millions outstanding and that ought to be redeemed and reissued to the full value undoubtedly—excluding this the money in the Treasury is more than sufficient to make every one of these dollars equal to the market value of gold.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the amount of that fund?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not say without referring to the books, but I think it is twenty-odd millions. It is about 15 or 16 per cent. of the whole value. One hundred and eighty-four million dollars is the whole amount issued.

Mr. INGALLS. Fifteen per cent. of $184,000,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; that would make between twenty-five and thirty millions.

Mr. President, I would not undertake myself to fix the ratio of the gold or silver dollars, nor what market ratio it should have, whether 18 to 1 or not. That I think ought to be settled by a commission of experts. We know how it was done in times past. Alexander Hamilton, when he was called upon to pass on this very question, sent and procured the coins, both gold and silver, of all countries. They were melted in crucibles, and then he took the average as near as he could ascertain it—not he himself, but skilled experts selected by him took the average, to ascertain the relative value between these two metals, gold and silver, in actual circulation. He came to the conclusion that it was somewhere between 15 to 1 or 15½ to 1, and as it approached nearer to 15 to 1 than the other, he adopted 15 to 1 as the ratio of market value in those times. That was in 1791. In 1795 the French Government, being involved in the same difficulty, took the same method, and they ascertained that Mr. Hamilton had overvalued the silver, because there was more abrasion in the silver coin than in the gold coin used in the test.

No people in the world are more careful in scientific questions like this than the French, and they determined that 15½ ounces of silver were required to be equal to 1 ounce of gold in market value, and they adopted that standard, and that was the standard, of the world for fifty years. Up to that time it had varied in different countries. Great Britain, under the lead of Isaac Newton, in 1705 or 1706, had this same question before them. They did exactly what I propose now should be done. They paid out of the treasury of Great Britain enough money to make their defaced and worn silver coin good—equal to gold. It was believed at that time that that was the cause of riots. The people felt that they were aggrieved, and within one year after it was done Sir Isaac Newton became famous, not only for this financial operation, but for the great philosophic achievements of his mind. The history we are passing through is only the history of ages that have gone since silver was measured out to pay for the graves of Machpelah. It has gone on year by year, and these ratios have changed, and intelligent nations have adapted their coinage to the change.

Sir, I say again that if I had the power to-day to frame a law with a perfect consciousness that what I would propose would be right, I would ascertain by the best means I could the present market value of these two metals compared with each other, not as estimated by the United States or by my friend from Colorado, who deals in one of these measures, but by the sober judgment of mankind, taking the values of India and China, where coins go a great deal further than they do here, and ascertaining the exact market value of these two metals, and then open the doors of the mint and give to every silver dollar that bears the impress of the United States the weight of standard silver equal, as near as may be, in market value to 25.8 of standard gold.

It may be said they will vary. They will vary, but they will vary after we are dead and gone, as they have varied in former times. A well-considered arrangement of this kind would be acquiesced in by the civilized world. What would be the effect upon our miners? Then our silver dollar, no longer depreciated, no longer dishonored, no longer sneered at, would go everywhere at what it calls itself—a dollar, worth a dollar in gold, or in rice, or in wheat, or in the productions of any land or of any clime. Then we should not have to close the vaults of the Treasury on one hundred and forty-odd millions of silver dollars; then we should not have to buy of the miner like a miser, at the lowest market price, and sell our coin at 15 per cent. premium when we had expended three-fourths of a cent upon it.

It is said this would cost a good deal. Here the silver in our coins is already refined and reduced to the exact proportions required for coinage, and an expert tells me that all this silver could be converted into any other silver coin, containing a greater amount of silver, but of the same proportion of pure metal and alloy, for from a third to half a cent apiece, or less than that. I have no doubt the whole of this could be coined at an insignificant sum—less than we would appropriate for our posies in the Botanic Garden, or anything else.

My friend brings in all these little extravagances of Congress to illustrate his argument. I can say that for less than we expend in a single day uselessly we could pay the expense of this recoinage, and then our dollars, when paid out to our people, would be hoarded in the stockings of the country; hoarded in these little cribs, as the ancient dollar was in the olden times, when the silver in the stocking would be brought out in a time of emergency. Then our citizens, no longer fearful of the market value of this silver, would hold on to it as a sure reliance for a rainy day. They would not be so eager to carry this money to the savings banks and to other depositories where it may be wasted and lost. They would accumulate it in their own treasury, and it would be far safer in their hands than in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, I think I have said all that it is necessary to say. The advantages of this system would be that we should have a sure market for all our silver. It would go abroad everywhere, and the very fact that the United States had openly and aboveboard weighed the scale between these two metals after advising with French scientists, if you please, and all kinds of people, after having conferred with Great Britain, if you please, as to what is best for India, we might make the coin of the world. I hope to live long enough to see the day when the silver dollar of the United States, improved just as our fathers would have improved it, made equal in value to gold, will travel side by side with our eagle and our double eagle, the standard of all the commercial countries of the world. I believe the result of this would be to give to our miners a better market for their silver. It would no longer be a hooted-at metal, pushed upon an unwilling people at less than its value; it would be exported, made available for foreign as well as domestic commerce. Another thing it would do, it would compel other nations to conform to our standard.

England coins her fractional silver far below its value, much more below its value than we do ours. France coins hers at much below its value. All the European nations do it, but by a kind of arrangement or treaty stipulation between them, they maintain the credit of their respective coins by redeeming them just as we maintain the credit of the standard dollar by redeeming it. But that does not relieve us from the difficulty when evil times come upon us that this money in our Treasury is simply hoarded bullion and can not now be exported. Then it would be exported and our silver money would float in every country in Europe where silver is greatly desired and greatly liked. In France itself, where silver has been the chief coin among the people, it is now beginning to be a little under color, because of its known depreciation.

Our silver dollars, if brought up to the market standard, would replace the silver of France, and they would be compelled by the law of self-preservation to make their coin something equivalent to the gold standard. So that effect would be produced.

Now, sir, I must say to my friend from Colorado—he may sneer at those who have my views on the subject of silver—that I am in every fiber of my body a bimetallist. I think that the attempt to establish gold alone as the monetary standard of the world would bring destruction upon millions and hundreds of millions of people; but to be bimetallists we must make our metals equal in market value. A man is not a bimetallist who would coin either at less than its market value and try to palm it off on his people for more than its market value. Put these two metals on their legs side by side with each other, measured by the judgment of mankind as to their market value, and I believe during the life of the longest liver of all who hear me, they will be regarded as the equivalent of each other; they will be bimetallic money in the broad sense of the term, and the United States will have had the honor of relieving the whole world of a difficulty that now agitates cabinets, countries, poor and rich, in all parts of the civilized and even of the savage world.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I had no expectation that this question would come before the Senate to-day, but I regard it as the most important question that has appeared or can appear during this term, and I desire to say a few words with reference to the present situation, and especially do I desire to present my own views upon one topic mentioned by the Senator from Ohio.

The Senator from Ohio says that the coinage act of 1878 was intended as an experiment. It was intended as an experiment in one sense, but the Senators and the men who intelligently considered that bill predicted at the time of its passage what would be the effect of it. It was not supposed then that the coinage of the silver dollar of 412½ grains would go on continuously. We all knew perfectly well that if it went on to an unlimited extent indefinitely the effect of it would be in time to make ours a silver country with respect to the standard of value. But we believed that if a sincere effort were made to secure an international relation between the two metals the effect would be to bring about the coinage of silver and gold at a par with each other within a reasonable time, and I remember perfectly well when that bill was under consideration in the Senate I had the honor to make a few remarks upon it, in which I said, as I say now, that the mistake we made was in coining a dollar of 412½ grains. We did that then in pursuance of a sentiment, which sentiment had grown up in this country, that the prohibition of the coinage of silver was surreptitiously passed through the two Houses of Congress, and the people cried for the 412½-grain dollar and the House was in favor of that dollar. If we had coined a dollar of 400 grains and placed ourselves in relation with the rest of mankind upon silver we should by this time have had silver and gold at a par with each other.

The Senator from Ohio says that silver has been gradually depreciating in value for centuries. In 1873 when we ceased the coinage of silver it was 3 per cent. in value higher than gold in this country. Why? It was because we were then coining a 412½-grain dollar when France was coining a 400-grain dollar and the two were at par with each other; and this parity would have existed for all time between the gold and silver in this country. Why? Because our dollars of 412½ grains could be shipped to France and sold to their mints that were then coining free at 400 grains, and a profit of 3 per cent. would have been made.

It was not a natural cause that brought about the fall of silver in 1873. It was because Germany changed her standard from silver to gold, and publicly proclaimed that she would sell every dollar of silver in the hands of her people as fast as it could be redeemed at her mints or in her treasury, and she compelled the Latin Union, of which France formed a conspicuous part, to cease the coinage of silver free, as it had been coined for nearly a century before. That was the reason of the depreciation of silver.

The Senator from Ohio talks about the market value of silver. That is a mere surface view of the question. What is it that makes market value? It is the cost of production and use. The use of silver constitutes one of the chief elements of its market value. Let the mints of France and of Italy and of Germany, if you please, be opened to the free coinage of silver as well as the mints of the United States, and if we have a common standard the parity of value between silver and gold will at once be restored, as it existed for more than seventy years on the continent, from 1793 to 1871. Therefore, this question is an international question, and it can not be made anything else.

As to the Senator's idea that we can coin a 470-grain dollar or a 480-grain dollar, I asked the Senator from Ohio if he would open our mints to the free coinage of silver at that ratio. He said he would be perfectly willing to do it. What would be the effect of that? Germany would at once unload all the silver she has into the United States, and we should be coining 480-grain dollars, and would more rapidly come to a silver standard than we can possibly come with a restricted coinage of $28,000,000 per annum.

Every country in the world that has any silver in circulation, except the United States and Mexico, has it at the ratio of 15½ to 1. According to the report of the Director of the Mint which I have in my hand (I glanced at it) there are $550,000,000 in France to-day circulating at a ratio worth 3 cents less upon the dollar than our own. There are in circulation a thousand million dollars of silver, the rupees of India, coined by the mints of Great Britain, where they have free coinage of silver to-day in India, a thousand million dollars of it at the ratio of 15½ to 1. There are nearly $200,000,000 of coin to-day in Germany; and, although its circulation was interdicted in 1873, the German Government has never taken in these coins, and they are circulated there, between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000 of them, to-day at the rate of 15½ to 1, 3 per cent. less than our own, and they are a full legal tender in Germany for every debt due to every citizen of Germany; and so it is in France.

Mr. MORRILL. They are limited.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are limited in amount.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly they are limited in amount, but they have nearly as much silver in Germany to-day, although in 1873 they declared that the treasury should take in those German coins and coin marks instead, and do it upon a scale of so much per capita. Yet Germany has never done that. Why? Because her people are in hostility to the single standard of gold, and after selling $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 of her silver she ceased drawing in her silver. As those who have traveled in Germany know perfectly well, the German silver coins are there to-day in circulation and are a full legal tender. So it is in France.

Now, just when we are to cease coining silver is a question that we ought to consider. It is an important question, affecting all the people of this country and all our interests. I do not know but that we ought to do it this year; I do not know but that we ought to do it next year; but one thing we ought to do first in my judgment, and that is, make an honest, a sincere, and a persistent effort to see whether we can not come into relations with other governments with reference to this great question, in which they are interested as much as we are, save and except that they do not mine silver as we do. Has such effort been made? I do not know but that it has; and I do not know that it has. I have traced in vain the diplomatic correspondence upon this question, to ascertain whether our minister to Great Britain, our minister to France, our minister to Germany, have been instructed to see whether a common ratio could not be agreed upon. But even when we sent our distinguished representatives abroad for the special purpose, they were confronted at once with the question, what should be the ratio? They said they were not authorized to make any other ratio except that which was adopted by the Congress of the United States, namely, 16 to 1. What was the response of France and Italy? It was that they could not consider any other ratio except that of 15½ to 1, because they had $900,000,000 or $1,000,000,000 at that ratio. There was the difficulty met at the very threshold of the negotiation.

Now is the Congress of the United States ready to follow the Senator from Ohio in fixing a new ratio? If it is, then the diplomatic representatives of this country can say to foreign governments, we are ready to coin the silver dollar upon the ratio of 18 to 1, or 19 to 1, or 15½ to 1, and then we can see how much progress we can make in this international negotiation.

The Government of the United States can not continue to coin silver indefinitely without coming to a silver standard. No single nation can do it. Therefore this matter must be settled in the end by diplomatic arrangements with a sufficient number of countries who will make silver and gold at some ratio upon a par with each other.

That is all I desire to say upon this subject at this moment. I believe myself that the only way to secure international agreement is to adopt the ratio of 15½ to 1 and recoin our own dollars upon that basis; because I am perfectly sure, as the Senator from Colorado has said, that the governments abroad will not entertain the idea of paying out of their treasuries from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 for the purpose of fixing a different ratio between gold and silver. I am very certain that Great Britain would not consent to a recoinage of a thousand million silver dollars in India upon a basis which would contemplate the loss of 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. of that thousand million. More certainly France would not do it, nor would Germany.

Mr. President, I did not expect to take part in this debate. I express no opinion now as to when I shall be willing to stop the coinage of silver. I may be willing to do it at this session if it is a practical question, because, whether we continue to coin silver or not, the only way to fix the relative standard of value of these metals is by international arrangement at most. So whatever we do must be done tentatively and for the moment, regarding our own interests for the time being. I believe it is our interest to make an honest and sincere endeavor to secure an arrangement with other countries with relation to the coinage of both silver and gold upon some parity of value.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. BECK. I will yield the floor in a minute. I do not propose to make a speech now, of course, but I desire, in connection with the remarks made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], to say that this matter should be fully and fairly discussed at a very early day, and it should be opened up broadly, as it has been by the debate which has just taken place. I expect to show, and I think I can, that the silver dollar or the silver coinage of this country has never been treated by the administration, or any member of it, with anything like reasonable fairness, and that the reason why silver is to-day depressed as much as it is grows out of the hostility of our own Government, and no man has evinced that hostility more absolutely than the Senator from Ohio from his high place as Secretary of the Treasury. He was required by law and pledged himself, as he called it, to pay out all the coins received at the custom-house upon the interest of the public debt, and he made a report to this body in which he said that, although silver coin was paid to him as Secretary of the Treasury for customs dues and he was obliged to take it, he had never paid one dollar of it to a creditor of the United States as interest on the public debt, though the law required him to do it, but he had made an earnest effort all the time to depreciate it. He made the same speech that he made to-day—and I will read it the first time the question comes up—in regard to the coinage of the trade-dollar that he was going to float all over the world with "In God we trust" instead of the eagle or buzzard or anything else, to use his own expression, and it was to go as American coin everywhere; and yet he has been the worst enemy of that dollar ever since.

To-day we have only $194,000,000 of public debt that we can by possibility pay without going into market and buying bonds at any premium anybody may ask before 1891. That will all be paid in less than two years at the present rate of taxation, and no gentleman on the other side of the Chamber seems disposed to disturb that rate. The banks to-day hold $155,000,000 of that $194,000,000 as security for their circulation and have $136,000,000 of that circulation based upon those bonds. They tell us, and the Comptroller of the Currency tells us, that the charters of seven hundred and eighty-six banks will expire during the next year, nine-tenths of them before the 1st of July, with a capital of over $200,000,000 and a circulation of over $140,000,000. He tells us too that the banks retired their circulation to the extent of twenty-four and a half million dollars last year, and that the contraction will be $40,000,000 a year from this time on unless we change our laws. These are your official reports. Of course the very moment the United States becomes the purchaser of bonds and has to pay the premium that anybody desires, the banks will sell the fours and four-and-a-halfs they have and pocket the premium and withdraw their circulation, because they can carry on their banking organization with only $80,000,000 under the law we passed two years ago. So says the Comptroller, so says the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Senator from Ohio seeks now in the face of facts like these to destroy every substitute, and leave us at the mercy of a body of national banks who we are told must necessarily contract their currency $40,000,000 a year and have already contracted it $24,500,000 in the year just gone by.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. The history of this—let me read before you interrupt——

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky declines to yield.

Mr. BECK. I will yield in one second. I ask the Senator to listen to this. This is my opinion. The whole history of the silver question is written up thoroughly and well in the Croker papers. The memoirs will be found in the Library. I hope the Senator from Ohio will read them. In speaking of the Duke of Wellington, Mr. Croker said:

> What amused the Duke of Wellington most was the "boldness" of Talleyrand's duplicity. "Would you believe it that at Erfurt, when Bonaparte met the Emperor of Russia to persuade him to join in overwhelming Austria, Talleyrand, the minister for foreign affairs, who all day long labored under Bonaparte's vigilant eye to carry this object, used to visit Alexander secretly at night, and furnish him with every argument, reason, or pretense which he could discover or invent against Bonaparte's plan?" This, he said, was told him not only by Talleyrand himself, but also by "the Princess of Tour and Taxis," at whose house these private meetings took place."

That has been the history of the treatment of silver from the day that we ordered it to be remonetized. We have pretended to negotiate——

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope now my friend from Kentucky will allow me to interrupt him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where have I ever said anything against the silver certificate? Where have I said anything against the silver dollar, except to make it good? On the contrary, if I may be allowed to claim any credit for it, I claim to have done as much as any one could possibly do to keep the silver certificate in circulation. I believe that a gold and silver certificate is the best form of paper money that was ever devised. I hope, therefore, the Senator will——

Mr. BECK. I hope when this discussion comes up again I shall show from report after report of the distinguished gentleman as Secretary of the Treasury that he has denied that we had a right to pay our creditors in the silver coin of the country——

Mr. SHERMAN. Ah!

Mr. BECK. Although the act of July required, and it was written upon the face of the bonds, that it was to be paid in the coin of the country, which embraced both gold and silver of the standard value of that day.

Mr. SHERMAN. What was the date of that act?

Mr. BECK. If that was not hostility to silver, I do not know what was. Now, let me ask the Senator——

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the date of that act.

Mr. BECK. Why did he fail to comply with the law, and pay the silver dollar received for customs dues, as the laws required him, on the interest of the public debt?

Mr. SHERMAN. To what act does the Senator refer?

Mr. BECK. The act of July 14, 1870, and the act of February 25, 1862, which pledged all the coin received from customs first to the payment of interest and then to the setting apart of a sinking fund. Did he ever pay a dollar received at the custom-house——

Mr. SHERMAN. The act to which the Senator referred by date a moment ago was passed a year or two after I ceased to be Secretary, and I have not had a chance to pay out any, except what I received as my salary.

Mr. BECK. The law remained unchanged and the Senator remained Secretary, and he refused to pay in obedience to law the silver coin received at the custom-house, though the law required him to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. What law?

Mr. BECK. And it could have been done for no other purpose except to keep it out of the hands of men whose interest it would be to circulate it and make it good, and to keep it in the Treasury and raise the clamor that nobody would take it, when he would not pay it to anybody who was obliged to take it.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, the law required that to be done which was done. The Senator can certainly tell me——

Mr. BECK. I will get the Revised Statutes and read the very fundamental law which has been regarded all the time as the law that prohibits us from taking greenbacks——

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that there was no express law requiring the payment of silver certificates and silver coin on the interest of the public debt until after I ceased to hold the office.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. I will find it in a moment, I think.

Mr. SAWYER. Will the Senator give way for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. BECK. Yes, I will, and find it in the morning.

Mr. SAWYER. The Senator from Kentucky gives way, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BECK. Yes; I give way.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the understanding, as the Chair is informed, the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, being the Dakota bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to make a statement?

Mr. SAWYER. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. To-morrow I shall ask the Senate to conclude the consideration of the Dakota bill. It has been dragging along nominally before the Senate for some days, but I think not four hours have been consumed upon the bill. I shall ask to-morrow at 2 o'clock that it be proceeded with without interruption until it is disposed of.

Mr. SAWYER. I renew my motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 15, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting statement of the expenditures of the contingent fund of the State Department for the year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH DEVIL'S LAKE RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with accompanying papers, recommending the passage of a bill granting the right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railway Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation, Dakota; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL-CAR SERVICE, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the Postmaster-General of $100,000 for postal-car service, and $75,000 for pay of the clerks in post-offices, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COST OF COLLECTING CUSTOMS REVENUE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of the cost of collecting the revenue at each port of entry in the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK W. LYNN.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow of Frank W. Lynn, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the necessary funeral expenses, not to exceed $250.

O. W. STREETER.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1821) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to examine and adjust the claim of O. W. Streeter for moneys expended and services performed in taking the census of Dakota in 1860, and put the same on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I call for the reading of the report accompanying that bill.

The SPEAKER. There is no report, the Chair is informed, accompanying this bill, it being a Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that had better go to the Committee on the Census.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must recognize the gentleman from Indiana as objecting to the present consideration of the bill. If there be no objection the bill will be taken from the Speaker's table and referred as indicated by him.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, this bill, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, has already been reported unanimously by a committee of this House.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The Committee on Claims have reported it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was informed that there was no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. There is a report accompanying the House bill.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this has been passed upon by the Committee of Claims of this House, which is also a proper committee to consider this subject as well as the Census Committee, I ask for the reading of that report, and I presume it will be found to justify the action sought by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. The report accompanying the House bill will be read.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. It seems to me that this man has waited a long time before presenting his claim, and as this covers quite a large sum of money, I would therefore like to hear some explanation with reference to the matter before action is taken upon it.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. There is no sum of money appropriated except such sum as the Secretary of the Interior shall find to be due to this man for the services performed.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Why has action upon it been so long delayed?

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota. If the gentleman from Indiana had observed the reading of the report he would have seen that there were many reasons which necessitated it. The report was made to the Census Bureau in 1860. The claimant shows further that his vouchers and receipts were destroyed by fire in 1862, and also that his going into the war prevented him from presenting his claim where only he could get relief for several years afterward. The delay in prosecuting the claim seems rather to have been his misfortune, and not his fault. It has been pending in the House of Representatives ever since the second session of the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, is equivalent to an objection.

This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman to withdraw his call for the regular order and simply object, if he desires to do so, to the bill called up by the gentleman from Minnesota, in order that I can get a bill referred to a committee, which I have been trying to do for some time.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I will withdraw the demand for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection to the bill of the gentleman from Minnesota? If the demand for the regular order is withdrawn simply, that bill is now before the House for consideration.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I object to that bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his demand for the regular order?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I believe that I am entitled to recognition for the purpose of offering a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

PAY OF HOUSE AND SENATE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to submit now for immediate consideration the joint resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month, was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHICAGO COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency the bill (S. 2375) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT FILE CLERK.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized to continue in the service of the House during the remainder of the session the assistant file clerk appointed under resolution of March 3, 1881, and pay him out of the contingent fund of the House the same salary heretofore allowed.

GULF AND CHICAGO AIR-LINE RAILROAD.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 1909) granting the right of way over the public lands in Alabama to the Gulf and Chicago Air-Line Company and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not object to the bill. But I will say that no railroad in the world needs 200 feet in width as a right of way; and if the land is worth anything it ought not to be granted.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not yet before the House. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. COBB. I object, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. OATES. I ask but one minute to give an explanation of the bill. I think there is no necessity for referring it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Alabama may make a brief statement.

There was no objection.

Mr. OATES. What this bill gives to the railroad company is nothing more than they can get under the general statute except the right to take from the adjacent public lands such necessary timber and stone as they might see proper to use in the construction of the road. The general statutes give them the right of way 100 feet on either side; so that the objection interposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is one that would go to the repeal of the Revised Statutes in this regard. This in every particular as to the right of way corresponds to what would be given by the general statute, except in the particular I have mentioned; and as a compensation for that the bill obligates this company to carry for the Government mails, troops, munitions of war, &c., which it would not be obliged to do if it obtained a right of way under the general statute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] objects to the present consideration of the bill and asks that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. OATES. Very well; let it be so referred.

The bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH AND AMERICAN MEDALS.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration a small Senate bill which involves only $75 and some medals. I ask this at the request of certain Senators, and desire that the bill shall be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2402) authorizing the Secretary of State to procure duplicates of certain French and American medals.

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $75 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of State to procure duplicates of certain French and American medals presented to Congress by George W. Erving for the use of the National Library A. D. 1822, which, being shipwrecked and lost, were replaced by Mr. Erving, and which were destroyed by the fire in the Library in 1851.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. COX, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILKINS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

JAMES M'PETERS.

Mr. PRYOR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7682) for the relief of James McPeters for property taken by, and for the use of, the United States Army during the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

STEPHEN J. MATTHEWS.

Mr. PRYOR (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7683) for the relief of Stephen J. Matthews for stores and supplies taken by and for the use of the United States Army during the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REUBEN COPELAND.

Mr. PRYOR (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 7684) for the relief of Reuben Copeland for stores and supplies taken by and for the use of the United States Army during the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. ELIZABETH ANN PORTER.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama (by request), introduced a bill (H. R. 7685) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Porter, widow of the late Commodore William D. Porter, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. OATES introduced a bill (H. R. 7686) to declare forfeited to the United States all lands granted by act of Congress to aid in the construction of any railroad which have not been earned by the grantees, and to provide for the adjudication of controversies in relation thereto; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ADAM HARDIN.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 7687) for the relief of Adam Hardin, a citizen of Lee County, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 7688) to regulate the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOT SPRINGS CREEK.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7689) making appropriation to complete the improvement of Hot Springs Creek, in Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

J. H. T. MAIN.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7690) for the relief of J. H. T. Main; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

KANSAS CITY, ARKANSAS AND FORT SMITH RAILROAD.

Mr. PEEL introduced a bill (H. R. 7691) to grant to the Kansas City, Arkansas and Fort Smith Railroad Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MERVIN J. SMITH.

Mr. CLEMENTS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7692) for the relief of Mervin J. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DILLARD M. YOUNG.

Mr. CLEMENTS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7693) for the relief of Dillard M. Young; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF ALLEN BLACK.

Mr. HARDEMAN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7694) for the relief of the estate of Allen Black, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH M'DONNELL.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 7695) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah McDonnell, widow of Hugh McDonnell, late sergeant Company H, Second United States Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS D. FITCH.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7696) granting a pension to Thomas D. Fitch, late surgeon Forty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MOSES M. BANE.

Mr. CANNON introduced a bill (H. R. 7697) for the relief of Moses M. Bane, receiver of public moneys in Utah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARQUIS D. DAVIS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND introduced a bill (H. R. 7698) for the relief of Marquis D. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF MANNING HARRIS.

Mr. RIGGS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7699) for the relief of Thomas J. Harris and others; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES P. JUDD.

Mr. ROWELL introduced a bill (H. R. 7700) for the relief of Charles P. Judd; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. DEXTER.

Mr. KLEINER introduced a bill (H. R. 7701) for the relief of John H. Dexter, of Evansville, Ind.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. HANGER.

Mr. MATSON introduced a bill (H. R. 7702) for the relief of James A. Hanger; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEN S. THATCHER.

Mr. MATSON also introduced a bill (H. R. 7703) for the relief of Allen S. Thatcher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ALTHEA A. FRASNER.

Mr. WARD introduced a bill (H. R. 7704) granting a pension to Althea A. Frasner, widow of Milton Frasner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE PARISH.

Mr. COBB introduced a bill (H. R. 7705) for the relief of Caroline Parish; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK OF INDIANA.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7706) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate to the People's National Bank of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH AND AMERICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Whereas this House, by resolution of the 7th day of June, 1884, requested the Secretary of State to inform this House of the mode and manner, in detail, of the expenditure of the amounts appropriated by Congress for the expenses of the French and American Claims Commission, stating when, where, to what persons, and for what purposes the moneys so appropriated had been paid, and also what amounts had been paid by the French Government for the expenses of said commission; and

Whereas on the 25th day of June, 1884, there was laid before this House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a statement of the expenditures of said commission under general headings, without stating the details of said expenditures, and without any statement as to the times when, places where, and persons to whom the moneys appropriated had been paid, as was required by the said resolution: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to inform this House of the mode and manner, in full detail, of the expenditure of the sums, amounting in all to $325,000, appropriated by Congress for the expenses of said French and American Claims Commission, stating specifically when, where, to what persons, and for what purposes the moneys so appropriated have been paid, giving in each case the date and amount of the payment, the name of the person to whom such amount was paid, and the object for which the payment was made; and also whether the officers of said commission, or any of them, continued in the exercise of their functions after the date fixed by treaty for the conclusion of such commission, and of the labors thereof; and, if so, how long and by what authority of law they so continued, what services they performed, and what payments were made them for the same.

Mr. HOLMAN also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to this House, if not incompatible with the public service, a copy of all correspondence had with the Government of France in relation to the French and American Claims Commission, since the 23d day of November, 1881, the date of the first meeting of said commission, up to the present time.

Second. Also a copy of the communication or communications made by the two remaining commissioners to the Secretary of State on the resignation of Mr. L. de Geofroy, July 11, 1881, the date when he withdrew as commissioner on the part of the French Republic, and the 15th day of October following, in relation to the resignation of said commissioner; and a copy of the correspondence between the two governments relating to the same subject, and of the notice of the Government of France reappointing said commissioner.

Third. Also a statement giving the name and number of each and every claim which was withdrawn by the agent of either government after the same had been duly filed before said commission, and the reasons for such withdrawal and a copy of all correspondence between the two governments relating thereto.

Fourth. Also a copy of all reports or other communications made by the American commissioner, Hon. A. O. Aldis, to the Secretary of State relating to the business of said commission or to any matter or thing pending before said commission from the 23d day of November, 1881 to the present date.

Fifth. And also a copy of the reports or other communications pertaining to the French and American Claims Commission or any matter pending therein made by Hon. George S. Boutwell, the agent and counsel for the United States, to the Secretary of State from the 23d day of November, 1881, to the present date. Also, a copy of the correspondence between the two governments relating to the recall of said Mr. L. de Geofroy, and the appointment and substitution by the Government of France of Mr. Alexis Albert Lafarve as commissioner on or about May 22, 1883.

SPEECHES NOT DELIVERED.

Mr. HOLMAN also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Rules:

Resolved, That there be added to the rules of the House the following, namely:

RULE XLVII.

All speeches not delivered in the House but authorized to be printed in the RECORD shall be subject to and regulated by the rules governing debate; and the Speaker is charged with enforcement of this rule.

HOLDEN COOK.

Mr. FUNSTON introduced a bill (H. R. 7707) to pension Holden Cook; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (H. R. 7708) granting a pension to William Thompson for services in the Black Hawk war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISA A. ESTES.

Mr. MORRILL also introduced a bill (H. R. 7709) granting a pension to Louisa A. Estes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL V. HALLAND.

Mr. HALSELL introduced a bill (H. R. 7710) granting a pension to Samuel V. Halland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EXPOSITION, LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (H. R. 7711) to encourage the holding of a national agricultural, horticultural, mineral, timber, and live-stock exhibition at Louisville under the auspices of the Southern Exposition Company and the Department of Agriculture of the United States Government; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

ELLEN RAY.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky (by request), introduced a bill (H. R. 7712) for the benefit of Ellen Ray; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION FOR EXTRA WORK.

Mr. ELLIS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7713) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to compensate clerks and employés for extra work performed in the exchange of bonds in the Departments; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RED RIVER COMMISSION.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. 7714) to provide for the creation of the Red River commission, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES E. BOLLES.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. 7715) granting a pension to Charles E. Bolles, Vineyard Haven, Mass.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. ELDREDGE introduced a bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the act giving approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SETH COLVIN.

Mr. HOUSEMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 7717) granting a pension to Seth Colvin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN SNYDER.

Mr. HOUSEMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of John Snyder, Company I, One hundred and twenty-ninth Indiana Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY M. ROBERTS.

Mr. MULDROW introduced a bill (H. R. 7719) for the relief of Henry M. Roberts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING PUBLIC DEBT, ETC.

Mr. BUCKNER (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 7720) to provide for refunding the public debt, and to secure stability of the national-bank circulation, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

RODNEY D. WELLS.

Mr. BROADHEAD introduced a bill (H. R. 7721) for the relief of Rodney D. Wells; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALMIRA K. PARKER.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, introduced a bill (H. R. 7722) granting a pension to Almira K. Parker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. CLARK.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7723) granting increase of pension to George W. Clark; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LYDIA WETHERBEE.

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, also introduced a bill (H. R. 7724) granting a pension to Lydia Wetherbee, dependent mother of George L. Wetherbee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PATRICK M'KEAN.

Mr. HAYNES introduced a bill (H. R. 7725) granting a pension to Patrick McKean; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. BEACH introduced a bill (H. R. 7726) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Health, and ordered to be printed.

SALLY C. MULLIGAN.

Mr. ROGERS, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. 7727) for the relief of Sally C. Mulligan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PARTEN H. MOREY.

Mr. BREWER, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. 7728) for the relief of Parten H. Morey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATION FOR PUBLIC BUILDING, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Mr. GREENLEAF introduced a bill (H. R. 7729) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Rochester, N. Y.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS ALLCOCK.

Mr. GREENLEAF also introduced a bill (H. R. 7730) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Allcock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LOIS B. SMITH.

Mr. GREENLEAF also introduced a bill (H. R. 7731) granting a pension to Lois B. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD P. QUINN.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE introduced a bill (H. R. 7732) granting an increase of pension to Edward P. Quinn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT NELSON.

Mr. PARKER introduced a bill (H. R. 7733) for the relief of Robert Nelson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. HORTON.

Mr. PARKER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7734) for the relief of James H. Horton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY N. HUGGINS.

Mr. PARKER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7735) for the relief of Henry N. Huggins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

Mr. KETCHAM introduced a bill (H. R. 7736) for the relief of the Merchants' National Bank of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. KETCHAM also introduced a bill (H. R. 7737) to amend an act entitled "An act to remove certain burdens on the American merchant marine, and encourage the American foreign carrying trade, and for other purposes," approved June 26, 1884; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF ISAAC S. HILL, DECEASED.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. 7738) for the relief of the estate of Isaac S. Hill, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CAPT. JAMES H. HAFFORD.

Mr. CONVERSE introduced a bill (H. R. 7739) granting an additional pension to Capt. James H. Hafford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PATRICK NICHOLAS.

Mr. MURRAY introduced a bill (H. R. 7740) granting a pension to Patrick Nicholas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN CONNELL.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 7741) to authorize the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge from the Army to John Connell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FIRST LIEUT. ANSON G. CARPENTER.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 7742) granting a pension to First Lieut. Anson G. Carpenter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER CASKEY.

Mr. BAYNE introduced a bill (H. R. 7743) granting a pension to Alexander Caskey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH WATTS.

Mr. DIBBLE introduced a bill (H. R. 7744) for the relief of Sarah Watts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

W. C. MARSH.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, introduced a bill (H. R. 7745) for the relief of W. C. Marsh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE E. WOOD.

Mr. POLAND introduced a bill (H. R. 7746) to increase the pension of George E. Wood, late a private in Company E, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. POLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. 7747) to facilitate the disposition of cases in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE GREAT KANAWHA RIVER.

Mr. SNYDER introduced a bill (H. R. 7748) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORLANDO T. SOWLE.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill (H. R. 7749) granting a pension to Orlando T. Sowle; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS, NEW MEXICO, ETC.

Mr. MANZANARES introduced a bill (H. R. 7750) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, and the State of Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE H. OWEN.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, introduced a bill (H. R. 7751) making an appropriation to reimburse George H. Owen, United States consul at Messina, on account of necessary official expenditures; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF GRADUATES OF NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. THOMAS introduced a bill (H. R. 7752) to equalize the pay of graduates of the Naval Academy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONRAD SCHLEICHER.

Mr. KEIFER introduced a bill (H. R. 7753) granting a pension to Conrad Schleicher; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. M. BENNETT.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (H. R. 7754) granting a pension to J. M. Bennett; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHALSEY BROTHERS.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7755) for the relief of Chalsey Brothers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CAROLINE TRECKELL.

Mr. PERKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. 7756) granting a pension to Caroline Treckell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH CRAWFORD.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (H. R. 7757) granting a pension to Elizabeth Crawford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL MORRIS.

Mr. COX, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. 7758) to remove the charge of desertion against Daniel Morris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FREDERICK S. STRANG.

Mr. COX, of New York, also submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Whereas it has been reported that Frederick S. Strang, late a cadet at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, has died in consequence of cruelties practiced upon him by senior cadets: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House any information he may have obtained in relation to the cause of death of the said cadet, Frederick S. Strang.

HOURS OF LABOR FOR LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. HOPKINS. I rise to make a privileged report. I am directed by the Committee on Labor to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution of inquiry submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be respectfully requested to report to this House whether in his opinion section 3738 of the Revised Statutes with reference to eight hours' employment constituting a day's labor for all laborers, &c., employed on behalf of the United States applies to the letter-carriers of the United States.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. WARD.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7759) to remove the political disability of William H. Ward, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being the third Monday of the month, the regular order is the call of committees for motions to suspend the rules. The call rests with the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WILKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, January 15, 1885, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the bill of the Senate No. 1155, to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations, now on the Speaker's table, and House bill No. 5043, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest the lawful money deposited in the Treasury in trust by national banking associations for the retirement of their circulating notes.

Mr. YAPLE. I demand a second.

Mr. SINGLETON. I do not object to the resolution if prior orders are excepted.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion under the rules of the House to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution. The gentleman from Michigan demands a second.

Mr. WILKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection, and the second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes against it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] is recognized to control the time in support of the resolution, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YAPLE] to control the time in opposition to it.

Mr. WILKINS. I do not propose to take up the time of the House in discussing either of these propositions this morning. The question that we are called upon to consider is whether the House will permit the Committee on Banking and Currency to name a day for the consideration of two bills. The first bill is the one that has been sent to us from the Senate, and which is known as the McPherson currency bill. This measure permits national banks to receive from the Comptroller of the Treasury a circulation equal to the par value of the bonds deposited. It is a plain, simple, comprehensive proposition, and needs no explanation from me or from any other member upon this floor. I shall not take the time of the House any further in stating this proposition. I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Before the gentleman from Ohio yields to his colleague I wish to ask him this question: Does not the bill also provide for the retirement of bank notes of certain denominations?

Mr. WILKINS. No, sir. This does not contemplate any part of that measure. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] five minutes to explain the second proposition contained in the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. This resolution proposes simply to set apart a single day for the consideration of the only two bills of a public nature that have been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency during the present Congress. The first bill, known as the McPherson bill, which has passed the Senate, has been explained by my colleague on the committee who offers the resolution. The second bill for the consideration of which it is sought to set apart a day proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to invest certain lawful money deposited in the Treasury by national banks which is being accumulated under the following circumstances: Under the law as it exists to-day, when national banks fail, when they go into liquidation, or when they propose to retire any part of their circulation, and to withdraw the bonds which have been deposited as security, they are required to deposit in the Treasury lawful money to the amount of their circulating notes outstanding. It should be borne in mind that this lawful money constitutes under the law a fund for the purpose of redeeming the outstanding circulating notes of the bank which deposits the lawful money; and when a bank has deposited the lawful money its responsibility for its circulating notes thereby ceases. The Government holds this fund for the purpose of redeeming these circulating notes, and whatever portion of the fund may remain after the circulating notes shall have been presented for redemption goes to the Government and not to the banks.

For many years this fund of lawful money in the Treasury was inconsiderable; but when in the progress of events it became unprofitable, to a certain extent, for banks to issue circulating notes they began to retire their circulation and to deposit lawful money for their redemption. September 30, 1880, the amount of this lawful money deposited in the Treasury was $19,746,955; in 1881 it had increased to $31,152,713; in 1883 it had increased to $36,415,358; and on the first day of the current month it had increased to $42,837,408, an increase of $6,000,000 and over in the last year.

But next August this amount will begin to increase more rapidly than ever before, because under the act of July 12, 1882, extending the corporate existence of certain banks those banks are required at the end of three years from the time of such extension to deposit in the Treasury lawful money to the amount of their old circulating notes which may be then outstanding. This will within two years increase this fund to nearly if not quite $75,000,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will yield me a minute more.

Mr. WILKINS. One minute more.

Mr. DINGLEY. It must be evident to the House that the accumulation of such a fund in the Treasury will seriously contract the currency and lose to the country the interest on a large volume of idle money.

The bill reported by the committee proposes to remedy these difficulties by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to invest so much of this fund as he may think proper in United States bonds, these bonds and the accruing interest to be held for the same purpose as the lawful money deposited. This will release the large amount of money so deposited and restore it to the channels of circulation; and as the Government is to leave whatever balance of the fund may remain after redeeming the notes, practically it will save to the people the interest on the fund.

It is evident, I think, to gentlemen that there should be some legislation on this subject, whether of the character proposed by the committee or as it may be amended when it shall come before the House. I hope, therefore, that the resolution presented by my colleague on the Committee on Banking and Currency may receive a passage.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. WILKINS. I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. YAPLE. Mr. Speaker, this resolution fixes a day for the consideration of the bill known as the "McPherson currency bill," to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations to the par value of the bonds deposited to secure such notes. One reason why this bill should not receive consideration is that it comes discredited and dishonored by its own author and friends. They admit that it is only a temporary remedy—a mere makeshift, and a poor one at that. Its warmest supporters have confessed that it does not furnish a remedy for the disease; that it is wholly inadequate; that the ultimate effect of it will be to accelerate and intensify the evil results which it is intended to obviate; that something more is necessary to make it efficient. What then can be the reason for urging its consideration and passage unless it be thought that it will make necessary still further legislation in the interest of the national banks?

This bill simply gives the banks an opportunity to increase their circulation, or, as it has been expressed, it creates the capability of more national-bank currency. Suppose the banks do not exercise this capability, what then? Why, something more must be done for them to induce them to do so. They have the capability of increasing their circulation under existing law, but they do not exercise it; and why? Simply because they are waiting to be hired, and we must hire them at their own terms or tell them to go, and restore the issue and control of the currency to the Government where it belongs.

If the effect of the passage of this bill should be to induce the banks to increase their circulation $32,000,000, as some profess to think it would, it would practically be the gift of that amount to the banks without any additional security or further consideration from them. They would get the use and benefit of $32,000,000 without incurring any new or further obligation to the Government. What is the demand for this kind of legislation? None at all but the voracious greed of the banks. It is not necessary in order to provide against the evils of a contraction of the currency. Let the banks carry out their threat of surrendering their circulation, and let the Government thereupon issue legal-tender notes as a substitute. Substitute money for bank notes, which are not money.

I think that since the recent decision of the Supreme Court declaring the issue of legal-tender notes at any time constitutional, no one will question the power or the right of the Government to do this. It is no longer a matter of argument, but settled law. That decision is a fitting supplement to the proclamation of emancipation. It is one of the greatest triumphs for the people in all the ages, and it will never be nullified by any constitutional amendment. It is not only the right, but it is the duty of every national government to institute and regulate the medium of exchange. The power that controls the currency of a nation, the first great instrument of commerce, the medium of all exchanges, controls the nation itself. If a "government of the people, for the people, and by the people" is not to perish from the earth, that power must be sacredly kept in the hands of the people. The party that wages a war upon the provision of the Constitution that secures this power to the people will go down in defeat and death, and be buried in the grave of eternal infamy. No genuine Democrat will begin such a war. It will be the work of an enemy of the people, of a traitor to the Republic.

What the country demands to-day is no makeshift legislation, no toggling up of a tottering system, but a permanent solution of the currency question. The national banks are based on the national debt, and a perpetual debt is necessary to their permanence. The public debt is the bread of life to them, and they are making a fierce struggle to prevent its payment, to perpetuate it. This bill is a step in that direction. Unless it is supplemented by legislation refunding the debt for a long time, it is worse than useless. It will work positive injury. To perpetuate the debt! This is the object to be accomplished. This is the patriotic (?) purpose of its supporters.

There are advocates, even on the floor of this House, of the blessings of a national debt. The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER], who is the especial champion of the national banking system, desired an extension of the time for the payment of the tax on distilled spirits, for the reason that the tax when collected would have to be applied in payment of the national debt, and such a use of it would undermine and destroy the basis on which the national banking system rests. He saw a national bank in the bottom of that whisky bill. During the debate upon that bill this House was flooded with letters and telegrams from national bankers, urging members to vote to extend the time for the payment of that tax. Why? Because they understood that the money, when collected, would have to be applied in payment of the debt, and they can imagine no greater disaster to the country than the payment of its debt. It is one of the curses of this national banking system that its continuance makes a public debt necessary. It stands in the way of the discharge of the mortgage which the bondholders have on all the property of the nation. It stands in the way of a proper reduction of taxation. It stands in the way of industry securing its just rewards. It casts a deadly nightshade over every field and home of labor. Sir, think of our situation. We can not even pay our debt without unsettling the financial system of the country, and yet our Treasury is full to overflowing. The national banking system is a solution of the problem how to maintain war taxes in times of peace, keep up a large surplus of revenue, and not pay the debt. It makes this condition of things possible.

Suppose this bill becomes a law and the banks increase their circulation 10 per cent.? Then, as the bonds are paid off, every time a bank goes out of business the retirement of the currency will be 10 per cent. greater than under existing law. It postpones only to aggravate the evils of contraction. It adds to the power of contraction, which the banks already possess. It is "jumping from the frying-pan into the fire." It is not reasonable, however, to suppose that the banks will take out more circulation, except upon bonds drawing interest at the rates of 4 and 4½ per cent. This would have the effect to greatly enhance the market value of those bonds, and thus compel the Government to pay a higher price for its debt, an unwarrantable and unjustifiable sacrifice of the interests of the tax-payers. The Government ought to be in better business than surrendering the control of its finances to capitalists and building a corner on itself.

The national banks promised the people a currency which would always adjust itself to the demands of business; which would increase or diminish in accordance with the natural laws which control trade—an elastic, expansive, self-adjusting currency. They have not kept their promise. Notwithstanding the constant increase of the number of banks, there has been an actual contraction of their circulation. The reports of the Comptroller of the Currency show that they take out the minimum amount allowed by law. The only reason they give is that there is not sufficient profit on their circulation. Increase their profit and they will increase their circulation. This bill is simply a proposition to hire the banks to increase their circulation. The proposition is an insult to the people, and its adoption by Congress would be a disgrace to the nation. The Comptroller of the Currency in his elaborate argument for the national banks, usually called his annual report, says that if this bill should become a law it would increase the profit to the banks on circulation from two-fifths to three-fifths of 1 per cent. per annum. He further submits "that the profit on circulation may be increased to a point which will induce the banks to keep their circulation to a maximum and stop the contraction of their circulation, which is now occurring, by repealing the law taxing their circulation one-half of 1 per cent. semi-annually."

The privilege of issuing notes equal in amount to the par value of the bonds deposited, and exemption from any tax on circulation, would, he thinks, be sufficient to induce the banks to keep their circulation to a maximum and stop contraction. The profit to the banks, then, is the factor that determines the amount of this elastic, self-adjusting currency. What profit? The banks determine that. The caprice and greed of the banks, not the demands of business, fix the amount of currency for the people. The country is at the mercy of the banks. The only thing for Congress to do is to obey the commands of the banks. We deceive ourselves if we think that the passage of this bill will satisfy them. They will not be satisfied until the tax on their circulation is repealed, the greenback retired, silver demonetized, and the debt perpetuated. They will not be satisfied until the dollar is crowned king and labor wears the collar of slavery. Capital is selfish and tyrannical. If the amount of circulating medium is to be determined by the profit it yields to the banks, the rights of labor are gone.

The national-bank currency circulates not on the credit of banks, but on the credit of the people. All the property of the people—every bushel of wheat and every blade of grass—is pledged for its redemption. The guarantee of the Government gives it all its value. To make it good is the part the people play. To absorb its profits is the part the banks play. There can be no such thing as a safe currency, a currency which adjusts itself to the wants of trade, when the existence and amount of circulation depend on the profit it yields to banks of issue.

Money is the mightiest instrument in the distribution of wealth. Without it commerce is impossible. It is the life-blood of the nation. It is not the fruit of individual effort, of private enterprise, but is exclusively the creation of law. More important as an aid to production and means of exchange than railroads, and yet it is insisted that the right to issue and the power to regulate the volume of currency shall be placed and kept in the hands of associations of private persons. It is the surrender of one of the essential attributes of sovereignty. The issue of currency, metallic or paper, belongs of right exclusively to the nation. It is a sovereign function which ought to be exercised only for the benefit and profit of the whole people. The profit to the people, not to the banks, should be the determining factor. The people constitute this Government, and to promote their welfare every law should be made.

The great evil of our national banking system is the union of banking functions with those of issue. The power of issue always exercised by the banks in the field of private interest renders them dangerous to the public interest. Banks are organized and conducted for private gain. They are not patriots more than mills, factories, and railroads. Clothed with public functions they exercise them exclusively for self-aggrandizement. The only way to remedy the evils born of this illegitimate union is to suppress the bastard bank currency and restore the circulation to the nation.

The introduction of this bill is a confession of the vice of the system, a confession that the banks have no concern or regard for the welfare of the people; that they are governed entirely by self-interest. If the national banks do furnish what currency is needed in reponse to the demands of business, what need is there for this kind of legislation? If they can and refuse to, then, instead of hiring them and thus dishonoring the Government, I say repeal their charters and take from them the power of contracting and expanding the currency at their own will.

The best thing that can be done for the country is to provide for the retirement of the national banking system with the payment of the public debt. Now is the time to settle the question what shall be the paper currency of the future. We must have a paper currency of some kind, and the question is, What shall it be? Shall it be a currency that enables a few to draw a double income from their capital, to borrow the credit of the people for nothing and loan it back to them at 10 per cent.; to live on the interest of what they owe? Or shall it be a currency bearing no interest; that discharges instead of perpetuating the mortgage which now covers every cottage of toil; that saves to the people the benefits of the nation's credit? Why should not the people enjoy all the gains and emoluments to be derived from the use of their credit? What great service have the beneficiaries of this bill ever rendered to the Government that they should receive this bounty of $32,000,000? There is not a page of their history but what is blotted with some act of treachery to the people. They have rendered the service of the burglar.

Sir, we have done enough for the banks. We have yielded to their demands until for very shame we ought to blush. The most humiliating spectacle ever presented to the world is that of an independent, sovereign nation truckling to corporations of its own creation. Banks of issue are relics of feudalism. We do not need them. Let them go. The only bank of issue we want is the people's bank, the Government. There can be no true democracy until every attribute of national sovereignty is exercised by the Government for the benefit of the governed.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Six minutes.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House might well be entitled a bill to increase the premium on the high interest bonds of the Government. The 4 per cent. bonds of the Government have been bearing for the last two or three years with some exception from 20 to 25 per cent. premium. Four and a half per cent. bonds have been bearing from 12 to 14 or 15 per cent. premium. The obstacle to the maintenance of a circulation up to the wants of the country has been again and again stated before the Committee on Banking and Currency that the premium is so high on these bonds that the banks are unwilling to carry the premium on their books with a certainty at the maturity of the debt they are to get back only the principal. They are carrying thus a factitious capital. They say that they are taxed, and in the face of that they are unwilling to do the banking of the country.

It has been admitted on all sides, and never contradicted, that the passage of this bill will increase the premium on these bonds from 5 to 10 per cent. Exactly what it may be will remain to be shown by experience. If it increases the premium 5 per cent. it will increase the temptation to sell those bonds and go out of banking. It will contract the currency by exactly the extent that 5 per cent. increase of value of the bonds increases and makes effective the temptation to sell them. It will make what is now a temporary temptation a standing and an increasing temptation and coercion of interest on the banks to sell and retire circulation. It will be an appeal to their own interest to go out of banking and sell the bonds.

I have been told by one person at least who holds $800,000 of these bonds that he waits only to have the 25 per cent. premium touched again to sell his bonds and retire from circulation. It is not a single case; there are many such. If this bill passes it will have the effect not of enlarging the currency, not of keeping it up to the wants of the nation, but will have the inevitable effect of contracting the currency, and perhaps suddenly and fatally to the interests of the country.

This bill takes away from the business of the country whatever safeguard there is for conservatism in the 10 per cent. margin now deposited with the Government. If the banks use the credit of the Government they are at least called upon to leave 10 per cent. between themselves and the Government to protect the latter against fluctuations and the risks from the manner in which the banks may do their business. This wipes it away forever. From the time this bill is passed the Government takes the whole risk and responsibility without any margin and without any deposit of 10 per cent. by the banks to redeem their circulation under any circumstances of disaster which the mismanagement of the banks may bring upon the country. I say it takes away this safeguard at once and forever.

There is no more important provision in our banking system than that this 10 per cent. margin should at all times be continued in order to make the banks conservative, to keep them prudent, to let them know that any mismanagement on their part will fall first on the margin in the hands of the Government belonging to them.

Sir, I am not inimical to the national banks. I claim to have been the first to suggest the plan of national banks, but a part of the national banking system, and in my judgment a very important part of it, is this 10 per cent. margin. And I say we should hesitate before passing this bill. There are other and certain measures which will reach the end sought here without any of these risks. I hope, Mr. Speaker, the bill will not pass. In extension of my remarks I desire to add the following from the New York Times of December 14:

THE M'PHERSON BANK BILL.

The bill passed by the Senate last session to permit national banks to issue notes up to the par value of the bonds deposited as security, provided the total amount of notes does not exceed the capital actually paid in, will probably be brought up in the Senate to-morrow. It is usually known as the McPherson bill from the fact that it fell to that gentleman to devise a scheme which should sufficiently appear to amount to something to make a good basis of opposition to other schemes, but which in reality amounts to nothing or next to nothing. The situation with which the Senate undertook to deal was a not very complex one. The use of the surplus revenue in the payment of the interest-bearing debt was steadily reducing the amount of bonds available for security for bank issues. The banks were being crowded to make their election between surrendering their circulating notes or buying high-premium bonds to secure them. The problem which the Senate undertook to solve was to make it profitable to the banks to keep up the circulation without stopping the payment of the bonds or reducing taxation.

It was a queer measure that they finally concocted for this purpose. They seem to have reasoned that if the banks could only issue 10 per cent. more notes than now there would be no further difficulty. But there is every probability that the difficulty would by this means be really increased. In the first place, supposing banks generally to avail themselves of the 10 per cent. increase, the amount which would have to be changed when the 3 per cent. bonds were called would be 10 per cent. greater, and the embarrassment in making the change would also be by so much greater. In the second place the increased demand for Government bonds which would doubtless follow from this new privilege of issuing notes on them to their par value would advance the price, and this in its turn would tempt to the surrender of the bonds by banks now holding them. The radical source of the interference with the circulation would not be removed. The surplus revenue would continue to flow in. The necessity for spending it as it gathered would continue to be felt as sharply and steadily as before. Contraction, and, what is the worst feature of it, sudden and arbitrary contraction, would be just as inevitable as ever.

It is our judgment that the so-called McPherson bill, so far from being a remedy for the ills inherent in the present situation, is calculated to aggravate and perpetuate them. The one defect in our system of bank currency—and it is a very grave one—is that, while it is elastic, its movements depend not solely or principally on the demands of trade, but upon the fluctuations of the bond market. Under the influence of these there may be contraction when expansion is needed, or vice versa. The McPherson bill leaves this source of confusion and danger untouched, or may even add to it. What the banks ought to have is a class of bonds to be used as security for their circulation, not liable to great or sudden fluctuations of market value, bearing a fair market rate of interest, and not subject to disturbance from the Treasury management of the surplus revenue. That such provision is feasible we have very little question. But if the McPherson bill is to be passed by the House, it is clear that nothing else will be done this session.

Mr. WILKINS. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this resolution does not involve any discussion of the merits of the proposition. The only point for the consideration of the House now is, have we the courage to take up and discuss a question on which this nation is vitally interested? We have 2,672 national banks with an aggregate capital of $189,071,475, and in 1885 721 of these banks will have to surrender their charters. It appears during the year 1883 the currency was contracted $9,613,350. During the year 1884 the contraction amounted to $25,442,300, making a total reduction in two years of $35,055,650. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency unite in saying there will be an increased contraction of the currency unless some remedy is speedily adopted, and the question now before the House is, will we set a day when we will bring to bear our wisdom and our courage to meet the pressing necessity which is upon us? My friend from New York [Mr. POTTER], who has just taken his seat, has his peculiar views; my friend from Michigan [Mr. YAPLE] has his peculiar views. This is only to set apart a time when we can meet and discuss all these questions.

It will not do to put this matter aside on the theory that this legislation is in the interest of national banks. That is not true. The currency that is in every man's pocket, whether he be rich or poor, demands legislation, and demands it now. Be it temporary or permanent, we ought to have the courage and the wisdom to set down a day to dispose of these matters, which involve not only the commercial interests generally, but the interest of every man in this nation. I say let us fix upon a day when we shall be able to meet the question squarely and fairly and like men.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILKINS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER].

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] has stated the true position, or rather the true question before the House. It is not whether we are sure of the wisdom of the proposition known as the McPherson bill or of the bill presented by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and amended by the Committee on Banking and Currency. That is not the question, but the simple question is whether this House will set apart a day at the request of the Committee on Banking and Currency for the purpose of considering the proposition generally and taking such action as may be necessary in the premises. For myself I am free to say that the McPherson bill is not acceptable to me at all, and I shall not with my present views vote for it. But it is due to the Senate as an act of courtesy, it is due to the country at large, it is due to the majority of the Committee on Banking and Currency, that these two bills should be brought before the House. They are the only bills here of a general character which have been reported by this committee to this House during the present Congress. It is not required that any one shall vote for them. They will be open to amendment and to discussion. For myself, I propose to offer an amendment if the opportunity is afforded to me which will settle this difficulty for all time to come.

And the other bill is quite as important as this one, that is the bill known as the Dingley bill. This redemption is growing and growing continually, amounting to $42,000,000. It is provided where it can not be used that it shall be put out and invested in bonds of the United States. That is the proposition of the bill. The evil is going on increasing, and it must increase in the nature of things. It is that much taken out of the currency of the country of silver or gold or both, and locked up by the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem the notes of the national banks. For the difficulty of the circulation of the national banks does not proceed as I supposed from the fact that we are calling in 3 per cent. bonds annually. That is not the disease which affects the people. It was suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] that it is a temptation to the holders of those high-priced bonds; it is a temptation to any bank holding the 4 and 4½ bonds to reduce their circulation and bring those within the minimum required by the law, which is $50,000 for the largest bank of the United States, by withdrawing and selling these bonds. They may call in the high-priced bonds, that is the 4 and 4½ bonds, and when the premium is increased it is the strongest possible temptation for the banks to sell them for the benefit of their stockholders. That is one of the great troubles we have to guard against, and that, in my opinion, will be increased.

These bonds may go higher, certainly; and in my judgment they will under the operation of the McPherson bill; but, whether they do or not, the time is near at hand when no bank in the United States will hold more than $50,000 of them on deposit, which of itself will be a reduction in the national-bank circulation to the neighborhood of about $100,000,000, instead of $287,000,000 as now.

That is the whole question that is presented. It is not to be decided now, but you are simply asked whether or not you will fix a day in the future when these bills may be discussed and some action taken upon them by the House, such as it may deem proper in view of the circumstances. I hope that the House, therefore, will at least give us a day when we may consider either or both of them, or the Dingley bill, which I consider of vast importance.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CASSIDY. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 45 members voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 87, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—175.

Adams, G. E.	Dibrell,	Keifer,	Rockwell,
Atkinson,	Dingley,	Kelley,	Rogers, W. F.
Bagley,	Dowd,	Ketcham,	Rowell,
Barbour,	Dunham,	Lacey,	Russell,
Bayne,	Elliott,	Laird,	Ryan,
Belmont,	Ellis,	Lawrence,	Scales,
Bennett,	Ermentrout,	Lewis,	Seney,
Bisbee,	Evans,	Long,	Seymour,
Boutelle,	Everhart,	Lore,	Shelley,
Boyle,	Ferrell,	Lyman,	Skinner, C. R.
Brainerd,	Findlay,	McComas,	Smith, A. H.
Bratton,	Finerty,	McCormick,	Smith, H. Y.
Breitung,	Follett,	Millard,	Snyder,
Brewer, F. B.	Foran,	Mitchell,	Spriggs,
Brewer, J. H.	Funston,	Money,	Stephenson,
Broadhead,	George,	Morrill,	Stevens,
Brown, W. W.	Goff,	Morse,	Stewart, J. W.
Browne, T. M.	Hammond,	Murphy,	Stone,
Buckner,	Hanback,	Murray,	Strait,
Burleigh,	Hancock,	Mutchler,	Struble,
Cabell,	Hardeman,	Neece,	Talbott,
Caldwell,	Hardy,	Nelson,	Taylor, E. B.
Campbell, J. E.	Harmer,	Ochiltree,	Taylor, J. D.
Campbell, J. M.	Hatch, H. H.	O'Ferrall,	Thomas,
Candler,	Henderson, D. B.	O'Hara,	Turner, H. G.
Cannon,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Neill, Charles	Van Alstyne,
Chace,	Hepburn,	Parker,	Wadsworth,
Clay,	Hewitt, A. S.	Payne,	Wait,
Clements,	Hill,	Perkins,	Wakefield,
Collins,	Hiscock,	Peters,	Warner, A. J.
Converse,	Hitt,	Phelps,	Washburn,
Covington,	Hoblitzell,	Poland,	Weaver,
Cox, S. S.	Holmes,	Post,	Wemple,
Cox, W. R.	Hooper,	Price,	Whiting,
Crisp,	Hopkins,	Randall,	Wilkins,
Culbertson, W. W.	Horr,	Rankin,	Willis,
Cullen,	Howey,	Ranney,	Wilson, James
Curtin,	Hunt,	Ray, G. W.	Wilson, W. L.
Cutcheon,	Hurd,	Ray, Ossian	Winans, John
Dargan,	James,	Reed,	Wise, G. D.
Davidson,	Jeffords,	Reese,	Wolford,
Davis, G. R.	Johnson,	Rice,	Woodward,
Davis, R. T.	Jordan,	Robinson, J. S.	York.
Dibble,	Kean,	Robinson, W. E.

NAYS—87.

Aiken,	Forney,	Matson,	Skinner, T. G.
Alexander,	Geddes,	Miller, J. F.	Springer,
Anderson,	Glascock,	Mills,	Stewart, Charles
Ballentine,	Graves,	Morrison,	Stockslager,
Barksdale,	Green,	Moulton,	Taylor, J. M.
Blount,	Halsell,	Muldrow,	Thompson,
Breckinridge,	Hatch, W. H.	Nicholls,	Throckmorton,
Buchanan,	Henley,	Oates,	Tillman,
Budd,	Herbert,	O'Neill, J. J.	Townshend,
Burnes,	Hewitt, G. W.	Patton,	Tully,
Carleton,	Holman,	Payson,	Turner, Oscar
Cassidy,	Houseman,	Peel,	Van Eaton,
Chalmers,	Jones, B. W.	Pierce,	Wallace,
Clardy,	Jones, J. H.	Potter,	Ward,
Cobb,	Jones, J. K.	Pryor,	Warner, Richard
Cook,	Jones, J. T.	Pusey,	Wellborn,
Cosgrove,	Kleiner,	Reagan,	Williams,
Culberson, D. B.	Lamb,	Riggs,	Winans, E. B.
Davis, L. H.	Lanham,	Rogers, J. H.	Wood,
Dockery,	Le Fevre,	Rosecrans,	Worthington,
Dunn,	Lowry,	Shively,	Yaple.
Eldredge,	McMillin,	Singleton,

NOT VOTING—61.

Adams, J. J.	Ellwood,	Libbey,	Spooner,
Arnot,	English,	Lovering,	Steele,
Barr,	Fiedler,	McAdoo,	Storm,
Beach,	Fyan,	McCoid,	Sumner, C. A.
Belford,	Garrison,	Maybury,	Sumner, D. H
Bingham,	Gibson,	Miller, S. H.	Tucker,
Blackburn,	Greenleaf,	Milliken,	Valentine,
Blanchard,	Guenther,	Morgan,	Vance,
Bland,	Hart,	Muller,	Weller,
Bowen,	Haynes,	Nutting,	White, J. D.
Brumm,	Hemphill,	Paige,	White, Milo
Campbell, Felix	Holton,	Pettibone,	Wise, J. S.
Connolly,	Houk,	Robertson,	Young.
Deuster,	Hutchins,	Shaw,
Dorsheimer,	Kellogg,	Slocum,
Eaton,	King,	Smalls,

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to record my vote in the affirmative. I did not respond to my name on the first roll-call——

Mr. HISCOCK. Was the gentleman's name called on the second roll-call?

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to say that my name was not called on the second roll-call and I did not vote on the first. I was standing here ready to respond to my name, but it was not called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). The Chair is informed that some one on the first roll-call responded to the name of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. He was, therefore, recorded as having voted in the negative, and his name was not called on the second roll-call. He states that he was listening in order to respond to his name on that call. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that under these circumstances the gentleman is entitled to the right of having his name recorded.

The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Illinois.

The roll-call was resumed and concluded as above.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WILKINS. I object.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the pairs.

The following members were announced as being paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. KING with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STORM with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. SPOONER, until December 17.

The following were announced as being paired on all political questions for this day:

Mr. MCADOO with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. VANCE with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. ENGLISH with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. WELLER with Mr. HOLTON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ISSUE OF TREASURY NOTES AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call rests with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to move to suspend the rules to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 7232) to prohibit the issue of Treasury notes of less denomination than five dollars, and to provide for the issue of one, two, and five dollar silver cetificates, and put the same upon its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That on and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to print and issue Treasury notes of a smaller denomination than $5.

SEC. 2. That any holder of standard silver dollars or silver certificates may deposit the same with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in sums of not less than $10, and receive therefor silver certificates of the denomination, at the option of the holder, of $1, $2, or $5: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the issuing of silver certificates in other denominations, as now authorized by law.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, I think there should be some explanation of this bill, and for that purpose I demand a second.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be taken as ordered.

There was no objection, and a second was considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan for fifteen minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa for the same length of time in opposition.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the effect of this bill if it becomes a law may be briefly stated as follows: It will gradually retire all Treasury notes below the denomination of $5, and the amount so retired will be reissued in notes of larger denominations under the provisions of existing law.

Its further effect will be to exchange the present large silver certificates for others of a smaller denomination, to wit, for one, two, and five dollar notes. It will not change the present volume of either Treasury notes, silver dollars, or silver certificates. It will eventually utilize silver coins or their representative certificates for the entire circulation below the denomination of $5.

The present silver certificates are of large denominations, the lowest being $10 and the highest $1,000. They are too large for the use of the great mass of people in the current daily transactions of life. For this reason they flow into the banks, from the banks into the custom-houses, and thence back into the Treasury of the United States.

About one hundred millions of notes and coins of the denominations of one and two dollars are now necessary for the convenience of our people; and by employing silver or its representative certificates exclusively within this field that large sum can be diverted from the great channels of trade. These smaller denominations, Mr. Speaker, of one and two dollar notes are seldom if ever deposited in banks, but unfortunately the silver certificates are issued in large denominations, nothing less than $10. The result is that for domestic use, for the current transactions of daily life, the silver certificates are too large. For instance, if a farmer takes a load of grain to market he may be paid in silver certificates, but there being none of these notes smaller than $10 he is unable to take them home to prosecute the business which it is there necessary to transact—to pay his laborers, to settle small transactions with his neighbors, or to be used as pocket-money. The consequence is he goes to the bank and exchanges these silver certificates for smaller notes.

The bank on the morrow, desiring to make its account good in New York or Chicago, immediately selects these silver certificates (as they do not count upon its reserve) to forward to those commercial centers. They are forwarded to Chicago, New York, Boston, or New Orleans, where custom-houses are situated; they go into the banks there; they can not be counted as part of the reserve of these banks, consequently they are the very first thing selected with which to pay United States customs duties. The result is shown in the report of the Treasurer of the United States. It is there shown that during the last two years and four months 25.6 per cent. of the customs duties paid in the city of New York (and nearly all our customs duties are there paid) were paid in silver certificates. It is further shown that during the last twelve months 28.8 per cent. of the customs duties in New York city were paid in silver certificates. It is shown that during the month of October last 32.1 per cent. of these customs duties were paid in these silver certificates.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have about one thousand eight hundred and six millions of circulation altogether in this country, and that the circulation of silver certificates on the 1st day of October was but $96,491,251, being only 5.3 per cent. of our total circulation, yet 32.1 per cent. of the customs duties of the United States received at the New York custom-house were paid in these silver certificates; and that, too, chiefly on account of the fact that these certificates are of such large denominations.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is what the gentleman is now stating not due to the fact that silver is relatively cheaper than gold?

Mr. LACEY. It is not, and for this reason: The holder of a silver certificate knows that to-day a silver dollar or its representative is equal in purchasing and debt-paying power to a gold dollar, not on account of the intrinsic value of the silver dollar, but because the Treasury of the United States, which is the great national clearing-house, conducts its affairs upon the theory that gold is the real standard of value in this country. The effect is precisely the same as though silver was exchangeable at the United States Treasury for gold, at par of its coinage value.

Just so long as the Treasury of the United States treats gold as the real standard, and the money of account; so long as it uses gold in settling its daily balances in New York; so long as the Government uses gold in paying the principal of its called bonds; so long as it uses gold in paying the interest on the public debt; so long as it uses gold to redeem its greenbacks; just so long as the Treasury is able to do these things, so long will the silver certificate be worth to the holder 100 cents on the dollar. Therefore, knowing this, the holder of these certificates does not precipitate them into the Treasury because of their lesser value, but because they are of too large denominations for the ordinary domestic transactions of life, too large to be used as the pocket-money of the people.

When I introduced this bill I had in it a section which called for the suspension of the coinage of the Bland dollar. But the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures struck out that section, and the bill as it stands to-day is the unanimous report of every member of the committee; and on that committee we have men of every shade of opinion—those who believe in a standard of gold alone, those who believe in a standard of silver alone, and those who believe in bimetallism—and every man on that committee, from the chairman down, is in favor of this bill as reported. And why? Simply because every man, no matter what his opinion may be as to the coinage of the Bland dollar, believes that silver should and must be utilized for the purposes of subsidiary coinage and for the current daily transactions of life. All the world over it must be so. And this bill, Mr. Speaker, provides for precisely that and nothing more. It utilizes the silver dollar, or its representative silver certificate, for the pocket-money of the people, for the current daily transactions of life in this country.

Now, whether we suspend the coinage of legal-tender silver or not, this bill ought to pass. I am one of those who believe that the further coinage at this time of the Bland dollar will bring us into great danger. If, with the present coinage, 32 per cent. of the customs duties are now paid in silver, before another Congress shall assemble and enact and put in operation a law to suspend the coinage of silver, more than 50 per cent., ay, I believe a much larger percentage of our customs duties than that will be paid in silver certificates.

When we remember that the Treasury has been gaining silver and losing gold steadily ever since we commenced the coinage of the standard dollar in 1878; when we remember that on the 30th of September, 1877, only 6.5 per cent. of the coin in the Treasury was silver, and that on the 30th of last September the percentage of silver had increased to 44.6 per cent., we can not but be apprehensive that we are approaching with accelerating pace a time when the Treasury of the United States must of necessity be forced to abandon its attempt to maintain gold as the actual standard, and must begin using silver as the money of account. This will bring about the settlement of the daily balances at the New York Clearing-House in silver; it will bring about the payment of the principal of the public debt in silver, the payment of the interest on the Government bonds in silver, the redemption of the greenback in silver; and thus the whole superstructure of currency in this country will descend to a silver standard based upon the Bland dollar, worth but 83.8 cents. This would retire $557,000,000 of gold coin from circulation and cause such a contraction of the currency as would prostrate all the commercial affairs of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that the temper of this House, as shown at its last session during the consideration of the bill to retire trade-dollars, precludes the expectation of the passage of any measure suspending the enforced coinage of the Bland dollar. I greatly fear that we are drifting into a monetary condition from which our successors will find it a difficult matter to deliver us. We have undertaken single-handed to stem a tide which is submerging the whole commercial world. We seem to be so intent on making a market for the silver bullion of our bonanza princes that we fail to notice the dangers which beset our pathway. The relative production of silver is steadily increasing, while its use as coin is as steadily decreasing.

In 1878, when we began the coinage of the Bland dollar, the world's product of gold bullion was $114,000,000, while in 1883 it was but $94,000,000. In 1878 the world's production of silver bullion was only $78,000,000, while in 1883 it advanced to $114,000,000. In addition to this we see all the great commercial nations slowly turning their backs upon silver and preparing to adopt a gold standard. To-day but three countries are coining legal-tender silver in any quantity worthy of mention, to wit, India, Mexico, and the United States, and both India and Mexico long since adopted the silver standard. All this tends to show that the continued coinage of legal-tender silver in this country must at last result in our adopting the silver standard and taking our place among the third and fourth rate powers of the earth, so far, at least, as relates to our monetary affairs.

Why, sir, when we commenced coining the Bland dollar its bullion value was 93.46 cents; to-day it is worth but 83.81 cents. How long, I ask, must we continue on this road to bring it to a parity with gold? Have we not tried this method long enough? Would it not be wiser to try a suspension of its coinage, for a time at least, and see whether such a course will not lead to an agreement among the great powers of Europe and America which shall lead to the free coinage of both gold and silver upon a common ratio between the two metals, and thus correctly and permanently settle this great problem? I sincerely believe this to be the wisest policy, but I am morally certain that no such measure can become a law during the life of the present Congress. I accept the inevitable, and propose the present bill as likely to put off the evil day and protect us from overwhelming disaster until another Congress can assemble and deliver us.

Table showing increase of silver in the United States Treasury.

Date.	Gold.	Silver.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
September 30, 1876	90.2	9.8
September 30, 1877	93.5	6.5
September 30, 1878	83.0	17.0
September 30, 1879	76.2	23.8
September 30, 1880	63.3	36.7
September 30, 1881	64.7	35.3
September 30, 1882	55.4	44.6
September 30, 1883	58.5	41.5
September 30, 1884	55.4	44.6

Table showing proportions of world's production of gold and silver.

Semi-decades.	Average yearly production.		Proportion.	Average price of silver.*
	Gold.	Silver.
1852–1856	$145,000,000	$40,500,000	100 to 28	61 1/16
1857–1861	127,184,000	41,220,000	100 to 32	61 1/2
1862–1866	123,843,000	49,755,000	100 to 39	61 1/4
1867–1871	123,251,000	53,115,000	100 to 43	60 1/2
1872–1876	111,383,750	69,490,682	100 to 62	57 1/8
1877–1878	113,892,085	78,338,158	100 to 69	53 1/2
1879	105,365,697	81,037,220	100 to 77	51 1/2
1880	106,346,786	96,704,978	100 to 90	52 3/16
1881	107,202,733	102,309,675	100 to 95	51 7/16
1882	103,161,532	109,446,595	100 to 106	51 1/8
1883	94,000,000	114,000,000	100 to 120	.....

*Pence per ounce in London.

GOLD VALUE OF STANDARD SILVER DOLLAR.

	Cents.
February 28, 1878 (date of passage of Bland bill)	93.46
March 12, 1884	87.5
December 12, 1884	83.81

How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LACEY] has seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. LACEY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. COOK. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This is a proposition to withdraw from circulation all Treasury notes of denominations less than $5 and substitute for them silver certificates of equal or like denominations. I believe the time is at hand when unless we suspend the coinage of the silver dollar it will constitute the only metal currency of our people. We have been able to maintain it at par with gold simply because, so far as it has circulated at all, we have absorbed it at home. Whenever it goes abroad, whenever it becomes necessary that it be sent out of the country, it must be subjected to a discount. That discount, by its reflex action, will operate upon us, and we shall find that we have what is now not ascertained by our experience, a cheaper currency than either gold or paper; and I think all experience has shown that where there are currencies of unequal value, all business is done by the cheaper.

Unless we now, at least temporarily, suspend the coinage of the silver dollar, gold will disappear from circulation; it will become what it once was—simply an article of merchandise, upon which the gold gamblers will again begin their business in the money centers. So I think the very first thing we ought to do is to provide for a suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar, or provide at least that it shall not longer be obligatory on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to coin so much per month. I am a bimetallist, but would have all dollars of equal value, so they will float together in our commerce. All dollars should be legal-tenders and worth the full sum of 100 cents.

But why should we withdraw from circulation the Treasury note? Is it to compel silver to circulate? If we desire to put silver in circulation why not suspend the use of bills of any description of a lower denomination than $5, and compel the country to do its business on this depreciated money? If we force it into circulation its use will as a matter of course tend to keep up its price.

But if a change is to be made at all I would prefer that we should continue the circulation of Treasury notes of these lower denominations and put by their side silver certificates of the denominations of one, two, and five dollars. The country needs these smaller denominations of money. There is a demand for them. There is scarcely a Representative on this floor who has not been importuned by his constituency to see that more of this character of currency is put afloat. Not long ago I introduced into this House a bill providing for the reissue of $10,000,000 of fractional currency; and I believe that ought to be done. At least it is important that we shall continue in the hands of the people (for the wants of business require it) the one and two dollar bills already in circulation; and I would be willing to add to them an equal volume of currency of like denominations in the form of silver certificates based upon silver deposits. I protest that there is no occasion for retiring these smaller bills, this favorite and necessary currency of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COOK. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the coinage of silver, but, on the contrary, am in favor of its unlimited coinage. I am opposed to this bill simply because it proposes to retire from circulation greenbacks and substitute something of a different character—something not a legal tender. I would not be opposed to the bill if it simply provided for the issue of these silver certificates without interfering with the greenbacks. The provision of this bill inhibiting the future printing of Treasury notes of a less denomination than $5 would eventually retire from circulation the legal-tender currency of this country below that denomination.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Under this bill, will not a person have the choice between a legal-tender silver dollar and its representative certificate; and is not a legal-tender silver dollar just as good as a legal-tender greenback?

Mr. COOK. That is true so far as concerns the silver dollar; but it does not apply to your silver certificate. If a man has a debt of less than $5 to meet, his creditor may refuse to accept the silver certificates, and then he must go and obtain the silver dollars. In addition to this, to the value of the bullion in it, the silver dollar or certificate is more costly than the greenback dollar.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the only remedy for the present difficulties in the currency lies in our adopting a currency that shall be in all denominations a legal tender. I am in favor primarily of a legal-tender currency as against silver certificates and against bank issues of all characters.

One of the principal elements of strength in money, as it is one of its highest functions, is its debt-paying power. A knowledge that the money I have will at all times cancel my obligations gives me confidence in it and goes far toward making its purchasing power stable.

The Supreme Court having settled the doctrine of our right to issue legal-tender currency, it is only a question of time when Congress will accept the doctrine that all the currency of the country must be issued and its volume controlled by the Government, and that it must be a full legal tender for all debts, public and private. The sooner we come to this the sooner will we have a stable and permanent money.

I know that nine-tenths of you deride us Greenbackers, but the Supreme Court—the most conservative body in the land—has been converted, and necessity with the logic of events and time will bring you all to it.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman understands, I presume, that the one-dollar and two-dollar notes which may be retired under this bill are to be reissued in other denominations, so that there will be no contraction of the greenback currency.

Mr. COOK. It is probable that under existing laws higher denominations would be issued to take the place of those retired, but the hasty examination I have been able to give this bill (I had no knowledge of its coming up) leaves me in doubt on this. Certainly, however, it retires all our legal-tender currency of small denominations, and to that I am opposed.

It seems so inexplicable to me that while everybody is satisfied with our greenback currency, and it circulates in preference to even gold itself, and costs the Government much less than any other money, yet here among those who ought to be its friends it is subject to constant menace and attack. It will take care of itself if only you will let it alone. If you want silver certificates, all right; let them stand by the side of the greenback dollar; it has demonstrated its superiority in the past. We Greenbackers have confidence in its future; if you will persist in doubting, stand by and be convinced. I yield to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. CASSIDY].

Mr. CASSIDY. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to discuss this question; and I take the floor chiefly for the purpose of replying to some of the assertions made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

In considering this subject at this time we are met with the same old arguments that have always been presented against silver. It was predicted in the beginning that if silver should be remonetized and given a place among the money metals of the land we would attract here all the depreciated silver of the Old World and drive out from this country all of our gold.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, ever since the remonetization in 1879 we have attracted to this country from the Old World more than three hundred millions of gold, and during the same period we have exported more than seventy-five millions of silver, contradicting every assertion and prediction made at the time, and since, by the enemies of silver; showing also that this metal among the people of this country is of equal dignity and of equal value with gold by the people everywhere.

So far as this bill is concerned, authorizing the issue of silver certificates in denominations of $1 and $2, if those opposed to silver would frankly admit that there is to-day ninety-six million of silver dollars in the Treasury of the United States in circulation among the people of the country through the medium of these silver certificates, then I would have no objection to the bill. But the effect of the bill when it becomes a law will be to place an additional amount of silver certificates in circulation, leaving the metal itself to accumulate in the Treasury, thus furnishing an argument at the same time to gentlemen who will not treat the question fairly that silver will not circulate among the people. I fear that its passage will mean the practical demonetization of the standard dollar, that it will drive all of the silver out of circulation.

I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that there is no form of paper money issued by the Government of the United States which is of higher character than that of these silver certificates. They are far preferable to any mere promise to pay, because every dollar of silver certificates has intrinsic value behind it. On the lowest estimate behind every dollar of the silver certificate there is to-day 92 per cent. of intrinsic value. In case of panic, in case of war, there never could be any depreciation of silver certificates below that sum, because in the bullion markets of the world this silver pledged for the redemption of the silver certificates would command 90 per cent. Everybody knows, in the case of a crisis, in the case of a foreign war, it is the universal rule for the metals to appreciate in value, whereas your mere promises to pay, your greenback circulation, as we have seen during the late war depreciated as low as 35 cents on the dollar. Yet gentlemen will undertake to say a silver certificate or the silver dollar itself is not a better form of money than these greenback promises to pay. Why, sir, it is the money of the Constitution, it is the money of the fathers, and I say that any legislation which seeks to displace it in this country should not be enacted by this House. The true theory is to discontinue the issue of all paper money below bills of $5, leaving the small transactions of the people to be conducted in silver—the hard metal itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. LACEY. I ask whether the time assigned to the opposition has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has.

Mr. LACEY. Then I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I consider the most important question before this House, or before Congress at this session, to be some measure to prevent a contraction of the volume of money. There is one feature of this bill which should be well understood, and if my understanding of it be correct I have no objection to the bill. And that feature is this: that as the one and two dollar notes are canceled there shall be a reissue of a like amount in five, ten, or other denominations of United States notes, so that there shall be no possibility of a contraction of the total volume of the circulation. With the understanding that this is the meaning of the bill, then the substitution of the silver certificates of one and two dollars in place of one and two dollar greenbacks is not to me objectionable. I see no reason why that should not be done, provided the total volume of money is not reduced. Its effect would be simply to mobilize the use of silver, by authorizing these silver certificates to circulate in place of the metal itself, in denominations of one and two dollars, as well as in tens and twenties, as now. Silver coin will probably not circulate any more than now, and perhaps no less than now. I can not see that this bill will make any change in that regard. It is a matter of convenience to have small notes of some kind, but whether greenbacks or silver certificates is not very material. But I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me present my amendment. It is as follows: Add to the end of the bill the following: "Nor the reduction of the total volume of United States notes;" so that if adopted the proviso in the bill will then read:

Provided, Nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the issuing of silver certificates in other denominations as now authorized by law, nor the reduction of the total volume of United States notes.

Mr. LACEY. I am perfectly willing to accept that modification of the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that makes it perfectly safe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Then I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that that be inserted as an amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, Mr. BAYNE, and others objected.

Mr. CANNON. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the objection has no force, because without the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio the law would be precisely as he desires it to be with the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio if he deems that to be true?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not want to leave a possibility of doubt about it, and hence have proposed this amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is there reasonable doubt, or is there any question of doubt?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The question has been raised already. For myself I do not think the law is susceptible of any other interpretation than that put upon it by the gentleman from Iowa himself, that the total volume of greenback circulation can not be reduced.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask my colleague a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. HILL. I hope he will yield to me for a question.

I wish to ask my colleague if the passage of this bill will not result in a reduction of the volume of Treasury notes?

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly it will.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. As the bill stands I do not think it would myself; but, as I have already stated, I would rather place it beyond all peradventure, and hence have offered the amendment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I only yielded two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio returned the floor to the gentleman, and the Chair must consider these interruptions as coming out of the time belonging to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LACEY. I did not consent that such interruptions should be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Michigan will be recognized for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. CHACE. One can hardly discuss with any satisfaction such a question within the limits of three minutes, but there are two or three propositions that I desire to state to the House before action is taken upon this bill. It embraces no great seminal principle. I wish it did. I wish it might have in some degree provided for a suspension of the coinage of silver or for a suspension of the circulation of it for a time. I have grave doubts in my own mind in regard to it, but have concluded to support the bill, and for these reasons, as the law stands at present, the result is to force the circulation of silver upon the people of this country. It is inconvenient and bulky and the people reject it.

Now, in so far as that objection exists to silver, this bill affords some amelioration. It is simply a matter of convenience for the people. It gives them the paper representative of the dollar; the paper dollar itself instead of the heavy, bulky silver dollar. This paper will be worth, just as the dollar itself is worth, only 83 cents on the dollar. Therefore, in that respect, the situation is not changed.

So far as regards the question as between bimetallism and monometallism there is no change. My own judgment, however, is that the gentlemen who have spoken upon the other side are mistaken in regard to the effect of this law. I believe it will reduce the greenback circulation by just as much as it issues silver certificates.

Now, I desired not to mislead. I will not take advantage of any misapprehension. If I vote for or support this bill I want to be distinctly understood as to the grounds upon which I do support it. I would not wish to convey any misapprehension or misimpression to the mind of any gentleman. It is my belief, therefore, that it will result in a reduction of the greenback circulation in the manner that I have stated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I am somewhat surprised that my friend from Rhode Island should have taken the view that he now takes in reference to the operation of the first section of this act. I certainly would not have introduced the bill nor would I have voted for it if its effect would be to diminish the volume of the greenback circulation one dollar. I never was clearer on any subject in my life than I am on this point, that it will not decrease the volume of the greenback circulation in any degree. I am perfectly willing, however, to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, which will settle the matter beyond controversy, if I am permitted to do so, and only regret that it is not in the original bill.

When we come to consider that the volume of greenbacks is now fixed by law at $346,000,000; that the Secretary of the Treasury is daily retiring the ones and twos, and issuing fives in their place; retiring tens and issuing twenties, and vice versa, under the present law, and thus changing the amount in circulation of each denomination every day in the year, I would like to know how a simple provision of law that he is not to issue any more one or two dollar notes is going to reduce the volume of the currency or prevent the issuance of fives or tens or other denominations in place of the ones and twos thus retired.

Mr. CHACE. Because this bill provides for the substitution of silver certificates for greenbacks of small denominations.

Mr. LACEY. It does not provide in terms for the substitution of silver certificates for greenbacks. The first section says it shall not be lawful after the passage of the act to issue Treasury notes of a smaller denomination than $5; and a subsequent section says that the Treasury may issue silver certificates of the denomination of one, two, or five dollars. I have consulted with the Treasurer of the United States and with the Director of the Mint, and they make no objection to this bill. It meets their approval. I will only add that there is no repealing clause in the bill, and nothing increasing or diminishing in any manner the volume of legal-tender notes as now fixed by law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on this bill has expired. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. NEECE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 56 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 50, nays 219, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—50.

Adams, G. E.	Davis, G. R.	Horr,	Reagan,
Alexander,	Dowd,	Houseman,	Rosecrans,
Barksdale,	Follett,	Jones, J. H.	Smalls,
Barr,	Foran,	Keifer,	Stewart, Charles
Blackburn,	Fyan,	Kleiner,	Stone.
Breitung,	Glascock,	Lacey,	Tillman,
Brewer, F. B.	Hanback,	Lanham,	Van Eaton,
Candler,	Hardy,	Lovering,	Wadsworth,
Cannon,	Hart,	Miller, J. F.	Washburn,
Chace,	Hatch, H. H.	Money,	White, J. D.
Chalmers,	Herbert,	Muldrow,	Wilson, W. L.
Culbertson, W. W.	Hewitt, G. W.	Oates,
Cutcheon,	Holman,	Perkins,

NAYS—219.

Aiken,	Dunn,	Lowry,	Seymour,
Anderson,	Eldredge,	Lyman,	Shelley,
Atkinson,	Elliott,	McComas,	Shively,
Bagley,	Ermentrout,	McCormick,	Singleton,
Ballentine,	Evans,	McMillin,	Skinner, C. R.
Bayne,	Everhart,	Matson,	Skinner, T. G.
Beach,	Ferrell,	Millard,	Smith, A. H.
Belmont,	Findlay,	Milliken,	Smith, H. Y.
Bennett,	Finerty,	Mills,	Snyder,
Bisbee,	Forney,	Mitchell,	Spriggs,
Blount,	Funston,	Morrison,	Springer,
Boutelle,	Geddes,	Morse,	Stephenson,
Boyle,	Goff,	Moulton,	Stevens,
Brainerd,	Green,	Murphy,	Stewart, J. W.
Bratton,	Greenleaf,	Murray,	Stockslager,
Breckinridge,	Guenther,	Mutchler,	Strait,
Brewer, J. H.	Halsell,	Neece,	Struble,
Broadhead,	Hammond,	Nelson,	Sumner, C. A.
Browne, T. M.	Hancock,	Nicholls,	Talbott,
Brown, W. W.	Hardeman,	Nutting,	Taylor, E. B.
Buchanan,	Harmer,	Ochiltree,	Taylor, J. D.
Buckner,	Hatch, W. H.	O'Ferrall,	Taylor, J. M.
Budd,	Hemphill,	O'Hara,	Thomas,
Burleigh,	Henderson, D. B.	O'Neill, Charles	Thompson,
Burnes,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Neill, J. J.	Throckmorton,
Cabell,	Henley,	Parker,	Townshend,
Caldwell,	Hepburn,	Patton,	Tully,
Campbell, J. E.	Hewitt, A. S.	Payne,	Turner, H. G.
Campbell, J. M.	Hill,	Payson,	Turner, Oscar
Carleton,	Hiscock,	Peel,	Van Alstyne,
Cassidy,	Hitt,	Pierce,	Wait,
Clardy,	Hoblitzell,	Peters,	Wakefield,
Clements,	Holmes,	Phelps,	Wallace,
Cobb,	Hooper,	Poland,	Ward,
Collins,	Hopkins,	Post,	Warner, A. J.
Converse,	Howey,	Potter,	Warner, Richard
Cook,	Hunt,	Price,	Weaver,
Cosgrove,	Hurd,	Pryor,	Wellborn,
Covington,	James,	Randall,	Wemple,
Cox, S. S.	Jeffords,	Rankin,	White, Milo
Cox, W. R.	Johnson,	Ranney,	Whiting,
Crisp,	Jones, B. W.	Ray, G. W.	Wilkins,
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. K.	Ray, Ossian	Williams,
Cullen,	Jones, J. T.	Reed,	Willis,
Curtin,	Jordan,	Reese,	Wilson, James
Dargan,	Kean,	Rice,	Winans, E. B.
Davidson,	Kelley,	Riggs,	Winans, John
Davis, L. H.	Ketcham,	Robinson, J. S.	Wise, G. D.
Davis, R. T.	Laird,	Rockwell,	Wolford,
Deuster,	Lamb,	Rogers, J. H.	Wood,
Dibble,	Lawrence,	Rogers, W. F.	Woodward,
Dibrell,	Le Fevre,	Rowell,	Worthington,
Dingley,	Lewis,	Ryan,	Yaple,
Dockery,	Long,	Scales,	York.
Dunham,	Lore,	Seney,

NOT VOTING—54.

Adams, J. J.	Ellis,	Libbey,	Shaw,
Arnot,	Ellwood,	McAdoo,	Slocum,
Barbour,	English,	McCoid,	Spooner,
Belford,	Fiedler,	Maybury,	Steele,
Bingham,	Garrison,	Miller, S. H.	Storm,
Blanchard,	George,	Morgan,	Sumner, D. H.
Bland,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Tucker,
Bowen,	Graves,	Muller,	Valentine,
Brumm,	Haynes,	Paige,	Vance,
Campbell, Felix	Holton,	Pettibone,	Weller,
Clay,	Houk,	Pusey,	Wise, J. S.
Connolly,	Hutchins,	Robertson,	Young.
Dorsheimer,	Kellogg,	Robinson, W. E.
Eaton,	King,	Russell,

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

On motion of Mr. LORE, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was given to Mr. CHACE, to Mr. COOK, and to Mr. LACEY to extend in the RECORD their remarks on the bill just voted upon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, that the President of the Senate, together with a committee of thirteen Senators to be appointed by him, and the Speaker of the House, together with one Representative or Delegate from each State and Territory in the Union, to be selected by him, be requested to attend at the Executive Mansion on Tuesday, the 16th instant, at 12.30 p. m., to witness on behalf of the Congress of the United States the opening of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition at New Orleans by the President, and to adopt and forward thereto such address of congratulation as may seem appropriate to the occasion.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1838) for the erection of a public building at Akron, Ohio;

A bill (S. 2391) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10 ,1880; and

A bill (S. 2393) to change the name of the Slater National Bank of North Providence, R. I.

OPENING OF NEW ORLEANS EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the concurrent resolution which has been adopted by the two Houses the Chair announces the following committee on the part of the House to attend at the Executive Mansion to witness the opening of the World's Industrial and Cotton Exposition by the President: Mr. OATES of Alabama, Mr. ROGERS of Arkansas, Mr. HENLEY of California, Mr. BELFORD of Colorado, Mr. SEYMOUR of Connecticut, Mr. LORE of Delaware, Mr. DAVIDSON of Florida, Mr. HARDEMAN of Georgia, Mr. HITT of Illinois, Mr. MATSON of Indiana, Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa, Mr. PERKINS of Kansas, Mr. HALSELL of Kentucky, Mr. ELLIS of Louisiana, Mr. DINGLEY of Maine, Mr. COVINGTON of Maryland, Mr. LYMAN of Massachusetts, Mr. WINANS of Michigan, Mr. STRAIT of Minnesota, Mr. VAN EATON of Mississippi, Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri, Mr. GREEN of North Carolina, Mr. LAIRD of Nebraska, Mr. CASSIDY of Nevada, Mr. RAY of New Hampshire, Mr. KEAN of New Jersey, Mr. ADAMS of New York, Mr. PAIGE of Ohio, Mr. GEORGE of Oregon, Mr. BINGHAM of Pennsylvania, Mr. CHACE of Rhode Island, Mr. HEMPHILL of South Carolina, Mr. CALDWELL of Tennessee, Mr. THROCKMORTON of Texas, Mr. POLAND of Vermont, Mr. O'FERRALL of Virginia, Mr. GIBSON of West Virginia, Mr. RANKIN of Wisconsin, Mr. OURY of Arizona, Mr. RAYMOND of Dakota, Mr. SINGISER of Idaho, Mr. MAGINNIS of Monana, Mr. MANZANARES of New Mexico, Mr. CAINE of Utah, Mr. BRENTS of Washington, Mr. POST of Wyoming.

REVENUE-MARINE SERVICE.

Mr. PETERS. I am authorized and directed by the Committee on Commerce to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 6120) to promote the efficiency of the revenue-marine service.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 2749 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to require the Secretary of the Treasury to place on waiting orders, with waiting-orders pay, all officers of the revenue marine who are or shall be totally disabled for regular duty, or who are or shall be 65 years of age, or who shall have served forty years; and vacancies created by placing such officers on waiting orders may be filled by promotions under the provisions of section 2752 of the Revised Statutes: Provided, That if the disability of any officer of the revenue marine be found to be not incident to his service, he may, in the discretion of the President, be placed on waiting orders, on one-half the pay of his grade, or may be dropped from the rolls, with not exceeding one year's full pay of his grade.

SEC. 2. That the President may, by and with the advice of the Senate, appoint from the list of captains in the revenue-marine service three post-captains, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $3,000 each per annum while on duty, and three-fourths of said sum while on leave of absence or waiting orders.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of sections 1262 and 1263 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same are hereby, extended so as to include commissioned officers of the revenue-marine service.

Mr. REAGAN. On the motion to suspend the rules I demand a second.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. REAGAN and others objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the question on seconding the motion to suspend the rules must be taken by tellers; and the Chair appoints as such the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. PETERS, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 93.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next committee entitled to submit a motion to suspend the rules is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; but before calling that committee the Chair will submit to the House some requests for leave of absence, some of which relate to the remainder of the present day.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STEELE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KING, for this week, on account of important business.

To Mr. VANCE, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. BAYNE, indefinitely.

To Mr. BEACH, for the remainder of the day, on account of sickness in his family.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next committee entitled to submit a motion to suspend the rules is the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. NICHOLLS, there were—ayes 103, noes 86.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for tellers.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I call for the yeas and nays. It is only half past 3 o'clock.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 61 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 85, nays 172, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—85.

Alexander,	Davis, L. H.	Lore,	Smith, A. H.
Ballentine,	Deuster,	McMillin,	Snyder,
Bennett,	Dowd,	Miller, J. F.	Spriggs,
Blackburn,	Eldredge,	Mills,	Stewart, Charles
Blount,	Elliott,	Mitchell,	Stockslager,
Brainerd,	Findlay,	Morrison,	Thomas,
Breitung,	Foran,	Mutchler,	Throckmorton,
Broadhead,	Goff,	Nicholls,	Tillman,
Buchanan,	Graves,	O'Ferrall,	Tully,
Buckner,	Green,	Potter,	Turner, H. G.
Carleton,	Hancock,	Pryor,	Turner, Oscar
Chace,	Hemphill,	Randall,	Van Alstyne,
Clardy,	Hepburn,	Rankin,	Van Eaton,
Cobb,	Hoblitzell,	Reagan,	Wadsworth,
Converse,	Holman,	Reese,	Wait,
Cosgrove,	Hurd,	Robinson, J. S.	Warner, A. J.
Covington,	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, W. F.	Wellborn,
Cox, W. R.	Jones, J. T.	Scales,	Wilkins,
Crisp,	Jordan,	Seymour,	Yaple.
Culberson, D. B.	Lamb,	Shively,
Culbertson, W. W.	Lanham,	Skinner, T. G.
Dargan,	Le Fevre,	Smalls,

NAYS—172.

Adams, G. E.	Evans,	Ketcham,	Robinson, W. E.
Aiken,	Everhart,	Laird,	Rockwell,
Anderson,	Ferrell,	Lawrence,	Rogers, J. H.
Atkinson,	Finerty,	Lewis,	Rosecrans,
Bagley,	Follett,	Long,	Rowell,
Barksdale,	Forney,	Lovering,	Ryan,
Bayne,	Funston,	Lowry,	Seney,
Bisbee,	Fyan,	Lyman,	Shelley,
Blanchard,	Geddes,	McCoid,	Singleton,
Boutelle,	George,	McComas,	Skinner, C. R.
Boyle,	Glascock,	McCormick,	Smith, H. Y.
Bratton,	Greenleaf,	Matson,	Springer,
Breckinridge,	Guenther,	Milliken,	Stephenson,
Brewer, F. B.	Halsell,	Morse,	Stevens,
Brewer, J. H.	Hammond,	Muldrow,	Stewart, J. W.
Browne, T. M.	Hanback,	Murphy,	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Hardeman,	Murray,	Talbott,
Budd,	Harmer,	Neece,	Taylor, J. D.
Burnes,	Hart,	Nelson,	Taylor, J. M.
Cabell,	Hatch, H. H.	Oates,	Thompson,
Caldwell,	Hatch, W. H.	O'Hara,	Tucker,
Campbell, J. E.	Haynes,	O'Neill, Charles	Vance,
Campbell, J. M.	Henderson, D. B.	O'Neill, J. J.	Wakefield,
Candler,	Henley,	Parker,	Wallace,
Cannon,	Herbert,	Patton,	Ward,
Cassidy,	Hewitt, A. S.	Payne,	Warner, Richard
Chalmers,	Hewitt, G. W.	Payson,	Washburn,
Clements,	Hill,	Peel,	Weaver,
Collins,	Hiscock,	Perkins,	White, J. D.
Cook,	Hitt,	Peters,	White, Milo
Cox, S. S.	Holmes,	Pettibone,	Whiting,
Cullen,	Hooper,	Pierce,	Williams,
Cutcheon,	Hopkins,	Poland,	Willis,
Davidson,	Horr,	Post,	Wilson, James
Davis, G. R.	Houseman,	Price,	Wilson, W. L.
Davis, R. T.	Howey,	Pusey,	Winans, E. B.
Dibble,	Hunt,	Ranney,	Winans, John
Dibrell,	James,	Ray, G. W.	Wise, G. D.
Dingley,	Jeffords,	Ray, Ossian	Wolford,
Dockery,	Johnson,	Reed,	Wood,
Dunham,	Jones, B. W.	Rice,	Woodward,
Dunn,	Kean,	Riggs,	Worthington,
Ermentrout,	Keifer,	Robertson,	York.

NOT VOTING—66.

Adams, J. J.	Eaton,	Lacey,	Slocum,
Arnot,	Ellis,	Libbey,	Spooner,
Barbour,	Ellwood,	McAdoo,	Steele,
Barr,	English,	Maybury,	Stone,
Beach,	Fiedler,	Millard,	Storm,
Belford,	Garrison,	Miller, S. H.	Struble,
Belmont,	Gibson,	Money,	Sumner, C. A.
Bingham,	Hardy,	Morgan,	Sumner, D. H.
Bland,	Henderson, T. J.	Morrill,	Taylor, E. B.
Bowen,	Holton,	Moulton,	Townshend,
Brumm,	Houk,	Muller,	Valentine,
Burleigh,	Hutchins,	Nutting,	Weller,
Campbell, Felix	Jones, J. K.	Ochiltree,	Wemple,
Clay,	Kelley,	Paige,	Wise, J. S.
Connolly,	Kellogg,	Phelps,	Young.
Curtin,	King,	Russell,
Dorsheimer,	Kleiner,	Shaw,

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. TOWNSHEND, on all political questions, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. CLAY with Mr. KELLOGG, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. KLEINER with Mr. MORRILL, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RUSSELL, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has nothing to present, the next committee is the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. AIKEN. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to move that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture, and that it be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be established in the city of Washington a department of agriculture.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a secretary of agriculture to preside over said department of agriculture, who shall equal in rank and pay the Secretaries now constituting the Executive Cabinet.

SEC. 3. That there shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an assistant secretary of agriculture, who shall receive a compensation of $4,000 per annum, to be paid in monthly installments, and whose official duties shall supersede those of the officer known as the Commissioner of Agriculture, which said office of Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby abolished.

SEC. 4. That the secretary of agriculture shall appoint a chief clerk of the department of agriculture, with a salary of $2,500 per annum, to be paid in monthly installments, whose duties shall supersede those of the chief clerk of the existing Bureau of Agriculture, which said office of chief clerk of the Bureau of Agriculture is hereby abolished.

SEC. 5. That the existing Bureau of Agriculture, with all its appurtenances, save its chief clerk and Commissioner, are hereby transferred to the department of agriculture, to be supervised by the chief clerk and assistant secretary of said department.

SEC. 6. That in addition to the divisions now existing in the Bureau of Agriculture there shall be organized, under the supervision of the secretary of agriculture, and in a manner similar to the organization of the existing divisions, a division of veterinary science, and a division of forestry.

SEC. 7. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. AIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. AIKEN. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. AIKEN. I hope the House will vote down the motion.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. NICHOLLS, there were—ayes 71, noes 99.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that the motion to suspend the rules be considered as seconded.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the question on seconding the motion to suspend the rules will be taken by tellers, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 71.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; a quorum has voted.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose that every member of this House has made up his mind in regard to this bill. It is no new thing in the Congress of the United States. A bill similar was presented in the Forty-fifth Congress. It reached the Calendar and there remained till the end of the term. In the Forty-sixth Congress another bill of like nature was introduced and reported favorably by the committee to which it was referred. It was put on its passage under a suspension of the rules and lost by one single vote, that negative vote being cast by the then chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. In the Forty-seventh Congress a similar bill was again submitted to the House under a suspension of the rules and received but 7 negative votes, there being 183 votes in favor of it. This is a repetition of the same bill; and I do not desire to detain the House at this late hour of the evening to discuss its merits. Unless there shall be some antagonism I am willing it shall be put on its passage at once without debate. I reserve the balance of my time to refute if possible any opposition that may be presented.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have, Mr. Speaker, I trust, as much regard for the interest of agriculture as the gentleman who is in charge of the present bill. I represent largely an agricultural constituency. I have endeavored to favor as far as I could a policy promotive of the interest of agriculture. But, sir, I do not consider that I shall accomplish anything in that way by simply multiplying offices and providing additional salaries in a bill with nothing else to recommend it. I listened as the Clerk read the bill, and I found nothing in it except in lieu of a Commissioner of Agriculture it creates a new office of secretary of the department of agriculture and an additional salary, and an additional office and salary for an assistant secretary. There are no provisions in the bill for additional duties to be assigned to these new officers. It simply provides for the creation of these new offices and the accompanying salaries. That is all there is in it. [Laughter.]

Heretofore there have been bills on the subject; but those bills added to the duties of the present Agriculture Bureau, but, as I have already said, in this case or in this bill we have nothing more than an increase of offices and an increase of salaries. It seems to me, therefore, that it is perfectly ridiculous. It is a cheat to talk about this bill being in the interest of agriculture. Not a single line is suggestive of any new field of operation. The old business of gathering seed and distributing it will make up the whole of this matter.

Now, I trust, Mr. Speaker, that we shall not undertake to pass any bill creating a new Cabinet officer unless we accompany it with provision giving him additional duties. As suggested by gentlemen on my left, if we propose to do nothing more than to create two or three new offices with additional salaries, it would be far better to take the money and with it buy seed in the old manner for general distribution. [Laughter.]

I reserve the balance of my time. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] I will yield five minutes of my time first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish the gentleman to yield to me for a while.

Mr. BLOUNT. What side are you on?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Why, I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would be glad to yield to you.

Mr. POTTER addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield now two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, why not organize a department of manufactures? That is an industry almost equal in importance to that of agriculture in this country. Our manufactured products reach annually an amount equal in value to $6,000,000,000. Why not organize a department of mines and mining? Why not, after this is done, establish a secretary for each of them, with the powers proposed to be given here to this department of agriculture, and for every one of the other great industries of the country? There is as much necessity, in my mind, for the establishment of these as there is for a department of agriculture.

But I oppose this measure now as I have done heretofore for the reason that everything that is of value or can be of value to the great farming interests of the country is being done and well done through the Bureau of Agriculture. It comes nearer to the agricultural people than a department could possibly come. It answers all their wants fully; and because I believe that no good could be accomplished for the farming people of this country, and because I know they do not demand it in the section which I represent, for it is almost purely an agricultural people, and because they do not want or need it, I oppose the proposition.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen misapprehend the objects and purposes of this bill. They have supposed that the farmers of this country are coming to Washington to be instructed in what they are going to do for their own interests by a secretary of agriculture. We have wider views. Five-sixths of all the exports of this nation go directly from the farm. These products do not stay in the State or the locality where they are raised; they go beyond the control of the State the moment they pass the State line. Consequently our exports become national and pass beyond State jurisdiction. Is it too much to ask Federal care of national commerce? Every nation on earth but ours watches jealously over the prosperity of the producer and gives national heed to its exports. What breadth of statesmanship to suppose the distribution of seeds the object of this bill!

Consider for a moment what keeps this country going financially; what brings the great annual balance of trade in our favor. Look at the great hog products of this country that go abroad defamed, lied about, discounted, depreciated, with no department of our Government that possesses facts to defend; and there is nobody in the great treaty-making powers of the United States to say a word for the interest of America in that respect. Everybody is the farmer's patron. An advocate is wanted, not a patron. The farmers of the country can take care of matters connected with the farm and at their homes. But there is nobody to watch their interests when farm products become national commerce. Farmers are not coming to Washington to learn of cattle or seeding or things of that kind. When they consider production, Congress would be sadly out of place taking a hand in the debates. A head is required for the national producers as a matter of protection when American products are hostilely dealt with by foreign powers—an intelligent head, that will have a tongue in the councils of the Cabinet.

Bob Ingersoll said in his remarks last night, I have been told, in speaking sneeringly of Christianity, that he heard our Chaplain pray that Congress might have wisdom, and seemed to regard it as an utter impossibility that such prayers could be answered. [Laughter.]

I believe in the efficacy of prayer, but I do not believe in the power of the people about Washington to teach the farmers anything about agriculture. Never do they ask for lessons. Perfect machinery through which our products that become national commerce may have due credit abroad, and let it take the place of the dozen expensive bureaus that now deal with what pertains to agriculture. No step should he taken in any foreign treaty until its effect on our producers be intelligently determined, and that can not be done to-day. Our farmers have interests that are competing with the world to-day. We want a Cabinet officer who comprehends the drift and growth of this competition. We are competing now with the people of India in reference to the shipments and sale of our grain. We are competing with Australia and South America in our wool products. Treaties are being made with reference to these very matters that the House has nothing to do with, treaties made by the President of the United States with the approval and consent of the Senate, and agriculture has no hearing there. We want a finger in the treaty-making. We want a representative head that will comprehend the whole field.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I am as anxious for a vote as the majority of the members of this House, who seem to be impatient, and I do not wish to delay action upon this measure; but I do desire to say a word in response to the remarks of gentlemen opposing this bill.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] seems to anticipate a great centralization of power at Washington because of the fact that we ask for a secretary of agriculture. Does that gentleman see to-day, because there have been created one or more Cabinet positions, any undue centralization of power here? Does he not know the fact that under our Constitution there is no such thing as a Cabinet position? Is he not aware that every officer of the Cabinet has been placed there by statutory legislation and not by constitutional privilege or power?

I say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], too, that I am surprised to find him so ignorant of the action of his own State. Within the past few years more than 10,000 petitions have passed through the petition-box from the farmers of the United States asking the elevation of this department, and I hazard nothing in saying more than five hundred of these petitions have come from the State of Indiana; and, sir, they were signed, each of them, by from ten to one hundred adult men and women. Only within the past two months an organization representing thirty-two States of this Union has sent to the Committee on Agriculture the signatures of several thousand petitioners asking the passage of this bill.

I say, sir, that the people demand this legislation, and they are going to have it. If they do not get it now it will come at no distant day.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] ridicules the bill forsooth because it does not go into details to show what are the duties of this officer. I will tell you what would be one of the duties of this officer, the attempted discharge of which has cost this Government more during the past six months than the secretary of agriculture will cost in a lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, a few months ago we became complicated with foreign nations upon the question of the importation of our meat products. We were charged with sending to European countries meats that were introducing fatal diseases among the people of those countries who consumed them. And what was our remedy? There was no one to investigate this matter. It belonged to the agricultural interests of this country, but they had not a friend anywhere to investigate the question so as to ascertain whether we were really liable to the charge brought against us.

The Secretary of the Treasury ordered an investigation to be made through the Marine-Hospital Service. I do not know what ever became of that order. It cost the Government several thousands of dollars. No report that I know of was ever made. But the question was considered of sufficient importance to induce the Secretary to issue another order, this time to Mr. Nimmo, of the Bureau of Statistics, to make investigation of the subject. That involved another expenditure of money, and I hold in my hand his report, comprising about fifty pages, almost the entire contents of which are extracted from the reports issued by the Department of Agriculture; the only original idea in the report being embraced in the statement on the first page, "that hogs are raised in every State of this Union." [Laughter.]

But, sir, this was not enough, for the President of the United States subsequently thought this international complication of sufficient importance to have the charges against us investigated through the State Department, which involved an additional expenditure, far greater than the salary asked for in this bill. As the result of this third inquiry a pamphlet, which I hold in my hand, was issued of one hundred and sixty-nine pages, and almost every word of it taken from the reports of the Agricultural Department; and the House has ordered the printing of 60,000 copies of this pamphlet as if it were something original and new. The prosecution of these investigations has cost the Government already more than would the expenses of the secretary of agriculture during a Presidential term.

Again, sir, during the last session we had a discussion in this House of a week's duration upon the constitutionality of the pleuro-pneumonia bill; and able lawyers on this floor split hairs so finely upon this subject that a microscope would scarcely develop what they were aiming at, contending for and against the constitutionality of the appropriation asked for. And what was the result? I believe we gave $150,000.

Sir, if we had a secretary of agriculture receiving the modest salary of $8,000, but invested with the power granted by this bill, there should never have been the necessity for this discussion or the introduction of a pleuro-pneumonia bill to this House. It would have been his duty, and would have been one of the details of his office, that there should have been no possibility of the introduction of pleuro-pneumonia into this country. But what is the fact now? We can not import a hide or a hoof, we can not export a head of cattle that the Treasury Department does not send on a lot of gentlemen to examine the importation, some of whom, I dare say, could scarcely tell the difference between a steer and a jackass. [Laughter.] Why, sir, the agricultural interests of this country, great as they are, have cost the Government but little.

We expend a vast deal of money here buying seed, and, as a practical farmer, a man who does not know much else than to farm, I say there is not a grander humbug in the American Union to-day than the expenditure of public money for that purpose. I might go, if I had the money, to Peter Henderson, or some other seedsman, and buy up all his stock of seed and scatter them by a gratuitous system more fairly than it is now done. But let there be a bill introduced to take from this House the scattering of those seeds, and my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], I have no doubt, would object to it. Has not that thing been fought here during the last eight years? Twice or thrice I have myself tried to take it out of the hands of members of Congress and to put it into the hands of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and on two or three occasions the majority of this House have voted me down. Every man on this floor, nearly, wants to be a seed distributer.

If there were a secretary of agriculture, the office would give character, importance, and extended jurisdiction to this department of agriculture, and it would be what it ought to be, a representative department of the producers of this country, which now the Agricultural Bureau is not.

But, Mr. Speaker, I need not go further with this subject than to say this: Except the English nation there is not a nation in the civilized world that does not have a department of agriculture presided over by a secretary of agriculture. Ours is a republican form of government and I do not like to instance what other nations are doing as examples for us to follow. But it is a practical question, and if this has been an advantage to them it would necessarily be so to us. This question has nothing to do with the centralization of power in the hands of the Federal Government. It is simply organizing here a department presided over by a man with a jurisdiction equal to that of any other member of the Cabinet of the President, so that he will look exactly after the wants—the Federal wants, if you please to call it so—of the farmers of this country, not their individual wants. There is nothing in this bill proposing to teach the farmer how to hold a plow or drive a thrashing-machine or anything of that sort. It is simply a bill to give jurisdiction to that great agricultural interest of the country, and have a man to supervise it as a Federal matter entirely.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. DAWES, Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin, Mr. CAMERON of Pennsylvania, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. MILLER of California, Mr. RIDDLEBERGER, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. BUTLER, Mr. VEST, Mr. JONAS, Mr. SLATER, and Mr. WALKER as the committee on the part of the Senate under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress to witness on behalf of the Congress of the United States the opening of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition at New Orleans by the President on Tuesday, December 16, 1884.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD].

Mr. BUDD. In one minute I can add nothing to the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN]. I can only do as did the Western man who got religion. When the cold weather came he tacked the Lord's Prayer to the wall, and at nights, speedily divesting himself of his clothes, he would jump into bed, draw the bedding around his chin, and, pointing to the prayer, say, "Oh, Lord, them's my sentiments. Amen." So I, pointing to the speech of Colonel AIKEN, say, "Those are my sentiments. Amen." Answering the gentlemen from Indiana and Georgia, I wish to state that all Cabinet offices have been created in the manner provided for in this bill and afterward the powers and details provided. It is so here. Create this office, then establish experimental stations or bureaus and such other machinery necessary to carry out its operations and better the condition of our farming classes.

The farming interest is the greatest in the United States and is entitled to this recognition, and its interests to the careful consideration of a separate department; and I therefore implore members to cast their vote for this measure in behalf of the farming interests.

Mr. AIKEN. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDEMAN].

Mr. HARDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is simply to dignify labor. Our purpose in supporting this measure is to make the labor of the country feel that, while the education of the country has ignored it, the Legislature of the country will come to its rescue. From the petitions which have been sent here by the laboring people of the country, I believe it is their wish that the General Government should so legislate as to dignify labor. By doing this you will make the agricultural regions of the country the home of an industrious population. Labor being thus encouraged, people will not be driven to the cities in search of employment, and for want of it increase the number of paupers or criminals.

In the short time allowed me I can only indorse every word that has been said by the gentleman from South Carolina. I know that many men in this House say to the country in their stump speeches that they are the friends of labor; but their votes as recorded here prove that "not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BLOUNT. In these few minutes I wish to reply briefly to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN]. In the beginning of his speech he rebuked the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] for not knowing that the people of Indiana want the Commissioner of Agriculture abolished and a "secretary of agriculture" appointed in his stead. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina proves his own ignorance by the reference he has made to the petitions on this subject coming here through our petition-box. As a matter of fact, it is well known that those petitions were printed in the city of Washington under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and sent through the mails all over the country, to be brought back here with signatures, for the purpose of influencing Congress.

Mr. AIKEN rose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not consent to interruption. I state a matter of fact.

Mr. AIKEN. You can not prove it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can prove it. I have been through my district for years and have never yet had any farmer ask me to support any measure of this sort. But from the time this proposition has been broached the Commissioner of Agriculture—the present Commissioner as well as other Commissioners—has been about this body and the Senate Chamber asking that this thing be done.

My friend from South Carolina grows eloquent on the subject of pleuro-pneumonia. We had at the last session a long discussion on that subject, and if we had had a "secretary of agriculture," receiving the salary of a Department officer without any duties additional to those now performed by the Commissioner (for this bill does not propose to impose on this officer any new duties), we would have had that debate going on still. So in reference to the hog cholera and other subjects of that kind which have been under investigation in the interest of agriculture. This bill, I repeat, does not confer on this proposed secretary of agriculture any greater power than has been exercised by the Commissioner; it does nothing but create this new officer with an enlarged salary as the representative of the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman will concede that this bill does two things—it changes the name of the Commissioner of Agriculture to that of "Secretary of Agriculture," and increases his salary.

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly it does. And when the rank and salary of this officer has been thus increased, we are to have no more pleuro-pneumonia and no more hog cholera! That is the whole argument presented here. The bill provides nothing in the way of a reorganization of the present bureau—nothing in the way of imposing additional duties. I trust we are not going to enact the farce of passing this bill.

If we are to have a department of agriculture, let the measure be carefully considered; let the duties of the head of the department be defined; and let the matter be submitted here in fair debate, so that we may know what we are undertaking to do.

I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has one minute and thirty seconds.

Mr. COX, of New York. I can not do justice to this thing in one minute and a half. [Laughter.] I suppose gentlemen on the other side of the House desire to make a new cabinet place in order that it may be filled by the incoming administration. It will give Governor Cleveland some trouble. Here is a department that has the regulation of cows and rams and so on. [Laughter and applause.] How can he fill it? Will he say he will give it to a New Englander because maple sugar is a larger thing than the cowslip industry in the Southwest? [Laughter.]

Now I am opposed to any such bill here unless it can show some warrant for it in the Constitution. There is no more warrant for this than for a department of science.

Mr. AIKEN. Let me ask you a question.

Mr. COX, of New York. How can I when I have only one minute and a half? [Laughter.]

Mr. AIKEN. What warrant in the Constitution was there for the establishment of any one of these cabinet positions?

Mr. COX, of New York. A good deal as to some of them. The Navy Department no doubt could take care of the ram business. [Laughter].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time is exhausted. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill, and pass it.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 166, nays 69, not voting 88; as follows:

YEAS—166.

Aiken,	Elliott,	Lamb,	Shively,
Alexander,	Evans,	Lanham,	Singleton,
Anderson,	Everhart,	Lawrence,	Skinner, C. R.
Atkinson,	Ferrell,	Le Fevre,	Smith, H. Y.
Ballentine,	Finerty,	Lewis,	Snyder,
Barbour,	Follett,	Lowry,	Springer,
Barksdale,	Forney,	McCoid,	Stephenson,
Barr,	Funston,	McComas,	Stevens,
Bayne,	Fyan,	McCormick,	Stewart, Charles
Bisbee,	Geddes,	McMillin,	Strait,
Blanchard,	Géorge,	Matson,	Struble,
Boutelle,	Glascock,	Milliken,	Talbott,
Breitung,	Goff,	Mills,	Taylor, J. D.
Brewer, F. B.	Green,	Money,	Taylor, J. M.
Brewer, J. H.	Greenleaf,	Muldrow,	Thompson,
Brown, W. W.	Guenther,	Murray,	Throckmorton,
Budd,	Halsell,	Neece,	Tillman,
Burleigh,	Hanback,	Nelson,	Tully,
Burnes,	Hardeman,	Nutting,	Van Eaton,
Cabell,	Harmer,	O'Ferrall,	Wakefield,
Caldwell,	Hart,	O'Neill, J. J.	Wallace,
Campbell, J. E.	Hatch, H. H.	Patton,	Ward,
Candler,	Hatch, W. H.	Payne,	Warner, Richard
Cannon,	Hemphill,	Payson,	Weaver,
Carleton,	Henderson, D. B.	Pierce,	Wellborn,
Cassidy,	Henley,	Peel,	Wemple,
Chace,	Hepburn,	Perkins,	White, J. D.
Chalmers,	Hewitt, G. W.	Peters,	White, Milo
Clements,	Hill,	Pettibone,	Whiting,
Converse,	Hitt,	Post,	Wilkins,
Cosgrove,	Holmes,	Price,	Williams,
Crisp,	Hooper,	Pusey,	Wilson, James
Culberson, D. B.	Horr,	Ray, G. W.	Wilson, W. L.
Cullen,	Houseman,	Ray, Ossian	Winans, E. B.
Cutcheon,	Howey,	Reese,	Winans, John
Davidson,	Jeffords,	Riggs,	Wood,
Davis, L. H.	Jones, B. W.	Robertson,	Woodward,
Dibrell,	Jones, J. H.	Rockwell,	Worthington,
Dingley,	Jones, J. T.	Rogers, W. F.	Yaple,
Dockery,	Jordan,	Rowell,	York.
Dowd,	Lacey,	Seney,
Dunn,	Laird,	Shelley,

NAYS—69.

Adams, G. E.	Davis, G. R.	Jones, J. K.	Reagan,
Bagley,	Davis, R. T.	Kean,	Rice,
Bennett,	Deuster,	Long,	Rogers, J. H.
Blount,	Dibble,	Lovering,	Scales,
Boyle,	Dunham,	Lyman,	Seymour,
Bratton,	Eldredge,	Millard,	Smalls,
Breckinridge,	Ermentrout,	Miller, J. F.	Stewart, J. W.
Browne, T. M.	Foran,	Morrison,	Thomas,
Buchanan,	Hammond,	Morse,	Turner, H. G.
Buckner,	Hancock,	Murphy,	Turner, Oscar
Cobb,	Herbert,	Mutchler,	Van Alstyne,
Collins,	Hewitt, A. S.	Nicholls,	Warner, A. J.
Cook,	Hiscock,	Oates,	Willis,
Cox, S. S.	Hoblitzell,	Potter,	Wise, G. D.
Cox, W. R.	Holman,	Pryor,	Wolford.
Culbertson, W. W.	Hunt,	Randall,
Curtin,	James,	Rankin,
Dargan,	Johnson,	Ranney,

NOT VOTING—88.

Adams, J. J.	English,	McAdoo,	Skinner, T. G.
Arnot,	Fiedler,	Maybury,	Slocum,
Beach,	Findlay,	Miller, S. H.	Smith, A. H.
Belford,	Garrison,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Belmont,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Spriggs,
Bingham,	Graves,	Morrill,	Steele,
Blackburn,	Hardy,	Moulton,	Stockslager,
Bland,	Haynes,	Muller,	Stone,
Bowen,	Henderson, T. J.	Ochiltree,	Storm,
Brainerd,	Holton,	O'Hara,	Sumner, C. A.
Broadhead,	Hopkins,	O'Neill, Charles	Sumner, D. H.
Brumm,	Houk,	Paige,	Taylor, E. B.
Campbell, Felix	Hurd,	Parker,	Townshend,
Campbell, J. M.	Hutchins,	Phelps,	Tucker,
Clardy,	Keifer,	Poland,	Valentine,
Clay,	Kelley,	Reed,	Vance,
Connolly,	Kellogg,	Robinson, J. S.	Wadsworth,
Covington,	Ketcham,	Robinson, W. E.	Wait,
Dorsheimer,	King,	Rosecrans,	Washburn,
Eaton,	Kleiner,	Russell,	Weller,
Ellis,	Libbey,	Ryan,	Wise, J. S.
Ellwood,	Lore,	Shaw,	Young.

So the bill was passed (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof).

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced at the Clerk's desk:

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WAIT, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, and Mr. OCHILTREE, on all political questions, for the balance of this day.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER and Mr. BRAINERD, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. KEIFER and Mr. REED, on this question.

Mr. RYAN and Mr. TUCKER, on this bill. Mr. RYAN would vote for the bill and Mr. TUCKER against it.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

CONTINGENT FUND POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a statement of expenditures of the contingent fund of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGES IN SHORE LINE AT CALUMET, ILL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of Maj. W. H. H. Benyaurd, Corps of Engineers, relative to change in shore line of Calumet, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

J. B. HALE.

On motion of Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of J. B. Hale.

A. L. ROGERS.

On motion of Mr. PETTIBONE, by unanimous consent, leave was also granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of A. L. Rogers.

FRANK G. STEVENS.

On motion of Mr. BREWER, of New York, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the bill for the relief of Frank G. Stevens; no adverse report having been made thereon.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 15, 1884.

Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER is hereby appointed Speaker pro tempore for to-morrow, Tuesday, December 16.

J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRISON (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALLENTINE: Papers relating to the claim of William Aymett; also papers relating to the claim of Elisha M. Shaddon—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BAYNE: Papers relative to the improvement of the Ohio River by means of locks and dams—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BLACKBURN: Memorial and papers of Lizzie D. Clark, praying for relief for loss of steamer Belle while in the service of the United States under contract—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of members of the bar of Shreveport and Monroe, La., for increase of pay of Federal judges—to the same committee.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of Clarence W. De Knight, praying for an appropriation for services rendered as page of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. CHALMERS: Papers relating to the claim of Calvin Cheairo—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COLLINS: Petition of the National Druggists' Association of the United States, for the removal of all taxes on alcohol to be used in the arts and in the preparation of medicines—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. S. S. COX: Petition of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution, that Congress make the necessary appropriation to complete the construction of the pedestal for the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. R. T. DAVIS: Petition of Post No. 141, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Texas, for publication in Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, memorial of the New Bedford Board of Trade, relative to the silver-coinage act of 1878—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Petition of Andrew Barton, praying for the removal of the charge of desertion standing against him on the records of the Navy Department—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DIBBLE: Papers relating to the claim of Sarah Watts—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. EVERHART: Petition of citizens of Delaware County, Pennsylvania, favoring the passage of the bankruptcy bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FOLLETT: Petition of Richard Nevins, John F. Treutlen, and others, employés of the House of Representatives, in reference to their compensation—to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. FORAN: Petition of leading merchants and manufacturers of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of a national bankrupt law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of 160 merchants and citizens of Cleveland, protesting against the ratification of the Spanish treaty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GLASCOCK: Petition on behalf of certain Indians belonging to Mission San José, county of Alameda, California—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GREEN: Petition of certain citizens of Brunswick County, North Carolina, for an appropriation for the improvement of Lockwood's Folly River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Petition and letters from citizens of Dubuque County, Iowa, asking that a pension be granted to Elizabeth Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Petition of 75 citizens of Massachusetts, mainly bank presidents and insurance companies; also of 200 citizens of the same State, requesting the passage of the resolution of Hon. JAMES H. HOPKINS relative to the transportation of cattle—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, petition relating to the claim of V. H. Reno, and to have same referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JEFFORDS: Petition of George Hay, of William L. Rogers, of William L. Carnell, of Thomas D. Harkins, of H. G. Richardson, of F. Hodges, to have their claims referred to the Court of Claims—severally to the same committee.

By Mr. KLEINER: Papers relating to the bill for the relief of John H. Derter—to the same committee.

By Mr. LAIRD: Papers relating to the bill for the relief of Captain Shaw—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of Henry Bryant Post, No. 98, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, for publication in Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations—to the same committee.

By Mr. LOVERING: Petition of John A. Andrew Post, No. 15, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, for publication in Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations—to the same committee.

By Mr. LYMAN: Petition of Moses Ellis Post, No. 117, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, for publication in Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations—to the same committee.

By Mr. McMILLIN: A bill to continue the improvement of the Caney Fork River, Tennessee—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of Matthew A. Cullnan, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MITCHELL: Petition for a breakwater at Duck Island—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MULDROW: Papers relating to the claim of H. M. Roberts—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MURPHY: Memorial of the hardware trade, in favor of the Hennepin Canal—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Papers relating to the claim of George W. Taylor—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Statement and letters upon bill to grant an honorable discharge from the Army to John Connell—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Petition of Ferdinand Hercher, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POST: Petition of Anson G. Carpenter, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of the Women's National Indian Association, to abolish the reservation system and grant lands to Indians in severalty—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ROSECRANS: Petition of Daniel W. Burke and other officers of the Army, in favor of a bill to facilitate promotions throughout the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of E. A. Koerper and others, assistant surgeons United States Army, relative to the construction placed by the War Department on a clause of the last Army appropriation bill—to the same committee.

Also, petition for the passage of a joint resolution for the relief of Lieut. George S. Grimes and other officers of the United States Signal Service—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STOCKSLAGER: Papers relating to the bill for the relief of Louisa Heth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Papers relating to the claim of Isaiah Sweat—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Papers relating to the bill for the relief of Hiram W. Hubbard—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, papers relating to bill for the relief of Marcus D. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Thomas Harrington, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE: Petition of Edward P. Quinn, for an increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: Petition of Sally C. Mulligan, for payment of pension-money due her—to the same committee.

By Mr. GEORGE D. WISE: Petition of Col. William H. Ward, for removal of political disabilities—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill, with Senate amendments, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. ANDERSON: Of citizens of Everest; of 63 citizens of Salem; and of 62 citizens of Abilene, Kans.

By Mr. F. B. BREWER: Of citizens of Cattaraugus and of Chautauqua, N. Y.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Of soldiers of Washington County, New York.

By Mr. CLARDY: Of John Rapp and 23 others, of Manchester, Mo.

By Mr. COBB: Of numerous soldiers of Indiana.

By Mr. CURTIN: Of citizens of Lewistown and of Paintersville, Pa.

By Mr. CULLEN: Of 24 citizens of Kendall County, Illinois.

By Mr. R. T. DAVIS: Of citizens of West Harwich and of South Chatham, Mass.

By Mr. DUNHAM: Of citizens of Barrington, Ill.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of T. Blakeslie and 242 others, of Neodesha; of Cicero Rhodes and 68 others; of Riley Livingston and 62 others; of T. L. Elliot and 126 others, of Colony; of A. M. Ledman and 63 others, of Elk City; of James M. Picket and 114 others, of Galena; and of John Huff and 68 others, of Crestline, Kans.

By Mr. LACEY: Of J. H. Hamlin and 99 others, citizens of Eaton Rapids, Mich.

By Mr. LOVERING: Of Frederick Kelliher and 107 ex-soldiers, of Chelsea, Mass.

By Mr. LOWRY: Of 51 citizens of Lagrange County; of 64 citizens of Whitly County; and of 37 citizens of Lagrange County, Indiana.

By Mr. MATSON: Of Jacob W. Phillips and 100 others, citizens of Putnam County; of John S. Walton and 100 others, of Coatesville, Ind.; and of R. B. Abels and 100 others, of Greencastle, Iowa.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Of Samuel Vose and others.

By Mr. MURPHY: Of 22 citizens of Low Moor, Iowa.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Of Mexican veterans living at Florisant, Mo.

By Mr. PATTON: Of citizens of Armstrong and of Clarion Counties, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. G. A. POST: Of 62 citizens of Canton; of 64 citizens of Thompson; of 63 citizens of Skinner's Eddy; of 61 citizens of Montrose; of 31 citizens of Scranton; of 113 citizens of Carney; and of 124 citizens of Canton, Pa

By Mr. SLOCUM: Of John Carty and others; of Edwin Kelley and others; and of B. A. Raymond and others.

By Mr. J. W. STEWART: Of citizens of Stamford, Brandon, and High Gate Falls, Vt.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Of F. P. Bryan and 306 citizens and ex-soldiers of Middleport; of Rufus C. Menzie and 62 citizens and ex-soldiers of Little Hocking and Centre Belpre; and of Fred. Grim and 43 others, of Clarington, Ohio.

By Mr. WEMPLE: Of 60 citizens and ex-soldiers of Saratoga County, New York.

By Mr. E. B. WINANS: Of W. L. Robson and 60 others, of Williamston Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Ingham County, Michigan.

By Mr. JOHN WINANS: Of Dr. J. B. Whiting and others, of Janesville, Wis.

By Mr. WOODWARD: Of E. C. Brainard and 36 others, citizens of Sauk County, Wisconsin.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 16, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. W. H. H. ADAMS, D. D., of Illinois.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

Mr. INGALLS called the Senate to order, and the Secretary read the following letter:

To the Senate:

Pursuant to the rules, I hereby name and designate Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, to perform the duties of the Chair in my absence this day.

GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
President pro tempore.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 16 December, 1884.

Thereupon Mr. INGALLS took the chair as presiding officer for to-day.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the petition of George W. Bush & Sons and several hundred other citizens of Wilmington, Del., praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar at the par value of 100 cents. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a memorial of the Cigar-Makers' Union, No. 94, of Pawtucket, R. I., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHEFFIELD. I present the petition of Capt. William P. Martin, military storekeeper, United States Army. The petition represents that the petitioner has been in the military service of the country for over forty-five years; that he lost a leg at the battle of Churubusco; and that he has not been absent from duty six months during the period of his entire service in the Army. He is now 63 years and 10 months old, and prays that he may be placed on the retired list with the full pay and allowances of his present rank, or with the retired pay of major. The prayer of the petition is united in by Brigadier-General Terry, Major-General Schofield, and by Major-General Hancock, Lieutenant-General Sheridan, and General Sherman, late General of the Army. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHEFFIELD presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Pawtucket, R. I., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Elyria, Ohio, remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of a large number of ex-soldiers of the late Union Army, residents of Washington city, praying Congress to purchase Miss C. L. Ransom's full-length life-size portrait of the late Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. WILSON presented the petition of A. J. Purviance, of Keokuk, Iowa, praying that relief be granted him by an allowance of money in compensation for extra services rendered by him as postmaster at Mount Zion, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Cigar-Makers' Union of Des Moines, Iowa, and a memorial of the Cigar-Makers' Union of Muscatine, Iowa, remonstrating against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Spain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SEWELL presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Bridgeton, N. J., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LAPHAM. I present a memorial of the American Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Canal Company, protesting against the ratification of the proposed treaty between the Republic of Nicaragua and the United States. I ask that its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. That treaty has not been made public, and if we are to observe the rules it is proper that such papers should be presented in executive session. Indeed, I think the decision yesterday of the President pro tempore was wrong, although I did not take an appeal from it, in respect to the Spanish treaty. The Nicaragua treaty is not a public document.

Mr. LAPHAM. I withdraw the memorial, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS). The Chair understands the memorial to be withdrawn.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Dunkirk, N. Y., and a memorial of cigar-makers of Oneida, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty between Spain and the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Henry Franke, on behalf of the Pioneer Iron Works, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the ratification of the proposed commercial treaty between Spain and the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR presented a memorial of Colonel and Brevet Major-General O. B. Willcox, and other statements favoring the passage of a bill for the relief of Charles Morris Blake, post chaplain, United States Army, retired; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONGER presented the memorial of J. A. Donaldson, of Michigan, favoring certain changes in the pre-emption and timber-culture laws; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition which is stated to be signed by 500 citizens of Hernando County, Florida. The petition is addressed to the Senate and House of Representatives, and is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that by act of Congress, approved 17th May, 1856, a grant of land was made to aid in building a railroad from Amelia

Island to the waters of Tampa Bay, on the Gulf of Mexico, with the provision that if the road is not completed in ten years the land shall revert to the United States. Near thirty years have elapsed since said grant was made, and the road is not completed.

Under this act a vast quantity of valuable land has been withheld from market, a very great hinderance to the settlement and prosperity of the country.

Your petitioners therefore pray your honorable body that an act be passed, taking effect from and after the 17th May, 1866, declaring said grant forfeited, and the land open to sale and settlement, as other public lands of the United States.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

The petition is signed with the names of Thomas Barnes, J. B. Earnest, John J. Rogers, and purports to be signed by 500 other citizens of Hernando County, Florida, and I move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I also present a petition of citizens of Hernando County, Florida, on the same subject, and to the same purport, signed by J. G. Wallace, Horace Anderson, and a large number of prominent citizens of that county. The petition is also accompanied by the resolutions of a public meeting of citizens of the same county to the same effect. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands. The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I report back by direction of the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service with sundry amendments. I ask that the bill and the amendments be printed, and I give notice that I shall endeavor to call it up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order to print will be made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3210) for the relief of Jacob Hoerth, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3382) granting a pension to Albert Brant, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Catharine Page, praying for a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Elvira A. Maxey, praying for the enactment of a special law giving her arrears of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2312) granting condemned cannon to McPherson Post, No. 16, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ohio, to report the same back to the Senate adversely, with a recommendation that the bill be indefinitely postponed. There are no condemned cannon on hand, and none, therefore, can be donated, as shown by sundry reports made at the last session of Congress.

The report was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2313) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of George W. Rager, introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], have instructed me to report it adversely and to recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed for the reason that on the 5th of July, 1884, we enacted a general law authorizing the removal of the charges of desertion in all proper and meritorious cases. The committee therefore decline to consider individual cases. The War Department has ample authority now to consider and adjust all meritorious cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be postponed indefinitely if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I ask whether the facts in this case come within the provisions of the law, and if not, why does it not need special action?

Mr. COCKRELL. We did not examine the case because the War Department has not examined it. We passed the law to which I have referred on the 5th of last July. This bill was introduced by the Senator from Ohio in June, prior to the passage of that act, and the House and the Senate have refused to consider any of the cases which had been introduced up to that time. This case has not been considered by the War Department; it has not been acted upon there; and we do not know whether the case comes within the provisions of the law or not, nor have we time, if we were to devote ourselves exclusively to it, to consider and pass upon the two hundred and odd thousand cases which would be flooded upon us here if we received and considered them. We must leave the Secretary of War to determine the various cases.

Mr. CONGER. In continuation of what I said, it seems to me that if there are meritorious cases where the charge of desertion lies against a citizen of the United States, and those cases are not provided for in the general law, the committee should take them into account, and either report a special bill, or propose to amend the law.

I do not like to see the petitions of men who are charged with desertion indefinitely postponed, because it is uncertain whether their cases come under the provisions of the general law or not. The very reason why they come to Congress for the removal of the charge in most cases is that their case is peculiar, and does not come under the general provisions of the law. There are many such cases undoubtedly, and it is very possible that the examination of just such a case would lead the committee to recommend an amendment of the law embracing this class. It may be that this case, as is suggested, having been presented before the general law was passed, would come under it; but I think the committee should find out which it is, and by referring this to the Secretary of War the officers in his Department will save the committee this excessive labor and trouble and will report whether it does come under the provisions of the law or not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire simply to say that it would be a useless labor for the committee to undertake now to consider every case which might be referred to it without first having had the War Department pass upon it under the law. We passed one general law. Then there were sundry cases that came to us in which relief could not be granted under the law we passed in 1882. We thereupon passed another general law on the 5th of July, 1884. The Senate and House refused to consider any of the special cases then pending, and, as a matter of course, expected them to make their applications to the War Department under the act of July 5, 1884. When they have made their applications and they have been considered, if there be another meritorious class not embraced within the provisions of that law, the committee will, as a matter of course, be perfectly willing to report a general bill covering such cases; but it would be impossible for us to take up and consider these cases in advance of any action by the War Department and determine whether or not they come within the provisions of that law. We should save no labor at all; we should still be entertaining all the cases just the same as if we had not passed the law.

We passed the law leaving the cases to go to the War Department first, and then, after there has been reasonable time for the action of the War Department, if there is any other just and meritorious class of cases not embraced within the provisions of that law, they will then be subject to full consideration by the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. The persons who apply for relief to Congress directly in such cases as these are not generally men who have either the ability or means to follow up cases with attorneys before any Department. Now, if this comes within the provisions of the law already passed, and if this man—I do not know who he is, I only speak in reference to that class of cases, in some of which I am interested myself—if this man can avail himself by applying to the War Department of the provisions of that law that is all that is required. What I want to know is whether there is a class of cases, bills pending here, as there frequently might be, not embraced in the general law?

I ask simply that the bill may remain on the docket until we or somebody who is interested in it can ascertain whether it does come within the provisions of the general law.

Mr. SEWELL. The general law passed last year was so liberal in its character that it will apply to this and every other honest case that can arise in this country to-day. In fact it will apply to everything except the case of a real deserter, a man who intended to desert.

Mr. CONGER. I supposed the law was pretty liberal. With the understanding that this case, with the usual consent, may be placed upon the docket and called up again, I desire to let it pass as the order is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan asks that the bill may be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, let it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the rule which has prevailed with the Committee on Pensions ever since I have been in Congress, which is that they will not consider a claim for a pension which has not been before the Commissioner of Pensions and been rejected by him.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to say on that point, in allusion to the practice of the Committee on Pensions, that where a case seems to come under the provisions of the general law, and therefore to be within the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Pensions, that is the rule; but there is a large list of cases which seem to be meritorious not embraced under any general law, and those come of course immediately to Congress for action in the first instance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes to the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel J. Kinna, of Frederick County, Maryland, praying for a modification of the law in regard to granting honorable discharges to soldiers charged with desertion, have duly considered the same, and report it back, recommending that the prayer of the petition be not granted, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of it. This petition was presented on the 4th of February, 1884, prior to the passage of the act to which reference has been made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the committee will be discharged and the petition will lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution of the George Strong Post, No. 19, Grand Army of the Republic, of Fairfield, Iowa, under date of December 17, 1883, in which they set forth that—

Whereas the soldiers and sailors of the late civil war were paid for their services in a currency which was depreciated to the extent that they but realized less than two-thirds of the amount agreed upon, namely, $13 per month; and

Whereas the depreciation of the currency occasioned a loss to the soldiers and sailors of nearly one-half of their monthly pay by the gold standard of the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865: Therefore,

Resolved by the comrades of George Strong Post, No. 19, Grand Army of the Republic, of Fairfield, Iowa, That the United States Government is in equity and honor bound to make good by the gold standard the loss sustained by the soldiers and their families upon every dollar paid them in such depreciated currency, and that the redundant revenue in the Treasury should be used for this purpose—have instructed me to report the same back adversely, and with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the committee will be discharged and the memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the petition of Zenas C. Robbins for reimbursement for expenses incurred for the public as register of wills for the District of Columbia, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

PRINTING OF TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back the motion to print the letter of the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fair and accurate copies of the accounts rendered to and settled by the First Comptroller for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884, and to ask to be discharged from its further consideration.

These reports which we are asked to print are very voluminous. They are so extremely voluminous that instead of sending to Congress copies of the books the originals are sent to Congress, under the requirements of section 311 of the Statutes. It has not been the custom of the Senate for a number of years to print the reports, and it seems entirely unnecessary that they should be sent here.

I notice that in 1882 the Committee on Printing recommended the repeal of section 311 of the Revised Statutes which requires that these documents shall be sent here, and the Committee on Printing again desire to report a bill for the purpose of repealing that section. The Secretary of the Treasury has stated that all the information contained in these cumbrous volumes is accessible much more readily by reference to the printed reports of the Treasury Department. It seems to me entirely unnecessary that these reports should come here for the purpose named.

I ask at this time to report from the Committee on Printing a bill to repeal section 311 of the Revised Statutes, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill (S. 2455) to repeal section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read the first time by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the bill will be read the second time in full.

The bill was read the second time at length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the chairman of the Committee on Printing to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the section of the statutes be read before the bill is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the section of the statutes which the bill proposes to repeal.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 311. The Treasurer shall, on the third day of every session of Congress, lay before the Senate and House of Representatives fair and accurate copies of accounts by him from time to time rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller, as also a true and perfect account of the state of the Treasury.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF NAVAL AND MILITARY REPORTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back with amendments the joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the printing of certain naval and military reports; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, in line 3, after the word "office," to strike out "for the use of the Navy Department;" so as to read:

That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 1,500 copies of each of the following reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 4, to strike out "one" before "thousand" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Four thousand five hundred copies of each of the following reports.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the reports described in the foregoing section be delivered to and distributed by the Secretary of the Navy.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

One thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the joint resolution as amended be read in full.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 4,500 copies of each of the following reports: The report of Lieut. Commander C. F. Goodrich, United States Navy, on the "British naval and military operations in Egypt;" the report of Lieut. Fisher M. Wright, United States Navy, on the "Operations of the French navy during the recent war with Tunis;" the report of Lieut. Theodorus B. M. Mason, United States Navy, on the "War on the Pacific coast of South America between Chili and the allied republics of Peru and Bolivia;" 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the Navy Department.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAY OF CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. ALLISON. From the Committee on Appropriations I report favorably and without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 2456) for the relief of Mary F. Potts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2457) to change the name of the National Bank of Winona; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2458) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others, non-commissioned officers and privates of the Greely expedition; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the bill relates to persons in the employ of both the Army and Navy, non-commissioned officers and privates, I do not know which committee would be the most proper to consider it, but I suppose the Naval Committee would naturally take consideration of it.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2459) granting a pension to George W. De Motte; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2460) granting a pension to George W. Schell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILLIAMS introduced a bill (S. 2461) granting a pension to Nancy A. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2462) giving a military record to James King; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 102) to remove the disabilities of H. Myers, a citizen of the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 103) making an appropriation for the improvement of Tampa Bay; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CALL. Before moving the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Commerce I desire to say that it is a work of very great and pressing importance. Tampa Bay is one of the far southern ports of the peninsula of Florida from which commerce is had to the West India islands. It is now the terminal point on the Gulf of Mexico of the railroad system of Florida which connects with all the Northern cities and States. It is beginning to be the place of entrance for passenger vessels from Cuba and for the intercourse between the citizens of the United States and the people of Cuba. The work in the bay has been suspended and the appropriation of the last session was entirely inadequate for the work. It is of the first importance to the commerce of this country and to its intercourse with the island of Cuba that this work should be prosecuted without delay in order that steamers of a proper size may enter that port. It is easy of accomplishment, and it is within twenty-four hours of the island of Cuba and the port of Havana. A large and increasing commerce in cattle exported from Florida is growing up with Cuba, and the improvement of the Gulf ports of Florida is an object of national importance. There is no reasonable ground on which Congress can refuse this appropriation for the port of Tampa.

As the most southern terminus of the railroads on the Gulf of Mexico, I insist it is the duty of Congress to make such an appropriation as will be adequate to accomplish some useful result and enable passenger and other steamers to enter the bay and safely and easily go to the town of Tampa. I move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 104) providing for the printing and distribution of the Descriptive Catalogue of Government Publications; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate whether, in the construction of the new reservoir in the District of Columbia under the act approved July 15, 1882, any serious natural difficulties have been encountered not contemplated or adequately provided for in the plans for said work as approved; also whether any changes or modifications in or of the said plans have been made at any time during the progress of said construction; and, if so, on whose recommendation, and for what causes were such changes or modifications made.

2. That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish, at the earliest practicable date, for the use and information of the Senate, a topographical map of said reservoir, embracing as much of the contiguous terrain as may be rendered liable to the process of filtration through permeable strata by the establishment of a water-head such as is contemplated by the existing plans; the map to embody shadings and indices showing the location, area, and soundings of the several deposits of decayed vegetable matter, ooze, or quicksand known to exist within the flow limits of the reservoir; and also a report of chemical analyses of specimens of soil taken from each of said deposits; and also a report from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, stating whether the existing plans for constructing the reservoir afford adequate expedients to deal with the said natural difficulties, and, if not, what modifications of the said plans are required to guarantee purity in the water to be supplied from the reservoir when completed, and security from leakage by filtration through permeable strata in the contiguous earth.

3. That the Secretary of War also send to the Senate an estimate of the cost of making any changes in the plan of constructing the reservoir that may be needed to make it more secure, and to give greater purity to the water supply.

Mr. MORGAN. Before the resolution is referred I wish to say that some of the citizens of this city have had conferences with me about the water supply from the new reservoir that we are now constructing. I believe that the act of July 15, 1882, contains an appropriation of $120,000 for the purpose of digging out a reservoir just north of the city at a point where two or three streams meet and form the Tiber Creek, which runs in an aqueduct just in the rear of the Capitol. Of that $120,000 about $80,000, I am informed, has been expended, and they have dug down until they have reached certain quicksands and certain deposits of muck, a formation of alluvial soil very moist from the decay of vegetation, &c. It is believed by some engineers with whom I have also conferred that the present plan will be insufficient for the purpose of containing within the twenty-five-acre area the water which will be brought into it through the aqueduct from the Potomac River, and that some modification of the plan will be necessary and some additional expenditure. Before that is done, I desire that the Committee on the District of Columbia shall consider the question as to the necessity for such additional appropriations and the manner of their expenditure.

The tunnel leading into this reservoir was estimated, I think, to cost $800,000. It is sunk down into the solid stone, being bored by blasting through the strata, and I think about $250,000 have been expended on it. It is perhaps now about one-fourth finished.

I would suggest also, merely for the purpose of calling attention to the subject, that it appears to me, and the opinion is supported by engineers, that the point of admission of the water into this twenty-five-acre reservoir and the point of its exit are so close together as to practically constitute no current. There is perhaps not more than 50 feet difference between the point of entrance and the point of exit for the water. That we know would leave, on an area of twenty-five acres, perhaps an average of ten or twelve feet deep, if not deeper, a great body of stagnant water which would have no circulation, no disturbance, no agitation except by the winds. It seems to me that it is well enough to call attention to the physical difficulties of getting the water into a condition where it will be self-purified by its flow and its agitation.

I simply desired to draw the attention of the committee and of the Senate to this subject before it went to the committee, and to say that I shall be prepared to submit to the committee certain data obtained from engineers which I think will be influential in their consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator desire to have made of the resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

CALENDAR OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions is next taken up for consideration under Rule VIII, measures from the House of Representatives shall first be considered in their order, subject to said rule.

I should like to make a remark about the resolution now, and then it may either go over or be considered to-day; I have no choice.

An examination of our Calendar exhibits a very remarkable condition of things. It contains three hundred and six subjects for consideration in addition to those that have been reported this morning, which will probably bring the number up by six or eight or ten more. Of those, only twenty-two are measures that have come from the House of Representatives, and on examining those, with the exception of one or two land-grant forfeiture bills and bills relating to railroads, which would require some serious consideration by the Senate, I think substantially every one of them would be disposed of by the Senate without much discussion, without opposition or objection; so that everything in the way of legislation so far during this Congress that has been sent to us from the House of Representatives, except the appropriation bills which have come in, has been or can be in an hour or two by the Senate substantially disposed of and become a law or be rejected, as the Senate shall think fit.

It seems to me that it is absolutely hopeless for us to be busying ourselves about new legislation now to be introduced, or even about matters on our Calendar which are to be sent down to the House for consideration, because they all have to be gone over again in another Congress if they are to be brought up; they can not become laws in all probability this year.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator if he has counted the number of House bills that are now reported and upon our Calendar?

Mr. HOAR. There are but twenty-two all told, House bills and resolutions, out of three hundred and six.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts to ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. GARLAND. Let it go over.

Mr. HOAR. I desired to call attention to this matter. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. HOAR. I shall call it up again to-morrow.

TRADE WITH FOREIGN AMERICAN STATES.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to communicate to the Senate any information which he has or which may be accessible to him in regard to the extent and character of the foreign trade of Mexico, the Central and South American states, and the islands of Cuba, Porto Rico, and San Domingo; such information to include, if possible, a detailed statement of the value and character of the manufactured and other articles comprising the imports and exports of such states and islands, and also the share of the United States in the trade of each, and the portion of such imports and exports transported in vessels belonging to citizens of the United States.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. PLUMB. On the first day of the present session the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] introduced a bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson. It is an exact copy of a bill which passed both Houses of Congress at the last session, and was presented to the President for his signature, perhaps on the last day of the session, but by some misadventure did not reach his attention, and so was not signed. It is a bill which, I think, has passed both Houses of Congress heretofore on separate occasions. The Senator from Illinois has requested me to bring it to the attention of the Senate, stating the facts, and to ask that it be passed now without reference to the appropriate committee, in view of the fact that it has already received the favorable consideration of both Houses of Congress.

The bill is simply to give to a party, who acquired by deed a piece of land in Indiana to the amount of eighty acres about the year 1875, on the faith of a patent from the Government to that amount, but which title was afterward set aside by a decree of a court in that State, the privilege of locating an equivalent amount of land upon the public lands of the United States, to-wit, eighty acres. I have in my hand the bill, and also the report of the House Committee on Private Land Claims, which was adopted by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate on the same case. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill. If any one has any curiosity about the matter I shall ask that the bill and report be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill and report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the parliamentary stage of the bill to which the Senator from Kansas refers?

Mr. PLUMB. It was introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] on the first day of the present session, and laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was it read twice?

Mr. PLUMB. It was read twice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the bill at length for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to issue to Joseph F. Wilson, of Peoria, Ill., or his legal representatives or assigns, a number of warrants equal to eighty acres, in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land laws, to be located by the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, on any of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States subject to pre-emption or homestead settlement, in lieu of the west half of the northeast quarter of section 19, in township 35 north, of range 5 west, situate in Porter County, Indiana, which said tract of land was entered by and patented to Josiah Smith, of Macon County, Missouri, under and by virtue of the provisions of the acts of Congress approved June 8, 1872, and March 3, 1873, relating to additional homesteads, and by the said Josiah Smith, after his said entry, sold and conveyed to the said Wilson, and of the title to and possession of which the said Wilson was divested and dispossessed by the judgment and decree of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, at the November term, A. D. 1880, thereof, by reason of a prior disposal of or a prior equitable title in and to said tract of land, as the said court held and decided, to or in persons other than the said Josiah Smith; and the said Wilson, or his legal representatives or assigns, after the location of the said warrants on such lands as he or they may select, shall be allowed patents for the lands so located; and the lands taken, selected, and located as authorized and provided for by this act shall be in full satisfaction of any claim, right, or benefit which the said Josiah Smith, or any one claiming under him, may have, or may have had, under and by virtue of the provisions of the said acts of Congress, as well as in full satisfaction of any claim which the said Wilson, as assignee or grantee of the said Josiah Smith, may have, or may have had, against the United States touching said described tract of land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. HALSELL in the House of Representatives January 30, 1884:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 275) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson, have considered the same, and report it back with an amendment.

The committee, upon investigation, ascertained that, pursuant to the homestead laws, Josiah Smith, on March 22, 1875, entered the west half of the northeast quarter of section 19, in township 35 north, of range 5 west, situate in Porter County, Indiana, and that a patent was issued to him for the same May 15, 1875, and was duly recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of said Porter County, Indiana. This tract of land was subsequently sold and conveyed by said patentee to said Wilson, and the deed of conveyance therefor recorded in the recorder's office of said Porter County, Indiana. Soon after said patent and deed were so recorded, the heirs of one Ruel Starr commenced suit against said Wilson, claiming to be the owners of said land, and alleging that said Starr had acquired title thereto by purchase from one Peter Wimmer. The bill, petition, and other papers in this case were referred by the Committee on Private Land Claims of the Forty-seventh Congress to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who, in his letter of February 24, 1882, to the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing said papers, says:

"The records of this office show that Peter Wimmer made cash entry 1829 of the land in question at the La Porte land office, Indiana, June 5, 1835, which entry was canceled by this office October 17, 1836. It does not appear that the purchase-money was ever refunded, and the tract remained vacant until March 22, 1875, when Josiah Smith entered the same under section 2036 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as an additional homestead, and said entry was patented May 15, 1875.

"It seems from the papers submitted to Congress by Mr. Wilson in his petition for relief, and which were filed in this office January 27, 1882, by Hon. Nicholas Ford, chairman of subcommittee Private Land Claims, House of Representatives, that the title to the land in question has been judicially determined in the litigation between Joseph F. Wilson, claiming by deed from the patentee, Josiah Smith, and the equitable owners, claiming, by descent, under Ruel Starr, who claimed, as assignee of the duplicate certificate of entry 1829, from Peter Wimmer. From the certified record of the case, herewith, it appears that the court on the 23d December, 1880, adjudged that the equitable title to said land was for many years in Ruel Starr, who at the time of his death was entitled to have the legal title conveyed to him by patent from the United States, and that at the death of Starr, intestate, in April, 1875, all of his right, title, and interest in the land vested in the equitable claimants under him, and the patent issued to Smith, from whom Wilson claims by deed, conveyed only the naked legal title, and Smith and those claiming under him were chargeable with the superior equitable title of Starr and those claiming under him, and Mr. Wilson was held to be a trustee for claimants under Starr, and it was decreed that the claimants under Starr were entitled to have the legal title conveyed to them by Mr. Wilson within thirty days, and in case of default a special commissioner, Willard C. Nichols, was appointed to make the necessary deed of conveyance; and it was further ordered and decreed that Wilson and all persons claiming under him were forever enjoined from setting up any claim to the land in question. As Mr. Wilson has been judicially deprived of the title to the land derived by him under Smith's entry, and as the favorable action of Congress in the case has heretofore been recommended by my predecessor, I deem it proper to concur in that recommendation."

The Secretary of the Interior, in his letter to the committee of February 28, 1882, transmitting a copy of the foregoing letter, says that he concurs in the views of the Commissioner. In view of the foregoing facts, and of the further fact that said Wilson having in good faith, for a valuable consideration, purchased said land from said patentee, relying upon the title so granted by the Government, and he being without notice of equitable title existing in others, the committee are of opinion that it is proper and just that he should receive other land belonging to the Government in lieu of that to which his title has failed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves the consideration of the bill at this time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARLAND. The bill, so far as I have had time to examine it, I think is a very good one and very correct; but I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that possibly to meet some little restrictions which have been omitted, there should be, in the first place, provision in the bill that a copy of the decree by which Wilson was dispossessed of the land should be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office when application for new warrants is made, and also that the patent or patents to be issued upon these new warrants should contain the recital that they are in satisfaction of what is stated at the bottom of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. There can be no objection to that, because I think that would ensue in pursuance of the practice of the Land Office itself. The office would require all that as a prerequisite to its own action, but still there will be no objection to its being incorporated in the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I have drawn up roughly a proviso to come in at the end of the bill to this effect:

Provided, That a certified copy of the decree of the court dispossessing Joseph F. Wilson as aforesaid be deposited with the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the application for new warrants, and also the patent or patents issued under such new warrants shall recite what they are in satisfaction for.

It can be put in more definite shape.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Arkansas preparing his amendment?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYARD. While the Senator from Arkansas is preparing his amendment, I would suggest to the Senator from Kansas that it would be well to limit the location of this patent to some State or Territory, or if there be unoccupied land open to such pre-emption or homestead settlement in the same district where the land was of which the party was dispossessed it should be confined to that.

My reason for saying that is because no cases have created more injustice and given rise to more just dissatisfaction than those in which "floats," as they are termed, have been located, by which a man owning an open patent could locate it upon lands alleged to be public lands, there being no restriction as to the location, and in that way transfer claims, the subject of litigation, creating litigation and dispute, and sometimes seeking to absorb exceedingly valuable property.

Such cases have passed through the Senate inadvertently, and great wrong has been done, and I have understood that such claims have been sold for enormous prices, because they enabled the holder to invade private rights, and if not to recover land in possession, at least to throw a cloud upon the title and produce great losses to the holder. Therefore I suggest that there should be not only the limitation here stated that this warrant or warrants to the amount of eighty acres be limited to unoccupied and unappropriated public land of the United States subject to pre-emption or homestead settlement, but that the location of that land should be limited to a particular district, so that the unlimited choice of the whole territory of the United States should not be open to entry and settlement under this bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I agree entirely with all that the Senator from Delaware has said upon the general subject. I tried to enforce that on a bill which the Senator himself reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims in which I think the principle that he now objects to was more viciously asserted than ever before in any bill that ever passed this body. I only speak now to say that I concur with his present position, and regret that that was not his position three or four months ago.

This is to provide compensation practically for a man who entered eighty acres of land in Indiana. There are no public lands now in that State, and consequently he can not be limited to an entry to be made in that State if he is to have anything at all. In the next place, the land of which he was deprived by reason of the judgment of a court was of greater value probably than the average value at all events, and probably than the value of any single acre of the public lands of the United States open to pre-emption or homestead entry. Therefore we shall not allow, in giving to this person the privilege of entering eighty acres of land anywhere on the public domain, more than equal and exact justice requires. I do not think we shall by the passage of this bill give him more than he would be equitably and fairly entitled to; but still I have no objection myself to any limitation. If the Senator thinks that the eighty acres of land this party is to be entitled to under this bill are of too great value, and if, having passed a bill which authorizes the courts of New Mexico to certify scrip to the amount of millions of acres which shall be locatable on the public lands of the United States without any supervision by Congress or the Land Office, the Senate sees fit to strain at the gnat of this eighty acres, of course I have no objection to making the party locate it on the top of Mount Hood or elsewhere.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Kansas should be in any degree disturbed by my suggestions to him. They were made entirely in the line of safety to the people of the United States, and not in the slightest degree with an intention on my part of invading measures which were under his charge.

But the Senator is mistaken in his facts in regard to my having voted for or favored the passage of a bill here at the last session freed from the checks which I now propose to put upon his bill. I am not an expert in the public land laws of the United States; but I do understand the abuses that have been perpetrated upon private holdings by acts of Congress making land claims valid; and therefore when as chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims the question was before me as to what should be done with parties who held land grants from the United States and had been dispossessed in whole or in part of the land so granted to them by the public, the point was submitted to the law officers of the Government and to the Commissioner of the Land Office, and subject to his criticism the act which the Senator complains of was framed and introduced here and passed.

Now, as I remember the language of that act, not having the paper before me, for it is not yet a law, but is pending in the other branch of Congress, the grant of certificates where the party was entitled to some public land in lieu of that which was subsequently taken from him by the action of the Government, or the title to which was changed by the action of the Government, applied only to lands open to public entry. That I take it was far more exclusive than the language of this bill, which gives a right to choose the eighty acres or whatever it may be from homestead lands and lands open to pre-emption. Therefore the honorable Senator is in error in supposing that I am suggesting for his bill a closer limit of exclusion than I favored for a more general bill.

I made my remark because I was attracted by the care of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] in the passage of all bills of this kind, and I respectfully proffered to contribute a small modicum of my experience on that subject, that we should not carelessly give to a citizen the right to obtain a patent that he might make the instrument of unjust demand and litigation upon other lands than were contemplated in the act. There has been mischief wrought by the inadvertent grant of patents by Congress. The holders of these patents have settled upon lands; and since I have been here I have seen the very heart of the city of Chicago proposed to be occupied by the holder of one of these floating grants by Congress. I have heard arguments for some acres of land in the heart of the city of Chicago under the color of the public land laws of the United States by the holder of a land warrant. My suggestion is not because the party holding can recover; but when I know that the claimant may blackmail occupants and possessors, throw clouds upon titles by pretended legislation, I wish to see no bill, whether for 80 acres or 8,000 acres or any other body of land, pass Congress unless from it is eviscerated the power to annoy honest private claimants in all parts of the United States. In other words, sir, Congress, in making grants from the general domain, should be as specific as to locality, as to the character of the lands, as to the right which they are giving in the shape of a patent, as words possibly can permit.

I will frankly say that if the bill of the honorable Senator had been sent to the Committee on Private Land Claims it would have been subjected by that committee to the criticism of the General Land Office before it was approved and brought back here, and that no bill at any time since I have been connected with that committee—and it has not been a short connection—containing language of grant in as general phrase as does this bill has been reported from that committee, except subject to the criticism and the approval of the land officers and the experts in land law of the administration.

Therefore I trust that, having suggested now the restriction of this bill, those who are more competent to advise in such matters by the general current of their action than I am—and I include the Senator from Kansas, or I would have included him prior to his last remarks in this case among those who are better informed than I as to the public land laws and the effect of the language used in an act like this—will propose a restriction that will prevent this present grant, whether of 8 or 80 or 80,000 acres, from becoming a float that may be used for the purpose of annoyance or of settlement upon lands other than those contemplated by those friendly to the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] will now be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add:

Provided, That a certified copy of the decree of the court dispossessing Joseph F. Wilson, as aforesaid, be deposited in the General Land Office on application for a new warrant; and the patent or patents issued under such new warrant shall recite the fact that such entries are in satisfaction of all claim of right under the prior entry of Joseph F. Wilson.

Mr. PLUMB. I can say that the Committee on Public Lands never report such a bill as this without its first having been submitted to the scrutiny of the General Land Office. It has not during the period of time I have been connected with it reported a single bill which I can recall providing for the issuance of scrip except the one now before the Senate. The scrip of which the Senator speaks, and which has been so properly criticised by him and by other members of this body at various times, and which has been so vicious in its effect upon the disposition of the public domain, has always been provided for by legislation reported by the Private Lands Committee of the Senate.

Now, so far as these eighty acres of land are concerned, I called up the bill this morning at the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois. I am perfectly willing, as I said before, that it shall be locatable anywhere. I do not care if it can not be located at all, if that is the sense of justice which characterizes the Senate in dealing with a case of this kind; but the bill itself is entirely proper, and does not do more under any possible circumstances than equal and exact justice to a party who, relying on a patent of the United States, purchased eighty acres of land in the State of Indiana, of which he was after a number of years dispossessed by the decree of a competent court.

There are two ways to compensate him for that loss, for I take it no one would sit here and say that the Government of the United States, having issued a patent for a piece of land, and that land having passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser, whatever might be the condition of the original patentee, the Government should not compensate in some way the purchaser dispossessed. It can be done, of course, by money; but it is as easy a way and is subject to as little criticism and is just as fair to give him an equivalent amount of land elsewhere upon the public domain; and I think I do not need to draw on the credulity of members of this body when I say that land in Indiana is worth as much as land in the Territory of New Mexico or in the Territory of Wyoming or of Idaho or Montana or Washington, or elsewhere. If the Senator has in mind some particular Territory that he thinks above any other Territory ought to be endowed with the privilege of the location of these eighty acres of land, of course I am entirely willing it shall be permitted to be subject to that restriction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Delaware to offer an amendment?

Mr. BAYARD. I move to amend the bill by striking out in lines 11 and 12 the words "pre-emption or homestead settlement," and inserting the words "general entry under the land laws of the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware will be read from the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in line 11, after the word "subject," the words "to pre-emption or homestead settlement" and insert "to general entry under the land laws of the United States."

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator state to the Senate what would be the difference between a pre-emption or homestead entry and a general entry?

Mr. BAYARD. I can not tell the Senator, and he can scarcely wish to know from me, for he knows better than I; but I believe this to be the result: The lands subject to general entry exclude all reservations of any kind and would exclude a character of lands which may be occupied by pre-emption and homestead settlement; at least that is my belief, and, following my memory upon this subject, I believe the amendment I have offered is in the language of the limitation suggested by the General Land Office in respect of a general bill relating to private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and others resulting from the Mexican purchase and conquest, and, as that was land purchasable, I believe, at a dollar and a quarter an acre, farming lands exclusive of minerals, and exclusive, as I remember, of pre-emption and homestead settlement, I merely made the suggestion in the line of cautionary action in respect to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. PLUMB. That would be traveling in a circle. If I know anything at all about the public land laws of the United States, I do know that there is no such class of lands as those described as subject to general entry. If that language is to have any effect whatever, it would mean all the classes of entry that could be made by any person or with any character of land scrip or with money, and therefore would enlarge rather than limit the scope of the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. Perhaps I used the word "general," but I have since changed it. Let the Secretary read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, in line 11, after the word "subject," the words "to pre-emption or homestead settlement" and to insert "to private entry under the land laws of the United States."

Mr. PLUMB. That limits it to certain classes of lands; and I doubt whether there are any lands in the United States that can be located by it; but if that be the measure of justice in the Senator's mind, I shall make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 5; no quorum voting.

Mr. BAYARD. To save a call by yeas and nays, by unanimous consent the question might be put again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Acting on the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, the Chair will put the question again.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GROOME (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who is temporarily absent, but if my vote shall become necessary to make a quorum I am at liberty to record it.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Conger,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Blair,	Garland,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	George,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Call,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Vance.
Camden,	Gorman,	Pike,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Platt,
Coke,	Jackson,	Pugh,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Sheffield,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Frye,	Lapham,	Morrill,	Wilson.

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Groome,	Lamar,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Logan,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harris,	Mahone,	Vest,
Cullom,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker,
Edmunds,	Jonas,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR ANTHONY.

Mr. PLATT. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration, unless there be some rule which makes it improper to consider it to-day:

Resolved, That the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the officers and members of the Senate who attended the funeral of the late Senator ANTHONY at Providence, R. I., in September last, be paid out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, on vouchers properly allowed by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that under the rules all resolutions appropriating money out of the contingent fund must be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. Let the resolution be referred, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6578) to amend section 3940 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the forwarding of mail matter; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution, that when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 20, 1884, they stand adjourned until Monday, the 5th day of January, 1885.

C. S. MOSS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further resolutions, the order of morning business is closed, and the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar, under Rule VIII.

Order of Business No. 333, being the bill (S. 493) for the relief of C. S. Moss, was announced as first in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has been reported adversely, and I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RIGHTS IN LAND GRANTS.

The bill (S. 1445) to provide for the settlement of the rights of the States and of the corporations and persons interested in any grant of lands in aid of railroads and canals which shall be declared forfeited by act of Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. He reported that bill. My recollection of the bill is that it is an exceedingly important one; it is a general law, and I do not think it can be considered in the morning hour under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Alabama is in the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to its being passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over, and the next bill will be called.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Alabama is here to take charge of Senate bill 1445.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire the bill to lie over informally as I suggested the other day, because other measures that are in conference between the two Houses will bring up the whole subject involved in the bill. I ask that it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made unless objection be interposed.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

The bill (S. 1577) to provide for the bringing of suits by citizens of the United States against the Government thereof in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. GARLAND. I desire to have that called up at some other time. It can not be disposed of under the five-minute rule. Some day I shall call it up when it can be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SHOSHONES, BANNOCKS, AND SHEEPEATERS.

The bill (S. 1008) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations, in Idaho, May 14, 1880, for the sale of a portion of their lands in said Territory, and for other purposes, and make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, desires this bill to lie over until his return to the Chamber. That order will be made.

PETER DELLA TERRE.

The bill (S. 294) for the relief of Frank Della Terre and Susan Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a case which involves an important question, the payment of a United States district attorney compensation for services performed away back in 1857 or 1858; the case was about to be called up the other day, and I have given some attention to the question. It will necessarily involve a longer discussion than can be given to it under the five-minute rule, and there would not be much probability of its becoming a law at this session even if passed by the Senate. It strikes me that it would be rather a useless waste of time to devote to it to consider this bill when no good can come from it. It proposes to pay a tolerably large sum to the heirs of a deceased officer, who was United States district attorney in California in 1857 and 1858, and I do not think the report places the claim upon such ground that we should be justified in passing it at this time. Therefore I object to its consideration.

Mr. HAMPTON. I submit to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] who prepared the report and introduced the bill is absent on special duty on behalf of the Senate, and I suggest to him that the bill be passed over informally until that Senator is in the Senate, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to letting it be passed over informally, as the Senator from Oregon who made the report is absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

CHESAPEAKE AND OHIO RAILWAY.

The bill (S. 1212) to authorize the extension of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway to a point in the military lands at Fortress Monroe, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I was informed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] that a bill in substance this bill which is now reached on the Calendar had been passed at the last session and that it was not necessary that any action should be taken on this bill. I think it would be as well to indefinitely postpone it, and I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The bill (S. 1235) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PUGH. That bill can not be considered in the morning hour, and may as well take its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it lie as it now is without prejudice.

Mr. PUGH. It is not material, and I have no objection to that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be informally passed over.

SOUTHERN MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 13) to reappropriate and apply the amount appropriated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, to pay certain Southern mail contractors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. That can not be considered in this morning hour. I object to it, but I am willing it shall remain on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

OREGON CENTRAL RAILROAD GRANT.

The bill (S. 428) to forfeit certain public lands granted to the Oregon Central Railroad Company in the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLUMB. That has been made the special order for Thursday next at 2 o'clock, and therefore should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill 181 was made a special order.

Mr. PLUMB. They are the same thing, and Senate bill 428, I suppose, might in that case be indefinitely postponed; but I will not ask for that. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To Rule IX?

Mr. PLUMB. To Rule IX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. The House bill exhausts the subject.

PETER TARGARONA.

The bill (S. 902) for the relief of Peter Targarona was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the claim of Peter Targarona for loss and damages alleged to have been sustained by him through the seizure and sale of the steamboat Live Oak, be, and the same hereby is, referred to the Court of Claims, with power to hear and determine the same upon the merits thereof; and any defense, set-off, or counter-claim may be pleaded by the United States as defendants, as in cases within the general jurisdiction of the court, and either party shall have the same right of appeal as in such cases; and the testimony of the claimant or of any party in interest may be admitted in evidence: Provided, That the liability of the United States shall be the same as if the acts done by the officers of the Government in the premises had been done by the agents of a public corporation.

Mr. McMILLAN. Can not this bill and amendment be explained by some person having knowledge of them? The Senator having charge of the bill I think is not in his place.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be passed over.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the bill be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. It may retain its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued.

MARIA E. WARFIELD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 214) for the relief of Maria E. Warfield.

Mr. PLATT. There is an adverse report in that case.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill is adversely reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JULIA A. NUTT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 1851) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased.

Mr. GEORGE. My impression is that since that bill was reported the substance of it was added to a House bill on that subject; and, in order to allow me to look into that, I ask that the bill lie over without prejudice, retaining its place

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the order.

JOHN SILSBY AND OTHERS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 504) for the relief of John Silsby and others, purchasers of the "Weaver tract" lot of land in the city of Selma, State of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is adversely reported.

Mr. FRYE. What becomes of the bills on this Calendar, unobjected cases, where there are adverse reports and no action is taken? What call do they come back to on the Calendar? As unobjected cases?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The custom of the Senate has been to regard cases adversely reported by a committee as objected to.

Mr. FRYE. I notice that some of them still remain on this Calendar; and why should they remain on this Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is in cases where a request is made by some Senator that they shall retain their place.

Mr. FRYE. But the ordinary custom would be to have them go on the Calendar of objected cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be the order unless special request were made.

LOST LAKE AND MOUNT HOOD IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 1303) to grant the right of way over the public lands of the United States to the Lost Lake and Mount Hood Improvement Company.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator who reported that bill and who takes a good deal of interest in it is absent on duty as a member of a committee, and I ask that it may be passed over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

COLORADO INDIAN LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1695) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "reservation," to insert "in Colorado;" so as to make the section read:

That actual settlers on lands subject to pre-emption under existing laws within the late Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indian reservation, in Colorado, shall be entitled to purchase the same, in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each, in accordance with the general principles of the pre-emption laws: Provided, That no bona fide settler as aforesaid shall be denied the right to purchase land under the provisions of this act on the ground that he may have previously had the benefit of pre-emption on other public land of the United States without said reservation, nor on the ground that he may have removed from his own land elsewhere within the State of Colorado to settle upon land in said reservation: And provided further, That proof of actual inhabitancy and improvement of the land for not less than one year shall be made to the satisfaction of the register and the receiver, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "lands," to strike out "shall" and insert "may;" and in line 3, after the words "date of," to strike out "filing" and insert "entry;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the payment for these lands may be made in three installments, as follows, to wit: Twenty-five cents per acre at the date of entry, and 50 cents per acre, respectively, in one and two years from such date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. There is no report accompanying this bill, and it changes the rule in regard to homestead entries entirely. I should like to have some explanation of the bill and why it is necessary to pass it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the bill simply provides that settlers on the reservation may have the right to pre-empt one hundred and sixty acres of land. It is a fact that a large number of persons went upon this reservation with the expectation of making homestead entries, but the law under which this land became public land of the United States prohibits them making such entries. This bill provides that they may take a pre-emption of one hundred and sixty acres, and pay for the land in the regular way under the laws of the United States. The bill has been very carefully considered by the committee, and does not affect any rights of Indians or other persons.

Mr. CONGER. How long a residence is required of those who may pre-empt?

Mr. HILL. It requires a year's residence.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the arrangement under which we sell these lands. By the agreement which was entered into by Congress and the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians, we agree to sell these lands for their benefit, they to get the entire proceeds. In the rush of people to that section of country there is a large number of settlers, and it was deemed a case where, in view of all the circumstances, an exception should be made to the general rule which prevails, limiting a party to one entry, and under the circumstances related by the Senator from Colorado, the committee agree to recommend a change of the rule in that particular; especially inasmuch as besides that we added to the requirements of settlement now made under existing law, that is, instead of six months, as now required, we require a settlement of twelve months.

Mr. CONGER. Prior to entry?

Mr. PLUMB. Prior to entry.

Mr. CONGER. But it seems they have resided there without any right.

Mr. PLUMB. It was also found that there were a large number of people on the lands who had gone in good faith, supposing that they had a right to enter, and inasmuch as they were Indian lands, and not public lands in the ordinary sense of the term, we thought this exception was allowable.

Mr. CONGER. Then if the lands are to be sold for the benefit of the Indians a prudent care for the interests of the wards of the United States might have required that they be first offered, as other lands are, at public auction, and have the benefit of competition.

Mr. PLUMB. But the agreement between the Indians and the United States was that the lands should be sold to actual settlers, and this is in exact accordance with the agreement; that is to say, it is for the benefit of actual settlers, waiving in this case that provision of the statute which applies to the ordinary public lands of the United States, that no person shall make more than one entry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1682, prior to which the Chair will lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The bill (H. R. 6578) to amend section 3940 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the forwarding of mail matter, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 20, 1884, they stand adjourned until Monday, the 5th day of January, 1885.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair believes it is customary to refer such resolutions to the Committee on Appropriations. That order will be made in this case.

SILVER COIN AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. BECK. Before the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] proceeds regularly with his bill, I would ask him, without displacing it or laying it aside—for I do not want to interfere with it—to allow me to say a few words in conclusion of the remarks I was making yesterday when there was a disagreement as to facts and as to the law at the time of the adjournment, and I gave way with the assurance that I should have the right to put the matter correctly in the morning. I will take very little time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will not object to laying aside the pending business for fifteen minutes in order to accommodate the Senator from Kentucky. I would express the hope, however, that at that time unless further debate is desired we may have a vote upon the Dakota bill.

Mr. BECK. I shall be very brief and will not delay the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, on yesterday, while I was attempting to reply somewhat to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], I said that he as Secretary of the Treasury had failed to pay out the silver coin received at the custom-houses as the law required him to do, and that the administration had in many ways obstructed the use and thereby reduced the value of the silver coin. I said that he was not a friend to the present silver dollar, whatever he may be to such a dollar as he thinks ought to be coined. This occurred; I read from the RECORD:

Mr. BECK. I hope when this discussion comes up again I shall show from report after report of the distinguished gentleman as Secretary of the Treasury that he has denied that we had a right to pay our creditors in the silver coin of the country——

Mr. SHERMAN. Ah!

Mr. BECK. Although the act of July required, and it was written upon the face of the bonds, that it was to be paid in the coin of the country, which embraced both gold and silver of the standard value of that day.

Mr. SHERMAN. What was the date of that act?

Mr. BECK. If that was not hostility to silver, I do not know what was. Now, let me ask the Senator——

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the date of that act?

Mr. BECK. Why did he fail to comply with the law, and pay the silver dollar received for customs dues, as the laws required him, on the interest of the public debt?

Mr. SHERMAN. To what act does the Senator refer?

Mr. BECK. The act of July 14, 1870, and the act of February 25, 1862, which pledged all the coin received from customs first to the payment of interest and then to the setting apart of a sinking fund. Did he ever pay a dollar received at the custom-house——

Mr. SHERMAN. The act to which the Senator referred by date a moment ago was passed a year or two after I ceased to be Secretary, and I have not had a chance to pay out any, except what I received as my salary.

Mr. BECK. The law remained unchanged and the Senator remained Secretary, and he refused to pay in obedience to law the silver coin received at the custom-house, though the law required him to do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. What law?

Mr. BECK. And it could have been done for no other purpose except to keep it out of the hands of men whose interest it would be to circulate it and make it good, and to keep it in the Teasury and raise the clamor that nobody would take it, when he would not pay it to anybody who was obliged to take it.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, the law required that to be done which was done. The Senator can certainly tell me——

Mr. BECK. I will get the Revised Statutes and read the very fundamental law which has been regarded all the time as the law that prohibits us from taking greenbacks——

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that there was no express law requiring the payment of silver certificates and silver coin on the interest of the public debt until after I ceased to hold the office.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon. I will find it in a moment, I think.

I, however, at that point yielded for a motion to adjourn. I have found it; this is the law passed February 25, 1862.

Mr. SHERMAN. What page do you read from?

Mr. BECK. Page 735 of the Revised Statutes, section 3694. After providing that coin, and coin alone, should be received for customs dues, section 3694 provides:

The coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.

Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

Third. The residue to be paid into the Treasury.

That was the law long before the Senator accepted the office of Secretary of the Treasury; it remained the law during all the time he was Secretary, and is the law to-day. Under that law large amounts of silver coin were paid into the custom-houses for customs dues while he was Secretary of the Treasury, and have been so paid ever since. Yet, although the law required him to pay out the coin thus received, silver coin as well as gold coin, to the creditors of the United States, first on the interest and next in the purchase of bonds for the sinking fund, neither he nor his successors have ever applied a dollar of the silver coin so received for the purposes prescribed by law; that coin has all been dumped into the Treasury of the United States and held there, and the clamor has been raised that nobody wants it.

I called upon the Senator when he was Secretary once for a report as to what silver coin had been received for customs up to that date and what he had paid out on the public debt under the act of 1862. On the 16th day of December, 1878, he sent a report, accompanied by a report from Mr. Gilfillan, the Treasurer, in which he showed that gold and silver coin was received for customs dues in large amounts, and that not one dollar of the silver coin thus received had ever been paid to any public creditor. I hope he will examine his own report of December 16, 1878, sent from the Treasury Department to the Senate in pursuance of a resolution that I had offered. In that report he said that he allowed the bondholder to determine what character of coin or draft he desired; and, as the creditor always preferred the gold to the silver coin, he allowed him to make the choice. The result was that he did not pay one dollar in silver coin out of the millions of it which were received for customs dues, although required by law to so apply it.

On yesterday I referred also to the act of July 14, 1870, as making the silver coin of the country of 412½ grains, the then standard value, payable in satisfaction of all the bonds of the United States. That act provided for the issuing of fifteen hundred million dollars of bonds, and this language was used. These bonds shall be "redeemable in coin of the present standard value, at the pleasure of the United States"—some in ten, some in fifteen, and some in twenty-five years, but all in "coin of the present standard value;" and the bond itself, thus making it plain, reads thus, and all the renewals of it are written on the face of the bond to the same effect:

This bond is issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, as amended by an act approved January 29, 1871, and is redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after the 1st day of July, 1907—

I have one of the 1907 bonds, but they are all the same—in coin of the standard value of the United States on said July 14, 1870, with interest in such coin from the day of the date hereof at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly, on the 1st day of October, January, April, and July in each year. The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

WASHINGTON, July 1, 1877.

This is one of the renewed bonds, as its date shows, but every one of them has the same indorsement. Therefore I said and repeat that the silver coin of the United States has never had fair play and has never been used as by our contracts and laws it could be and ought to have been; the law has never been complied with in regard to the payment of our debts with it, and it is for that reason, and that reason mainly, that whatever amount of it is now locked up in the Treasury is locked up there because, if our officials had paid it out as the law required them to do, it would have at once become the interest of the men who received it to make it as valuable as possible, instead of its being denounced and vilified at home and abroad in every form by our own officials.

The reason why we never have had any chance to negotiate on this subject with foreign nations is that all the efforts we seemed to make were under false pretenses. The illustration I gave yesterday of Talleyrand's conduct is exactly applicable. We had determined as early as 1870 that all the bonds we then issued (and there are yet outstanding a thousand millions or more) should be paid in gold and silver coin of the United States at the standard value of July 14, 1870. If we had attempted to alter that by making it 15½ to 1 with gold, or 400 instead of 412½ grains, which is the silver coin of Europe, every bondholder in the United States or elsewhere would have said, "You are bound to pay my bond in silver coin of the standard value of July, 1870, and you are giving me coin at 15½ to 1, or 400 grains of silver to the dollar instead of 412½; you are by this reduction repudiating your obligations." Other nations would not increase their coin, and we could not honorably reduce ours; therefore we could not obtain a uniform silver coinage, very much to the gratification of England and our executive officials.

I have called upon the Director of the Mint for information. I have looked at the statistics of other countries since we adjourned last night, and the silver coin of the United States bears a higher relation to its gold coin than the silver coin of any other country in the world bears to its gold coin, except Mexico and perhaps Japan. That is, our silver dollar is worth more in proportion to the gold coin, and bears a higher relation to it, than that of almost any other country in the world, yet we alone are abusing and denouncing our silver coinage. Other nations seem to be content with theirs. The complaint can not be made, therefore, that in paying our bondholders according to law—a law which has been on the statute-book ever since 1862—we are violating any contract, and the Secretary of the Treasury, I insist, has no right, when he is compelled by law to pay the coin received from customs, to say if the creditor wants something else he will not comply with the law. The Secretary knew very well what the law was; and at one time he entertained very just views in regard to the contract rights of the people of the United States, as I propose to show. When we sold our bonds we received for them greenbacks at par, and issued the bonds for an equal amount, and we wrote upon the back of every greenback what I will read. I believe I have a ten-dollar bill in my pocket this morning. This is the indorsement:

This note is a legal tender at its face value for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt.

That can not be taken off the back of that greenback; and yet a few years afterward the Senator from Ohio and all his colleagues repudiated that contract, and said the principal of the bonds should be paid in coin, gold and silver coin. The language of the repudiating act of 1869 mentioned gold and silver as the coin in which the principal of the bonds should be paid. Why, sir, before the Senator was Secretary—when he was first told that the bondholders were going to demand more than their contract, he wrote a very able letter in 1868 to a friend, which I will read for his edification now, and I will add that he seems to me to be pursuing the same course in regard to silver now that he there condemned in regard to the greenback:

DEAR SIR: I was pleased to receive your letter. My personal interests are the same as yours, but, like you, I do not intend to be influenced by them. My construction of the law is the result of careful examination, and I feel quite sure an impartial court would confirm it, if the case could be tried before a court. I send you my views as fully stated in a speech. Your idea is that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the "principal" in legal-tenders.

I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he paid for the bonds. If the case is to be tested by the law, I am right; if it is to be tested by Jay Cooke's advertisements, I am wrong. I hate repudiation or anything like it, but we ought not to be deterred from doing what is right by fear of undeserved epithets. If under the law as it stands the holders of the five-twenties can only be paid in gold, then we are repudiators if we propose to pay otherwise. If the bondholder can legally demand only the kind of money he paid, then he is a repudiator and extortioner to demand money more valuable than he gave.

Truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

I repeat and indorse those sentiments in their full force in regard to the silver coin. The cases are parallel. When we issued our bonds in 1870, payable in the coin of the country at its then standard value, which was 412½ grains of silver to the dollar, every creditor agreed to receive it, taking the chance of its rise or fall, and every public officer was obliged to pay it. In my opinion, the public officer who refuses to comply with the law, or the man who holds our obligation and refuses to receive what the obligation calls for, is violating his public duty in the one case and is an extortioner in the other. This people have a right to pay their debts in that coin; and the attempt to make the silver dollar 470 or 480 grains, as now proposed, is to give to the bondholders what by their contract they have no right to ask, and to place an additional burden on the people of the United States that nobody has a right to impose.

Every country in the world, as I have said, except perhaps Mexico, has a smaller proportion of silver in their silver coinage than we have. So the Director of the Mint says, and he has none of the apprehensions that the President and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency seem to have about silver money. Read his report, and you will see that we produced 40 per cent. of all the silver produced in the world last year, and 33 per cent. of all the gold produced in the world; and he says, in substance, that all the gold produced in the world annually is, in his opinion, absorbed in the arts and manufactures. This is his language: The amount of coin and new gold used for the purpose of ornamentation and in the arts is $13,000,000 in the United States, $11,000,000 in France, and $10,000,000 in Great Britain and Ireland. These four countries alone withdrew from the stock of gold last year $53,000,000, out of a total product of $90,000,000.

The struggle now is to have gold and nothing but gold for our coinage. We are asked to destroy our silver, which of course means to destroy our silver certificates, which are based on coin deposited, and thus double the burden of every debt. True, you will double the purchasing power of the little gold which remains to the creditor class, for Mr. Burchard clearly shows that of all that is now produced $53,000,000 out of $90,000,000 is absorbed by four countries alone, without counting what all the rest of the world consumes or uses for purposes other than for coinage. In this condition of things, while we are producing 40 per cent. of all the silver produced in the world, we are now told at this late day that we must destroy or abandon it or add 60 more grains to each dollar by an administration that has never given it a chance. I repeat, no executive officer has given it fair play. Even the law forbidding our national banks from going into any association that would not receive silver certificates has been violated. The Senator from Ohio in his place in this body denounced that provision of law when we passed it. If the debate goes on I will read it all and show the fact to be as I state.

I took up the report of the Director of the Mint yesterday evening and found that France maintains a less valuable silver dollar than ours by 3 or 4 cents, or one of 400 grains against our 412½, in the proportion of five hundred millions of silver to eight hundred millions of gold coin. Switzerland maintains more than half her coinage in silver; Belgium maintains almost as much silver as gold; Spain more silver than gold; Germany one-fourth as much silver as gold—she has $414,000,000 of gold and $105,000,000 of silver in circulation. I do not want to take time, but if I had time I would read what Mr. KELLEY said Prince Bismarck said to him about the mistake Germany had made in demonetizing silver. Austria has more silver than gold; the Netherlands have four times as much silver as gold; Denmark has five times as much; Sweden has twice as much; Japan has half as much; Mexico has nearly all silver. The circulation, I believe, of Bolivia and the Sandwich Islands is nearly all silver. The last named are the countries whose trade we seek, yet we, producing 40 per cent. of the silver of the world, are now told that we must strike it down and proclaim to all other countries that we are not asking to maintain it any longer. As I said, I wrote to the Director of the Mint about the relative value of our silver coin as compared with other countries. His dispatch is handed to me this moment. He says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, December 16, 1884.

Hon. J. B. BECK, Senate:

Yes; Mexico and Japan are the only countries I now remember that give a higher valuation to silver relatively to gold.

HORATIO C. BURCHARD.

I asked him if I was correct in making the statement that our silver dollar came up to the proportion of gold more nearly than the silver coin of a majority of the countries of the world, and the answer is as you observe, yes, with the exception of Japan and Mexico, higher than any of them; yet we are told that we can not maintain our silver dollar, while they all maintain theirs. Sir, we have never tried to maintain it. I want to see an administration that will tell the silver-using countries of the world, as they are the countries we must trade with, such as South America, the West Indies, Central America, China, Japan, India, and others, now dominated by the commerce of England, "We will stand by you on the silver issue, and we will not allow England to dominate and control the trade of the world or bring all its coinages to her standard." I admit that her power is great. She has nearly 60 per cent. of the world's trade now, with the goods of all nations stored in her great warehouses and all the bills of exchange by which the commerce of the world is affected drawn upon London. We have surrendered nearly everything in that regard to her; and now are we going to allow her to drive our silver out of the markets of the world in order to make her the great creditor country, dominating and dictating to everybody else?

Mr. President, I believe that whenever silver is treated fairly and honestly and an earnest effort is made in conjunction with the great countries that are now using it, with whom we trade, England, because she has to maintain her position in trade and commerce if she can, will have to yield. But she will not yield as long as speeches like that of the Senator from Ohio are made to the effect that we are robbers and repudiators; that we are wrongfully maintaining a depreciated currency of 15 per cent., and while even our Comptroller of the Currency has the impudence (for no other word can be used)—a clerk dares to come and tell the Congress of the United States, as he does in his report, what I will read:

The law which stamps 412½ grains of silver and arbitrarily insists upon its circulation as a dollar, with unlimited legal-tender qualities, when its true value, as indicated by the market price of silver is but 85.2 cents, is unworthy of this nation, and will sooner or later bring upon us financial trouble and disgrace.

We are to be told by a man who I believe was a clerk a year or two ago, in an official report, that the legislation of Congress is disgraceful. That is the kind of support our silver money gets from those whose duty it is made by law to sustain it. That is the support it is getting from the Treasury officials; yet we are pretending to-day to be in sympathy with those nations who desire to maintain silver coinage. Our officials are not. England needs not to be told that; she will insist on gold as the standard so long as you make her the great storehouse of the goods of the world. So long as you surrender to her 60 per cent. of the carrying trade of the world, so long as you have to draw bills of exchange on her, she will demand gold and do all possible to cheapen silver when she can pay out silver to her 200,000,000 serfs in India, and to others, who are not much further removed from vassalage, in the way of trade. Of course she wants gold.

I am willing to do whatever may be necessary to be done in the way of regulating the silver coinage of this country and the silver certificates based upon it when the proper time comes, but I want that done through friendly and not through hostile hands. We can wait sixty days until the enemies of the silver bill disappear from the other end of the Avenue, and we can have an opportunity of letting the world know that what we propose we propose in good faith. I hope we will tell them that we intend to maintain the currency of this country and to pay our debts and our bonds according to our obligation, and that we will have Secretaries and other officers who will not dare to defy the law, men who will faithfully pay out the silver coin received for customs as the law requires them to do, and not fritter our laws away by executive constructions, and then come here and tell us either in reports or through their comptrollers that we are passing laws disgraceful to the people of the United States.

I have occupied much longer time than I intended. I will discuss these questions when the proper time comes, I hope, to the satisfaction of the Senate, and will endeavor to show, whatever we may do hereafter, that this is not the time and these are not the auspices to act under. With a President, a Secretary, and Comptroller and ex-Secretary wanting to reverse our silver policy, as they have repeatedly tried to do and failed up to this time, I think we had better let things remain as they are during the expiring hours of their power.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). On the call of the Senator from Indiana the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Indiana may think, probably, that I shall not be able to reply now to the Senator from Kentucky because the Dakota bill is pending before the Senate; but I do not know any rule that will prevent me from replying very briefly to the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair knows of no rule that would confine the Senator's remarks in any particular channel.

Mr. HARRISON. I perfectly understand that we have no rule of relevancy here in the Senate. At the same time I think it would be unfortunate to open upon the pending bill a discussion of the silver question. Rather than do that I confess, though it may detract somewhat from the gracefulness of my concession to the Senator from Kentucky under some intimidation for fear he might open the discussion of the silver bill on the Dakota bill, I consented to lay it aside for a little time. I am willing to do the same thing now, as it seems to be proper that the Senator from Ohio should make some response to the allusions which have been directed to him personally; but I would want in the first place to get unanimous consent of the Senate that we shall vote on the Dakota bill at some hour to be named.

Mr. BECK. I have only to say that I am not responsible for the discussion of the silver question. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] yesterday was allowed to make a speech. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] thought it his duty to seek to destroy the effect of it; and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and myself desired to make a few remarks to show that the Senator from Ohio was not altogether as correct as he thought he was. I do not think anybody ought to object to that. That is all we have done. If the silver question is to be opened, I am willing to go into it fully.

Mr. HARRISON. I was not at all criticising the Senator from Kentucky. I understand perfectly that Senators have it in their power to debate the silver resolution upon the Dakota bill while that is the pending business, but I want to avoid that. Now, I ask unanimous consent that we may vote upon the Dakota bill at 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Indiana that the Senate vote upon the Dakota bill at 4 o'clock to-day?

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] objected to an agreement being reached to vote at a certain time. I do not think he will urge that objection, though I do not see him in his seat.

Mr. HARRISON. I feel sure that he will not, for he said to me that he did not intend to speak on the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I think myself, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, that we can take the vote immediately after this discussion is through.

Mr. HARRISON. Say not later than 4 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed, to vote on the Dakota bill by at latest 4 o'clock to-day? The Chair hears no objection. That is the understanding. Is there objection to informally laying aside the bill in order that the Senator from Ohio may proceed?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask that it be laid aside; but I have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will be informally laid aside.

SILVER COIN AND SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not propose to reply at any length to the observations of the Senator from Kentucky. What he has stated on this occasion he has stated, so a Senator tells me, fifteen times, but I do not know how many times he has repeated all these arguments, and he will probably repeat them many times again. I am always glad to hear him.

The only point I wish to direct the attention of the Senate to is the charge the Senator makes that the executive officers of this Government have not obeyed the law, that they have made a discrimination against the silver dollar or the silver coin of the United States. I say that that is not true, certainly in respect to myself when I was an executive officer, nor do I believe it is true as to any executive officers who have had charge of the enforcement of the law since its passage in 1862.

What are the circumstances? The law quoted by the Senator is as familiar as the Lord's Prayer, certainly it is about as often repeated; that is, that the coin of the United States received for customs duties should be applied in a certain way to the payment of interest on the public debt and to the sinking fund. From the passage of that law up to the date of the letter which he quotes from me there was no silver coin in the United States that could be applied to the payment of the public debt or interest upon it. The Senator must be forgetful of the most elementary ideas of our currency. From 1862, when that law was passed, until 1868 there was no silver dollar in circulation that could be applied to the payment of customs duties or that was paid for customs duties. Why, sir, there had been only eight million silver dollars issued from the foundation of the Government of the United States to the time of the passage of the law of February 28, 1878, and there was no silver dollar paid into the Treasury for customs duties. There was no such money that could be paid into the Treasury for customs duties, and consequently no discrimination could have been made. The whole of the eight million silver dollars that had been in existence from the foundation of the Government prior to the suspension of specie payments in 1862 had disappeared from circulation, and there was no coin in this country except the gold coin of the United States applicable to the payment of customs duties. It is true the statute speaks of "coin," but the only coin then in existence was the gold coin of the United States, and that was received and applied as the law directed.

Mr. President, let me say further that there was no period from 1862 to 1878 where the amount of revenues paid in under that law was not largely in excess of the interest paid on the public debt. When I became Secretary of the Treasury the interest upon the public debt was $95,000,000 a year; now it is about $50,000,000; and at that time the revenues of the Government, payable in gold coin only, because there was none other to pay them, amounted to $200,000,000, and that coin received into the Treasury was applied in express execution of the provision of the act.

There was quoted a letter written by me some time in 1878. Why, sir, at the time that letter was written there had not been fifteen million silver dollars coined. The coinage commenced in April, 1878, and the letter he quotes I believe was written in October or November, 1878, or thereabouts. Am I correct in the date? Will the Senator advise me what was the date of that letter from me?

Mr. BECK. The letter I have read?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. The letter I have read from the Senator was upon another subject altogether, but kindred to it. It was in 1868, when he was denouncing men who demanded the principal of their bonds in gold coin.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not mean that letter. I mean the official letter as Secretary of the Treasury. It was written some time in 1878.

Mr. BECK. I think it was. I will give you the exact date. It was December 16, 1878.

Mr. SHERMAN. At that time there had not been and could not have been more than 16,000,000 of these silver dollars issued, and probably not a dollar of them had been paid into the Treasury of the United States for customs dues.

Mr. BECK. I beg your pardon. The Secretary himself announced that there had been at least $11,000,000 received, but they had not kept them separately.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is, from the passage of the law of 1862 up to that time $11,000,000 had been paid in.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; in the last year; it was only one year; the Secretary was inquired of as to how much had been paid during that year.

Mr. SHERMAN. The first silver coin issued under the act of February 28, 1878, was issued, I think, in April or May. It took some time to prepare for the issue of the silver coin. So between the date of the issue of the silver dollar and the date of that letter there could not have been more than 14,000,000 silver dollars issued.

I have not the official letter before me which the Senator read, but I probably did ascertain by official documents that from the time of the passage of that law some $11,000,000 altogether had been paid in silver coin into the Treasury of the United States in payment of customs duties and other revenue charges. During that time there had been paid in, say, in a period of sixteen years, probably $3,200,000,000 of gold coin. The Senator complains now that we did not force the public creditor instead of being paid out of the thirty-two hundred millions of gold coin collected from 1862 to 1878 to receive on the public debt and on the interest on the public debt the $11,000,000 in silver which we had received up to that time. How absurd a proposition that is! But no discrimination ever was made between the gold and silver coins of the United States of legal tender, nor could any be made, and the amount of silver received and paid into the Treasury was infinitesimal compared with the great mass of gold that had been received.

Mr. HILL. May I interrupt the Senator? I should like to ask a question at this point.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not now. Let me finish with one, and then I will turn to my friend from Colorado and give him a chance.

Mr. HILL. It was right on the point on which the Senator was speaking that I desired to put a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say, therefore, that it was utterly idle to complain that a discrimination was made by the Treasury Department, because none was made. Eleven million dollars in silver may have been paid into the Treasury in various forms, mainly from internal revenue, probably, because as a matter of fact silver was not paid into the Treasury for customs at so early a period as that, nor was it attempted to be paid; nor, indeed, as I imagine, was there ever any silver dollar paid in for customs duties, because it is not convenient to merchants in New York and in the importing cities to pay silver dollars. They will not carry great masses of heavy weight like silver dollars to pay customs duties, but they are paid in gold coin. At most, according to the statement, the Senator from Kentucky says $11,000,000 in silver were paid in, and probably largely in fractional currency in order to make change in sums under $5; and what was that as compared with the mass of gold that was paid in during that period of time?

Then the Senator does not show that any discrimination was made, nor has any been made ever since. I doubt very much whether in the course of the Treasury operations at the city of New York, where the great mass of our revenues from customs duties is collected, any silver is paid in there to-day to any considerable extent, certainly not to an extent to demand that it should be immediately forced out upon people who probably do not desire to receive it for interest on the public debt. No doubt silver certificates have been paid in large quantities, and are paid daily, but, as I showed yesterday, those silver certificates are treated by the Government of the United States as the equivalent of gold coin and are received now every day. It is said that some 30, 40, or 50 per cent. of our revenues is now collected in silver certificates, and they are received without discrimination and paid out in the ordinary course of business, not only in the payment of all public debts, but for all other purposes. The weighty silver dollar is not brought in, but the representative of the silver dollar, maintained by the Government of the United States at par with gold, is received and paid out without discrimination.

There is no law upon the statute-book (and I defy the Senator to show it to me) which requires that these silver dollars should be paid out in discrimination as against gold dollars, because the law treats the two as precise equivalents, and they are to be held in the Treasury as security for the payment of the interest on the public debt. But there is no law, there never has been a law, and Congress would not enact such a law, to require that the silver dollars should be paid out in discrimination as against the gold dollars. No such law exists; no such law has existed. The Treasury of the United States, in the ordinary discharge of its duty of paying the public creditor and paying all the demands made upon the Government, has usually given to the creditor that kind of money which he prefers, not as a matter of legal right, but as a matter of convenience—the same thing that is done by every bank in the country and by almost every person dealing with others. The Treasury pays the creditor that kind of money, all kinds being equal in the eye of the law, which he prefers. That is the general rule.

The large mass, probably the great body, of the interest on the public debt is not paid with money at all; it is paid through the clearing-house in New York, where the coupons of the Government come in the nature of demands against the Government and are there exchanged by the mode adopted by the New York Clearing-House. That is the ordinary mode of payment. The payment over the counter of gold or silver coin to any considerable extent is not adopted in the ordinary transactions of public business. Since the order adopted by the Treasury Department in December, 1878, when, by a construction which my friend from Kentucky so often criticised, I held that the United States notes, after specie payments had been resumed, must be considered as the equivalent of gold coin, nearly all the business of paying the interest and principal of the public debt has been carried on in United States notes; but if anybody desired gold coin it was given to him; and no discrimination in effect or in law has ever been made whatever between the different classes of legal-tender currency of the United States.

Payment is usually made either through the clearing-house or by the use of United States notes; and now all the revenues of the Government of the United States substantially are so paid. Gold may be paid here and there; silver may be paid here and there in small sums; but the great body of these transactions is conducted just like the transactions of private citizens, by the payment of United States notes and silver certificates, and there has been no discrimination by any officer of this Government between silver certificates and the silver dollar, and the gold dollar and the gold certificates, but all are received in the ordinary course of business on exactly the same footing.

There are but comparatively few silver dollars in circulation, only $41,000,000 all told, scattered all over the United States—less than one silver dollar to an individual inhabitant; and there are very few of them in New York. Inconvenient in bulk and size, as a matter of course they would not be brought to the Treasury of the United States in payment of customs duties or any other duties except for a very small matter. No doubt ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, or sixty millions may in a period of years have been brought into the Treasury and been paid out; but usually they have been brought in the form of certificates, and not in the form of actual coin.

So the statement made by the Senator yesterday that the executive officers of this Government had discriminated in any way whatever against the silver dollar is not proven. It is not true in my judgment, for I know of no such discrimination there during the time when I held the office of Secretary, or by any of my successors or predecessors. Before the coinage of the silver dollar under the new law there was no silver to be tendered to the Government, and none could be.

Now, the Senator speaks of some of the officers of the Government with great contempt. He speaks of the Comptroller of the Currency—an officer of very high rank, who performs independent duties, who holds his office under a special tenure, who has been placed beyond, you may say, the ordinary pale of political warfare—with great contempt, and says he was a clerk, and was years ago in some of the Departments. Mr. Cannon was never a clerk in any Department of this Government. He is a man of the highest standing and character known in official circles, who was brought here from a distant city at the request of and upon the recommendation of his predecessor, never having been employed as a clerk by the Government. And because he comes here and in man fashion speaks his sentiments in regard to a matter of public importance he is to be sneered at as a man who was once a clerk, now lecturing Congress! Why, sir, he is bound to speak his opinions freely and fully, and he has done it frankly, and he is a man not to be hooted down in this way.

There is one other remark I wish to make. The Senator highly commends Mr. Burchard, and I underwrite all he says in regard to Mr. Burchard, who is a faithful, industrious, competent officer, long a member of the other House, who discharges his duties as Director of the Mint with singular fidelity. But Mr. Burchard, in the very report to which the Senator refers and which he commends so highly, recommends precisely what I recommended yesterday; that is, the stoppage of the coinage of the silver dollar. In the identical report which the Senator read, differing in toto from the views taken by the Senator from Kentucky, he says the time has arrived when the coinage of that dollar ought to be suspended in order to renew our negotiations with foreign powers.

So, then, Mr. Burchard, quoted by the Senator, is now bearing testimony against his ideas, and agrees with me entirely in the view I take of this question, although he probably would not go as far as I in the coinage of a new silver dollar, but he is in favor of the suspension of the present coinage.

There has been so much fog, so much demagogism thrown around this silver question that it is almost difficult to argue about it seriously. The question is whether the United States of America can stop the march of time, can stop the depreciation of silver, can turn the dial backward, and make two things that are unequal to each other the equals of each other. We can not do it. The only point is whether we shall still go on and go on coining this dollar to be piled up in our Treasury as idle money, or whether we shall suspend it for awhile with a view to talk with other nations who are interested in the question, or whether, failing an agreement, we would not confess what we can not prevent, that silver has depreciated, and coin it at the same rate that we buy it of our miners. That is the question, and no amount of demagogism, no amount of fume or bluster can prevent the sober inquiry being put to the people of the United States as to whether they will continue the process which has been going on of hoarding the silver dollar or whether they will in a statesmanlike way meet the question broadly, and coin a silver dollar upon the basis of its purchase from the miner. That is the question; and I know and acknowledge that within a few months a new administration will come into power, and I commend to that administration the settlement of this question. If what is said in the reports in the newspapers be true—and I can only speak in a general way, without any other knowledge—if my honorable friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is to assume the duties of chief financial officer of the Government, let him solve the question. If he can see a better way out of it than this, I shall follow him with great pleasure. It is for him to say whether or not this policy shall be changed, or for any other person who may be called upon to discharge the duties of that high office. I do not anticipate that our Democratic friends will find any less difficulty in solving the question than we have done, and I venture the prediction that whoever may be the chief financial officer of the next administration will be compelled to meet this question as we have, and I believe he will be able to solve it as we would solve it if we had the control of the future before us.

This is all the answer I desire to make to the Senator from Kentucky, except again to repeat that there is no law which requires the payment of silver coin in discharge of customs duties, but only that all customs duties shall be held, or a sufficient part thereof, to pay the interest on the public debt as it matures, and that no discrimination has been made so far as I know by any executive officer against the silver dollar.

Mr. BECK. One word——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERMAN. I promised to allow the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HILL] to ask a question.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. If I have the floor I desire to say a word now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not yielded yet.

Mr. BECK. I was recognized.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Ohio as yielding the floor, and recognized the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had promised to yield to the Senator from Colorado for a question.

Mr. HILL. I should like to ask my question now, before the Senator from Ohio takes his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hopes the Senator from Kentucky will yield temporarily.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection, except that I want the question of fact settled. The Senator said he had yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BECK. That is all I want.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair could not say that the Senator from Ohio had yielded; the Chair could only say that he understood the Senator from Ohio had yielded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was through, but I had promised the Senator from Colorado to answer his question. I simply wish to do what I can toward his being allowed to put it.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator from Kentucky will yield to me for a moment I will put my question. I understood the Senator from Ohio to say that there had never been any discrimination made by any officer of the Treasury Department in regard to disbursements of gold and silver. I wanted to ask him whether the Treasury Department has not steadily refused since the passage of the silver coinage act to pay out any silver or silver certificates in settling its balances in the New York Clearing-House. Is it not true that nearly all the disbursements of the Government are made through the New York Clearing-House? And is it not true that the Treasury Department has never used one dollar in silver or silver certificates in making those payments?

Mr. SHERMAN. That may be so; I do not know; but I say that is not a discrimination against silver.

Mr. HILL. There is constant complaint of the accumulation of silver in the Treasury and that gold is drawn out. I made the assertion yesterday that in a very few weeks the Secretary of the Treasury could free the Treasury of every dollar of silver owned by the Government that is now hoarded (as the Senator from Ohio calls it) in the Treasury if he would pay the clearing-house balances even in part in silver or silver certificates, but he has steadily and constantly refused to do that, and that is the point which I made in my remarks yesterday.

Mr. SHERMAN. My answer to that is that no doubt the Secretary of the Treasury might, if he chose, make a discrimination in favor of the silver dollar and actually refuse to pay gold at all and pay all in silver, and thus precipitate a question which no man in this country desires to have made, that of a single silver standard, but no law has been violated and no discrimination has been made.

As to the contract between the United States and the clearing-house that was communicated to Congress, the terms of that agreement were fully known and have been acquiesced in now for six years. That arrangement was made in the fall of 1878. So far as I know no hostile movement of Congress has been made to change or alter that arrangement.

Mr. HILL. But we distinctly provided in the act of 1882 that no national bank should be a member of a clearing-house which refused to receive silver certificates in payment of balances. Here is what the Treasurer of the United States says himself on that subject:

As a consequence of the inability of the Treasury—

How was that inability created? There is no law for it—

As a consequence of the inability of the Treasury under the existing practice to use either the silver dollars or the silver certificates in its settlements with the New York Clearing-House, where by far the greater part of its disbursements is made, the available gold ran down from $155,429,600 on January 1, 1884, to $116,479,979 on August 12, 1884, while the silver dollars and bullion on hand, not represented by silver certificates outstanding, increased during the same period from $27,266,037 to $48,603,958.

Was not that entirely the fault of officers of the Treasury Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. The drain made upon gold was for exportation, and it will be made upon gold only for exportation.

Mr. HILL. The Treasurer said it was on account of the inability of the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York to pay silver or silver certificates in the settlement of its clearing-house balances. It had nothing at all to do with exportation, as I understand.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, a word or two. Let us get back to the original proposition. The Senator from Ohio is dissatisfied with the existing condition of things. He desires to change the silver dollar now existing of 412½ grains to one containing 480 grains, or somewhere about that. I oppose it, especially in the closing hours of a hostile administration and with a rapidly contracting national-bank currency.

I have endeavored to show, and think I have shown conclusively, that all the obligations of the United States are payable in coin of the standard value of 412½ grains silver to the dollar; that we have no obligations payable only in gold coin, and that we are under no obligation to pay any creditor a dollar which contains more grains in it than 412½. That is the bond; the terms are written upon the face of it; it was accepted by the creditors; indeed it was placed there at their request, as was understood at the time, for the very purpose of preventing us from making our coin contain any less quantity of metal; that being the case, I object to the Senator's proposition to add to the burden of the debt of this people by changing the contract and making a dollar for the creditors' benefit containing fifty, sixty, or seventy more grains than their contract calls for.

I again assert that the law of 1862 requires all the coin received for customs to be applied, first to the payment of interest on the bonds, and second to the purchase of 1 per cent. yearly of the entire debt of the United States for a sinking fund. It is not only for interest but for the sinking fund, which has year after year been provided for, that we had agreed to pay in coin from customs; and yet no dollar of silver coin received at the custom-house has ever been paid out as interest on the public debt or used to redeem a single outstanding bond for the sinking fund.

The Senator says I referred to his report made in December, 1878, which was only nine months after the silver coinage was restored, and that only $14,000,000 of it had then been coined, yet $11,000,000 of that had gone through the custom-house, and he thinks that is a very small matter. He may so regard it, but from that day to this, with all the coinage of silver and all the payments that have been made, the same system has been kept up that he inaugurated and avowed he would pursue, to give to the bondholders gold because they wanted it, and then to lock up the silver in the Treasury and raise a clamor because it was there, demand more vaults to keep it in, and denounce it as a repudiated and degraded coin, although it was the coin of the contracts of 1862 and 1870, a coin with which the people contracted to pay all outstanding obligations. It was a little thing then compared to what it is now; but the principle was just as bad then as it is now, and it has been maintained all the time, as the Senator from Colorado has shown in the remarks he made a few minutes ago.

The Senator from Ohio said, and said truly, that greenbacks became as good as gold the moment they were received at the custom-house, and they would have been as good as gold three years before they were if he had received them at the custom-house instead of clamoring for the right to sell, as we allowed him to do, ninety or ninety-five millions of bonds of the United States and lay the gold into the Treasury under pretense that it was needed to be kept there to guard these very greenbacks. The moment they were taken at the custom-house in violation of law (and he refused to let us make legal the illegal act by making it lawful to receive them at the custom-house) they were equal to gold. He left the law of 1862 to stand, saying that nothing but coin should be received, and yet by executive order he received greenbacks, and still votes against every proposition to make greenbacks receivable by law.

The moment he did so receive them, as I said, they were as good as gold, though they were at a heavy discount till they were received at the custom-houses, and he asserts now that the silver certificates are as good as gold and that they are receivable everywhere as gold or silver coin, and are preferred to either. Then since not a silver certificate can issue that is not supported by a silver dollar laid in the Treasury, why stop coining these silver dollars that are deposited in the Treasury, which alone support the silver certificates which he says are as good as gold and more convenient and more sought after, and are even bought with gold when they can not be otherwise had? The representative of the silver dollar is our best currency; its existence depends on the coin he seeks to destroy. The very moment he stops the coinage of the silver dollar he stops the issue of these certificates, because when you withdraw the silver dollar not another certificate can be issued.

He knows, because the Secretary of the Treasury reports it, the Comptroller reports it, and we all know it, that the national banks contracted their currency last year twenty-four and a half millions; and the Comptroller tells us that they will this year, and every other year, reduce it at an average of $40,000,000 a year. We know that if the law remains as it is in relation to national banks they will sell their bonds and withdraw their circulation from the people and their business. When you stop the coinage of the silver dollar and stop the issue of the silver certificates, and the national banks, as they have a perfect right to do, withdraw their circulation, because they will not pay the price that is demanded for other bonds, where is your circulation to come from? What obligation is there upon a national banker to issue circulation unless he can make a profit by it?

We have only, as I said yesterday, $194,000,000 of debt that we can pay before 1891 and only $250,000,000 then till 1907. We are paying off the national debt at the rate of $100,000,000 a year by our present system of taxation. Every dollar of that $194,000,000 will be paid in two years from this date unless we reduce taxation, which the Senator will not do, nor the gentlemen on his side of the Chamber. One hundred and fifty-five million dollars of that $194,000,000, which is subject to call to-day, is held by national banks to secure $136,000,000 of circulation now outstanding. The very moment we absorb this $194,000,000, as we shall in two years, we can not afford to lock up $100,000,000 of surplus revenue in the Treasury. That would be the most violent contraction imaginable; that process would soon bankrupt this country.

What then have we to do? We can not require men who hold bonds not due till 1891 or 1907 to sell them to us except at such premium as they see fit to ask. The fours of 1907 are worth 22 per cent. premium to-day. The moment the United States is compelled to buy bonds in order to get the surplus revenue lying in the Treasury again in circulation they can demand 44 per cent., and we must pay it or break the country. Every national banker will sell every bond he holds when the premium reaches 30 per cent., and it may reach 40 or 50, for we have to give whatever the holders ask. The banks will sell every bond they have not needed for organization, and only $80,000,000 is needed for that purpose, and take in the circulation now outstanding, leaving us nothing but what few greenbacks we have outstanding and the silver certificates, for the gold certificates are issued in amounts of $5,000, $10,000, and I believe some of them $20,000 each, and are not currency in any sense, and the gold coin is locked up and out of circulation, as everybody knows.

Now, if we withdraw the silver dollar from coinage, stop the issuing of the silver certificates, let the national banks sell their bonds at the premium they will get under our pressing necessities, and curtail their currency, where are we? That danger is upon us in the near future, it is upon us to-day, and it is, in my judgment, absurd now even to talk of stopping the power to issue silver certificates upon the basis of silver coin when contraction is going on by the banks in the way it is doing, and with the assurance that it will continue to get worse, until they will refuse to buy bonds at all unless we change existing laws. Do you think a national banker looks to the good of the country in keeping out his circulation? Did the interests of this country require the banks to withdraw twenty-four and one-half million dollars last year? Does the business of this country require them to withdraw the $40,000,000 which the Comptroller of the Currency assures us will be withdrawn this year and every other year hereafter? Why is it done? Because it is more profitable for them to sell the bonds they have at the premium they can get for them, especially when the United States is forced to purchase them, than it is to take circulation upon the bonds.

These thriving gentlemen have no other interest except to make the most money they can for their stockholders. And is our Government to be at the mercy of a body of men of that sort or of any body of men? Is there a man on this floor who, if he were president of a national bank and could make 10 per cent. more by selling the bonds than he could by depositing them and taking circulation, would not feel bound to sell the bonds in the interest of his stockholders and would he not do it? The Senator from Ohio would do it, no matter what became of the currency of the country. And that is the condition toward which we are rapidly drifting now.

What I desire to do is this: Just as the greenbacks were as good as gold the moment they were received, even in violation of express law, at the custom-house, the silver dollar will become as good as gold the moment it has all the uses that gold has. The moment that the administration of this country, the executive branch and the Congress of the United States, will give it a helping hand instead of treating it as a step-child, will pay it out for interest, will pay the bonds with it, will use it to comply with existing contracts, every man who receives that silver dollar will be interested in keeping it in circulation, interested in keeping it as good as gold. Foreign nations will then unite with us in making it good, and we shall not be dependent upon England, and England alone, who of all the countries desires gold and only gold, as we have been and will continue to be under the policy sought to be pursued.

I did reflect on the action of the Comptroller of the Currency and I may have been mistaken in saying he was a clerk. I do not care whether he was a clerk or as great a man as the Senator from Ohio, and that is pretty near exhausting comparisons; but I deny the right of any Comptroller to speak thus of any act of Congress:

> The law which stamps 412½ grains of silver, and arbitrarily insists upon its circulation as a dollar with unlimited legal-tender qualities, when its true value as indicated by the market price of silver is but 85.2 cents, is unworthy of this nation.

I deny that any Comptroller has a right to throw into the face of Congress an insult of that kind and tell us that our act is unworthy of this country. I said it was impudence. I repeat it, and I would apply that term to any other subordinate official who would be guilty of such impudence. It was none of his business to talk about it. Even when the coinage bill went before the House of Representatives—and I see my friend from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] sitting before me—so well satisfied was that great branch of the Government that it did not belong to banking and currency that they sent the whole matter to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Our coinage does not come under the Comptroller's jurisdiction, does not come under banking and currency jurisdiction; it did not come under anything the Comptroller has anything to do with or anything to say about, and I say it was impertinent in him to tell this Congress that anything we do is unworthy of this country, especially in a matter that he has no concern with and no right to advise us about.

Why, sir, if you turn to page 19 of the report of the Director of the Mint, you will find that we have $123,000,000 of silver certificates now out, $123,000,000 corresponding with that amount of silver coin lying in the Treasury of the United States. We have $120,000,000 of gold certificates, and $120,000,000 of gold coin, an equal amount, lying in the Treasury of the United States. Why not complain that your gold lies there to secure the gold certificates as well as complain that you have to build vaults for silver to protect the silver certificates? They are the security for the more convenient money.

I do not propose to discriminate against gold in favor of silver; there is no danger of that; but I deny the right of anybody as has been done and can not be denied that under a law which required every dollar to be used either to pay the interest on the debt or to go to the sinking fund of 1 per cent. requiring $50,000,000 more to be paid in the very coin that was received for customs of which there have been millions and millions of dollars in silver and silver certificates paid, and not one dollar in silver has been paid either to the extinguishment of the interest on the sinking fund or the redemption of the national debt.

I debated the question of the clearing house at the time it was up, and the action of the Senator from Ohio and his friends in regard to that. I have that debate before me. I do not believe I shall take time to refer to it. I will ask the reporter to take the amount of gold and silver in the different countries as I have noted it down here. I called out in a general way, but here it is a little more in detail than I stated. It shows how easy it is when a people are trying in good faith to keep up silver as other nations are doing to a much larger extent than we are, with coinage laws in proportion and far larger in proportion than ours; but I will hand it to him after awhile.

As I know the Dakota bill is up and this question will be before us again, I do not care to go into it any further at present.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert in lieu:

"That all persons residing within the limits of the Territory of Dakota qualified by the laws of said Territory of Dakota to vote for representatives to the Legislative Assembly thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention; and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as by the laws of said Territory persons are required to possess to be eligible to the Legislative Assembly thereof; and the aforesaid delegates to form said convention shall be apportioned among the several counties within the limits of the Territory, in districts established by law, in proportion to the population in each of said districts, as near as may be, to be ascertained at the time of making said apportionment, by the persons hereinafter authorized to make the same, from the best information attainable; that said apportionment shall be made by the governor, the chief-justice, the associate justice for the first judicial district, the associate justice for the fourth judicial district, and the surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota, or any three of them; and the governor shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid to be held on the 4th day of June, 1885, which proclamation shall be issued at least sixty days prior to the time of said election; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificate to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of the said Territory regulating elections therein for Delegate to Congress. The number of delegates to said convention shall be one hundred and twenty; and all persons resident in said proposed State who are qualified voters of said Territory, under the laws thereof, at such time as the constitution to be framed shall be submitted to the people for ratification or rejection, shall be entitled to vote upon the question of such ratification or rejection, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe.

"SEC. 2. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the city of Yankton on the second Tuesday of August, 1885, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution for said proposed State.

"SEC. 3. That in case a constitution shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, said convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said Territory for their ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at such time and places and under such regulations as may be prescribed by said convention, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of the Territory, who, with the governor and chief-justice, or any two of them, shall canvass the same; and, if a majority of the legal votes cast shall be for said constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a copy of said declaration, constitution, and ordinances; whereupon it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, if said declaration, constitution, and ordinances shall conform to the requirements of this act, to lay the same before Congress.

"SEC. 4. That at the election at which the question of adopting the constitution is voted on there shall be submitted also, by ordinance of such convention, the question of the division of such Territory on boundary lines to be fixed by such ordinance; and the qualified voters of the Territory of Dakota shall vote directly for or against the division of such Territory; and the vote on such question of division shall be cast, canvassed, and ascertained and certified in the same manner and under the same rules and regulations as the vote on the adoption of the constitution is required to be by section 2 of this act.

"SEC. 5. That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for defraying the expenses of the said convention and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial Legislature: Provided, That any money hereby appropriated not necessary for such purpose shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the attitude in which this question is now presented before the Senate is one that to my mind is very interesting and impressive. In looking over the condition of the Territories of the United States that are hereafter to be admitted as States, and which I desire shall come in as rapidly as will suit the convenience of this great body of people, I find that it is necessary that we should make some change in the method of our action hereafter. The Territories of the United States at this time unfortunately are not in the condition that the former Territories were at the time of the admission of some of the older States of the new class. We must deal, of course, with each one of these Territories just as we deal with every other, all alike. When we are preparing to admit States into the American Union on terms of equality with the original thirteen, we should treat the Territories, as we provide them with State governments or the means of establishing State governments, with perfect equality.

We can not safely or justly discriminate between them as to the manner or conditions of their admission.

But certain questions have arisen in some of the Territories of the United States which make it no longer advisable or practicable that we should pursue the plan that we have heretofore pursued, and which is the plan provided for in the bill reported by the committee. That plan is to permit the Territories to adopt their constitutions and to be admitted into the Union as States by proclamation of the President after having passed an ordinance to accept the Constitution of the United States and after having embodied in their constitution certain fundamental features which are mentioned in this bill.

Now, sir, I will ask the question whether there is a Senator on this floor who would be willing to pass a law precisely in the terms in which this bill is couched for the admission of Utah into this Union as a State? If you were to strike out the name of this State and of this Territory where it occurs in this bill and insert "Utah," there is not one Senator, I think, on this floor who would vote for the bill in its present form. Yet Utah, so far as population is concerned, so far as commercial facilities are concerned, and the development of a valuable agricultural and a large mining interest, which are of value to the country, is quite as far advanced as Dakota. I may even call it an older and a more mature civilization. But into the Territory of Utah has crept a poison which we have been unable so far to eliminate and scarcely to modify.

During the nursing period of that Territory its early career has been so marred with a social question involving a criminal condition as that the whole country has been shocked with it, and the Congress of the United States has been engaged laboriously and in the most strenuous exercise of its highest powers for the purpose of stamping out that evil. So far we have only succeeded in giving to the people of Utah Territory certain legislative power and certain autonomy as a Territory which have aided in propagating a great crime. We have enabled them by the use of these powers to throw a shield of protection around the criminal condition which this Federal Government has been unable to modify even, and that Territory is to-day in such a condition as that we could not afford to vote for its admission into the Union, after it had adopted every provision contained in the Dakota bill, by a mere proclamation of the Executive. We would, in the case of that Territory, require its constitution and ordinances to be submitted to Congress for careful scrutiny before any Senator here would consent to its admission into the Union as a State.

Now, with the condition of Utah, and also of Idaho and of Montana, which have to some considerable extent absorbed the evil condition that has so poisoned up the community in Utah, we have to deal in the future. The time is approaching, it will probably soon arrive, when we have got to say to the Territories in which there is this open, public evil—for it is not a lurking and a hiding one—that we will adopt a different rule in respect of your admission from that which we have applied to the Territory of Dakota.

I maintain that no State ought hereafter to be admitted into the American Union until it has first adopted its constitution and that constitution has been laid before the Congress of the United States; and I maintain that as well in view of the evil to which I have adverted in the Territory of Utah and in other Territories as in view of a wise and sound public policy.

There is a provision in the Constitution of the United States that the Congress of the United States will guarantee to every State a republican form of government. The precise nature of that guarantee, perhaps, has never yet been tested by any actual event which required that the Congress should take action in a specific direction for the protection of the republican form of government of a State. We are prepared now to say, the country is prepared to say, that if the institutions of religion, or what is sacrilegiously called religion, that prevail in the Territory of Utah were placed in its constitution and under the protection of constitutional ordinances as a religion entitled to the shield and protection of the Constitution of the United States, we would not regard that State as presenting a republican form of government in the sense in which we understand that word as applicable to this great sisterhood of States.

Now, how are we to conduct ourselves, how are we to act in the future in order to give to these State governments the guarantee of the republican form to which I have just been alluding? And what other questions may arise in the Territories hereafter to be admitted growing out of the peculiarities of the societies which may dwell in them and have political control there which will also make it necessary for the Congress of the United States, either before the State is admitted or after it is admitted, to come to a declaration whether or not a constitution is republican in form according to the acknowledged meaning of that phrase in the Constitution of the United States?

At what time are we to give to these States the guarantee that they shall have a republican form of government? Is it before they are admitted, at the time of their admission, or afterward? It occurs to me that if there is any potency whatever in that guarantee in favor of the States of the American Union it should be applied at the time of their admission, because after they are admitted into the Union they reserve to themselves the right to change their constitutions according to their own will. I do not know how we would get rid of any State in the American Union if they should by a constitutional convention held in accordance with their own written constitutions hereafter ordain some feature that the Congress of the United States might consider a violation of that guarantee. I do not know how we should got about applying this guarantee of the Constitution to a State that is already in full possession of the power to ordain and to amend its own constitution. I can scarcely conceive of a case in which the Congress of the United States could by legislation exercise its power to reform a State constitution or by the use of the military or judicial power compel that State to reform itself so as to become within the understanding of Congress a State republican in its form of government.

Then at what time shall we apply this guarantee? When does it become our duty to look critically into this subject and to ascertain the organic basis upon which the State is to be admitted into the Union as being a republican form of government? I maintain that it must be done by Congress at the time that the proposed constitution is pronounced upon and at the time that the act is passed through these bodies admitting her as a State in the Union. That furnishes, according to my understanding of it, the only opportunity when the Congress of the United States can legislate upon a question of this kind with the slightest degree of force and efficiency.

If that position be a correct one, is not this bill wrong when it declares that a constitutional convention in the Territory of Dakota shall adopt a constitution suited to the thoughts and wishes of that body, and that after it has been ascertained that it contains an admission of the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States and contains the other features that are carefully put into this bill, then it shall be admitted into the Union by the proclamation of the President?

This reservation of power on the part of the Congress of the United States to consider the constitution of a proposed State, after it has been formed, must be a matter of immense consequence to this country under certain conditions. I have cited one dangerous fact in the history of one of the Territories of this country which should put the Senate on its guard in respect of its future line of action in reference to the admission of States into the Union. Let the Territories prepare their constitutions and bring them here; let us discuss the constitutions after they have come here; and if the thirty-eight sister States of the Union are not prepared to admit the State of Dakota with a constitution that she chooses to form, let us reserve to ourselves the opportunity thus to declare in advance of her admission, and not wait until after she has been admitted and thereby lose all power to control her action thereafter.

Mr. President, there is no occasion for being in haste about this business. The admission of States into this great sisterhood is a question of the most serious importance. It finds its first realization in the Senate of the United States. Here it has an effect in the disturbance of balances of power between the older States and the newer ones which is not felt so sensibly in any other branch of the Government. Here are the older thirteen States of the American Union and their younger daughters who now possess a wealth and a population equivalent to about ten times that of any average area in the western parts of the United States all on an equal scale of power. Here is a guarantee in the Constitution of the United States that is felt nowhere else as it is in the Senate, that no State shall be required to give up her representation in the Senate of the United States except by her own consent. No majority power in the Senate can disturb this guarantee of the perfect equality of representation.

I have noticed some allusion made in the newspapers to the falling away of the population in the new State of Nevada. Sharp reference is being made in various directions to the fact that she voted but little over 12,000 votes in the last Presidential election. Queries have been put out in respect of the methods by which a State may be dwarfed out of the Union, or expelled from it, or absorbed by some Congressional or other action. Amendments of the Constitution have been suggested in reference to the falling away of the power of that State. Now, sir, what does all this mean? It means that the rest of the people of the United States find that a population perhaps not exceeding 60,000 in the State of Nevada has as much power on the floor of the Senate as the empire State of New York.

But that power, unequal as it may be, is here to remain. That State is as safe as New York in the full weight of its representation.

When we come to distribute the political power, as we must do in admitting new States, in this country we have no right to do it in an unjust or profligate way. We have no right to do it for the purpose of advancing mere party or political considerations. We must not disregard the growth and power of this country in its older establishments and its older settlements, and disarrange that influence which they have gained legitimately and by a natural growth in the Senate of the United States by interjecting men with equal power here who represent mere pocket boroughs. The evil is one of startling consequences when we come to look at its effect upon the floor of the Senate. How often does it happen when the Senate is narrowly divided upon the very gravest question that may affect the interests of 20,000,000 people along the Atlantic coast that we find men representing 60,000 people or 200,000 people upon the floor of this body wielding as much power as that which at least 5,000,000 of the people in the older States and settlements enjoy.

Are we to go along in this hot haste merely for the purpose of building up new States or of gratifying a desire to have a certain political predominance in the Senate of the United States, and neglect the influence that these great questions may have upon the most material interests of the whole mass of the people of this country?

Sir, the Senate can afford to pause before she admits two additional members on this floor under any circumstances. The Senate can afford to wait until every incumbrance is cleared out of the path, until the whole subject has been balanced up and considered with reference to all the great interests of this country. I maintain that it is a dangerous evil to introduce with too great rapidity Senators upon this floor to take equal part and enjoy equal power with those who represent the older and the greater States of the American Union.

More than that, there is something in the physical geography of this country that has convinced me thoroughly that the arrangement of the Territories as originally provided by acts of Congress has been eminently wise. When we look to the West, over the vast area of territory included within the borders of the different Territorial organizations, we are sometimes led to exclaim, "These are too large; there is too much land included in these areas;" but the wisdom which caused those areas to be incorporated under Territorial governments, with distinctly marked boundaries and with all the vast area of land, is not to be sneered at or forgotten. I believe now, looking back over the history of these questions, that every Territorial government in the United States has been arranged considerately and diligently with respect to its future capacity to maintain population and with respect to the conditions under which that population is to exist and to thrive. Who that has traveled over the vast expanse of prairies lying at the foot of the Rocky Mountains has not seen that, while there are small areas of agricultural lands out there and large areas of mineral lands, the broad plains which lie at the foot of those mountains, stretched from the Gulf of Mexico to the Canada line, must necessarily and naturally fall under the dominion of State governments, ultimately, which incorporate together three great elements of prosperity, agriculture being the final reliance of these States for population, and mining and pastoral lands a source of growth in riches. These peculiar areas are bound by natural relations into the vast groups which demand a common government.

The Territory of Dakota has been represented here as being so entirely even, throughout its limits, in respect of its producing capacity as that it will hereafter accommodate as dense a population as any State in the American Union. I beg leave to differ with Senators who entertain that view. There are two conditions connected with it without which no country can sustain a very heavy population, and those are water and forests. The magnificent State of California has perhaps as large an area of valuable agricultural lands according to its immense territory as any other State in the Union, but it must nevertheless await centuries before it is developed into an agricultural country that can maintain a population equal to that per square mile which the State of Alabama can maintain to-day. They have not got the water, they have not got the springs, the running brooks, the gently broken areas of vast, magnificent forests that the people in the State of Alabama possess. It is an impossibility to sustain a population per square mile upon the territory of California equal to that which Alabama is capable of sustaining; and so of all the other Atlantic and Gulf States.

When the State of California was laid off it did not occur to any one that that State would be too much of an empire in respect of its population, and that therefore it must be divided. Why not? It has about seven hundred miles of seacoast, and its depth, I think, would average perhaps four hundred miles. Why did it not occur to some of the eminent men who preceded us in this body, when that State was to be admitted into the Union, that it should be divided up into two States or more? Because they saw, as we now realize, that it would be a great number of years before the State of California could sustain a population as dense as that of some of the older States on the Atlantic and Gulf slopes.

These facts have not been altered by experience; they have only been established. When the State of Texas was admitted into the Union a provision was put into the act of admission which was more the result of sectional zeal than of any wise precaution, that she might be divided into five States; yet Texas has not been divided, and the great-grandchildren of the youngest man in the Senate will not live to see the question seriously debated in Texas of dividing it. Why so? It is because Texas, like these other States, has only an equivalent proportion of pastoral lands compared with her agricultural lands and her forest lands. Out in the staked plains, out in the west along the borders of the Rio Grande and up in the north, as far east, I suppose, as Dallas, it may be said of Texas that it is one vast pasture, a merely pastoral region. Would you take that State and divide it?

Mr. COKE. I will state to the Senator that the pastoral portion of Texas is two hundred miles west of Dallas.

Mr. MORGAN. It is two hundred miles west. I was not careful in my geography. Would you take the State of Texas to-day, if you had the power and desired to promote the welfare of her people, and divide it into two States even by a north and south line, one on the east and one on the west? If you should you would have a very rich State on the east and a very poor one on the west. Would you divide it by an east and west line? You would scarcely benefit it in any degree. Although I have had some anxiety as a Southern man to see the power of my section (if we are to have sections here) increased in the Senate of the United States, I would not go to my brethren from Texas and ask them that they would divide their State into four or five great commonwealths, the reason being that the State of Texas, with its enormous area, has the duty devolved upon it of maintaining a vast outlying pasture ground along the Rio Grande by the agricultural power which she possesses farther east. I would not ask Texas to sacrifice the natural and mutual dependence and advantage in the Union of her agricultural fields and her pasture grounds even for the sake of the power it would give her people in the Senate of the United States.

So it is in Dakota. The eastern and the northern parts of Dakota we are informed are excellent for agriculture of certain kinds; a great wheat-growing country. How is it about the west, in the Black Hills, and in the vast grazing grounds out toward the Black Hills? If you were to cut off the Black Hills region and incorporate that into an American State (and it is as large perhaps as New England or nearly so) you would have a State there that would have nothing to depend upon except its mining resources and its cattle pastures.

Let the State of Dakota carry its burden of pasture grounds and its burden of mineral lands, and let its civilization and its power as a great civilized State be used from this time forward for the benefit of its pasture grounds and its mineral grounds as well as for the benefit of its agricultural grounds.

What will you do with Montana when it comes here with an application for admission; what with Idaho or Washington Territory? Will you split them up? What would become of us if we had split up Nevada and made two States there instead of one, that is perishing now for want of population?

Sir, it is unjust to the rest of the Union, and unjust to the people of that Territory, when we disregard the lines upon which these Territorial governments have been framed? It is a question that will come back to us with a visitation that we are not expecting now if we hurriedly move in the direction of admitting these States, cutting them up into small parcels for the purpose of bringing them into the American Union. We will live to regret it. Even men in the Senate will live to regret it, as many people in this country are to-day living to regret the haste with which Nevada was admitted into the American Union as a State. How much power would that country have to-day under a Territorial government? What advantage is her Statehood to her? What does it draw to her in the way of population and wealth? While I admire both the gentlemen who are Senators upon this floor, and have the best of relations with them, and the Senate of the United States admires them, there is not a Senator here from one of the older States who does not feel that the power which is voted against him in the Senate of the United States upon great emergencies from the State of Nevada is a power that is not fairly and justly distributed between the people of this country. Here, I repeat, is where it finds its great expression, here on the floor of the Senate, and we ought to hesitate long before we increase the representation of new and scattered communities in this body equal to those of the older States. We ought at least to hesitate until we see the constitutions that they are prepared to submit to us, and understand how they have composed the disputes and contentions that have been agitating them.

As to the question of division, we are informed by members of the committee who have looked narrowly into the question that there are subjects of confusion and controversy in the Territory relating to the distribution of the public debt and as to the precise boundary of division that may be adopted to sever the Territory into two bodies by an east and west line. We are informed of wrangles and contentions that have been going on in that Territory for some time. While I do not wish to make any expression of an invidious character toward the Territory of Dakota, I have known and every Senator upon committees that I have served upon has had occasion to know, the deep bitterness of feeling that exists in some localities between the people of that Territory, not simply of a political but of a personal character, much of which relates to this very question of the location of the state-house and various matters of that sort. A great deal has been said about their harmony, but I am not prepared to believe to-day that the people of the entire Territory of Dakota are one mass of brethren, living in harmony and unity and peace together without any disturbance between them. They do not come before the Senate of the United States, according to my observation, in that innocent and childlike character.

I would not vote against the admission of Dakota or any State because it might be Republican. I would not cast such a vote as that. The people who are Republican in the United States Territories have as much right to admission into the Union as those who are Democratic, and so it is on the other hand. It is not the part of statesmanship to consult a question of that kind in casting a vote upon a measure as momentous and important as this. But when I come to the point as to whether a Territory should be divided in twain, and made two States instead of one, I would, at least, submit that question to those people before I decided upon the admission of either part of that country into the United States as a State.

We are taking upon ourselves too much authority in this bill, if we propose to consult what we term popular sovereignty or popular suffrage in respect of the internal affairs of Dakota. We are shaping matters here to suit ourselves in respect of the division of the Territory, without consulting the people of Dakota. We propose, first, to settle the question of division, and then, after we have done that, to admit one of the parts as a State, in the event that one-half of the Territory will adopt a constitution with certain prescribed features in it. Here is a man who lives on the Missouri River; he has property in the northern part of the Territory of Dakota, and that thing occurs continually. You ask the man in the southern part of the Territory to vote upon the division of the State, the division of the public debt, the division of the taxes, the relegation of a part of his property, or it may be a part of his family, into a Territorial form of government while the other part is admitted as a State. That man has a right to say what he thinks about this, if he has any rights at all. We ought by means of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas, first, to take the opinion of those people upon the question of division, to take their opinions and their sentiments upon the question of the constitution, just as we would require the people of Utah to submit their opinions and their sentiments before we admitted them into the Union, and then, after they have brought up their constitution and submitted it to us and have displayed the vote in respect of the division of that Territory, we will have some solid basis of fact to go upon. We will not have merely the representations of interested parties made before a committee of this body coming by delegations to advance their private or political ends, but we will have the solemn and legitimate expression of the people of that country in respect of the division. The man in the northern part or southern part of the Territory would have the right to vote "no," if he chose, upon the subject of dividing his family and his estate, one part of it to be thrown into a Territory and another part into a State.

If we propose to act in respect of the fundamental idea of popular government in this country—that of following the will of the people when expressed in due legal form—let us delay the question of the admission of this State until after the proposition has been voted upon and acted upon by the whole people of Dakota that is presented in the amendment introduced by the honorable Senator from Arkansas. If those people decide that they want their Territory divided, and if they bring a constitution here which the Government of the United States is willing to accept as one republican in form, then I shall never vote against the admission of that Territory as a State because it may turn out in the next Presidential election or in any subsequent election to be a Republican State. I do not know how good I can make this pledge by a mere statement of this kind in advance. I can only express the conviction of my own heart upon the matter, and I do it without reserve. Still, I shall be slow to believe that two States should be formed of this Territory.

There are various other matters that would come up naturally in argument upon this phase of the question, but I suppose it is hardly worth while to go over them. Some of them have been touched upon by gentlemen who have preceded me. But I rose for the mere purpose of presenting to the Senate of the United States a plea for the consideration of the grave problems that are involved in the bill as reported by the committee, which decide my vote against it, and to ask the Senate to delay yet a little while until not only the people of Dakota but the people of the United States at large can become satisfied that one-half of this Territory is in a condition to be admitted as a State and to have an equal representation on the floor of the Senate with every other State of the American Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. GROOME (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. Otherwise I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I desire to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] if he knows how his colleague [Mr. HOAR] would vote upon this question.

Mr. DAWES. I presume my colleague would vote "nay," though I have no knowledge upon that point.

Mr. HARRIS. You suppose he would vote "nay?"

Mr. DAWES. I think he would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who is absent, and will therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if I were not paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is detained at home by sickness, and requested me to pair with him. I therefore announce that upon this subject I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to announce the pair between my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

Mr. BOWEN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER] and voted under a misapprehension. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bayard,	Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	George,	Kenna,	Slater,
Brown,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Vance,
Call,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vest,
Camden,	Hampton,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jackson,	Pugh,	Williams.
Coke,	Jonas,	Ransom,

NAYS—31.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Sabin,
Blair,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sheffield,
Conger,	Hill,	Palmer,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Lapham,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Logan,	Platt,	Wilson.
Dolph,	McMillan,	Plumb,

ABSENT—18.

Bowen,	Farley,	Ingalls,	Miller of N. Y.,
Butler,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Lamar,	Walker.
Edmunds,	Harris,	McPherson,
Fair,	Hoar,	Mahone,

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in the Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. HARRISON and Mr. VEST called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were here, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. GROOME (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BUTLER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], who is detained at home by sickness. I should vote "nay" if the Senator from Pennsylvania were present.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. FARLEY] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Allison,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sheffield,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Palmer,	Sherman,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Cullom,	Lapham,	Platt,	Wilson.
Dawes,	Logan,	Plumb,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,

NAYS—28.

Bayard,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Slater,
Brown,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vance,
Call,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Vest,
Camden,	Jackson,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Walker,
Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,	Williams.

ABSENT—14.

Butler,	Farley,	Harris,	Mahone,
Cameron of Pa.,	Garland,	Hoar,	Miller of N. Y.
Edmunds,	George,	Jones of Nevada,
Fair,	Groome,	Lamar,

So the bill was passed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. Pending that motion I ask that the next special order, Senate bill 2112, be laid before the Senate as unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before submitting the motion of the Senator from Vermont, the Chair will lay before the Senate the first of the special orders under the previous assignment. The Chief Clerk will report the bill by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill remains the unfinished business for to-morrow.

ADMISSION OF TACOMA.

Mr. PLATT. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me long enough to give a notice.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I give notice that when the bill to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce shall have been disposed of, I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1898) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Tacoma, and for other purposes.

IMPROVEMENT OF GALVESTON HARBOR.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Public Printer is instructed to procure 2,000 copies of the lithographic map prepared by Joseph Nimmo, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to accompany his report on the improvement of Galveston Harbor, and incorporate the same in the majority report of the Committee on Commerce accompanying Senate bill No. 1652.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 16, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m., Mr. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, of Illinois, in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL PAGES.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask, by unanimous consent, to offer the following resolution for reference to the Committee on Accounts, as it relates to the pages of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will inquire for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to employ three additional pages during the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $2.50 per day.

There was no objection; and the resolution was received and referred to the Committee on Accounts.

DISTRICT CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting additional estimates from the commissioners of the District of Columbia of appropriations for the support of certain institutions of charity; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN SCHOOLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with inclosure recommending the removal of certain restrictions upon the disbursements of funds appropriated for the support of Indian schools; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FORWARDING OF MAIL MATTER.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration a bill (H. R. 6578) to amend section 3940 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the forwarding of mail matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3940 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows, to wit:

"Letters and other articles of first-class mail matter prepaid with not less than one full rate of postage shall be forwarded from one post-office to another, at the request of the party addressed, without any charge for such forwarding; the balance of postage, however, if there be any due, to be collected at the office where the matter is delivered. All other mail matter, the postage on which as required by law has been fully prepaid, shall likewise be forwarded from one post-office to another, at the request of the party addressed, without any additional charge.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not object if the bill shall not give rise to debate.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. It will not require any debate. I wish merely to say the bill gives authority to postmasters to forward second, third, and fourth class mail matter upon which the postage has been once fully paid in the same manner as the law now applies to letters. This would apply to newspapers and packages upon which the postage had been once fully paid.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether there is any other provision in it.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. None at all.

There was no objection, and the House Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. JANE VENABLE.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2280) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable be taken from the Speaker's table and put on its passage at this time.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not object if it shall give rise to no debate.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee. I do not think it will give rise to debate. It has already passed the Senate, and there is a unanimous report in favor of it from the House committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Jane Venable, widow of William E. Venable, late minister of the United States to Guatemala, the sum of $5,636.87, balance of one year's salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report of the House committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1548) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to report as follows:

We find that on March 14, 1857, William E. Venable, of Tennessee, was commissioned as minister resident of the United States to the Republic of Guatemala; that in June thereafter he started to that country to enter upon the duties of the office, arriving there August 2 of that year; that on the next day he signified to the authorities of that government his desire to be presented to the President of that republic; that Mr. Venable was taken sick, on account of which fact his presentation never took place; and that on the 22d day of August in the same year he died, leaving his widow, the claimant.

Mrs. Venable says, in an affidavit relating to her husband's death—

"That his death was caused by the change of climate in midsummer, and the fatigue and exposure incident to his journey; that she has knowledge of but few of the particulars of his sickness and death, and can only state that his sickness was contracted and his death ensued while engaged in the performance of his public duties; that none of his effects were returned to her except his gold watch, which is still [in] her family; that he was buried at the seat of government in Gautemala, and that all the money he had with him was used in his burial expenses; that at the time of his appointment he was engaged in a large and lucrative practice of law; that he borrowed money for his outfit, and executed a mortgage upon his property to secure its payment; that by reason of this mortgage debt his estate proved insolvent, and the money collected from the Government by his administrator was applied to his debts, and no part of it ever came to the hands of affiant or her family; that all she ever had of his estate was a dower interest, worth less than $1,000; that at the death of her husband they had six children, five of them girls, and the eldest aged about 15 years; that by her unassisted efforts she has reared and educated her family; that she is now 64 years of age, and two of her children are mainly dependent upon her for support; and that she is entirely without means, save the small dower interest before stated."

The salary of such minister at that time was $7,500 per annum. The amount received by Mr. Venable and by the administrator of his estate is shown by the records in the State Department to have been $1,863.13.

In view of the facts recited, and of several precedents set in similar cases of the death of persons in this branch of the public service, we recommend the allowance of an amount equal to one year's salary, less the amount which has been paid, and report an amendment to the bill reducing the sum to be appropriated to that amount, and, with this amendment, recommend its passage.

Amend by striking out all after the word "Guatemala," in the fifth line, and insert the following: "The sum of $5,636.87, balance of one year's salary, the same to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be an amendment recommended in the House report which ought to apply to the Senate bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee. That amendment would make the House bill correspond with the Senate bill. The Senate bill as it is now is all right.

The bill was taken up, read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS OF MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. ROSECRANS. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk be received for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, January 6, 1885, after the reading of the Journal, be assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs for the consideration of business reported from that committee now on the Calendar; this order not to interfere with general appropriation and revenue bills and prior orders.

Mr. KEIFER. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that the order should also include bills of the same character upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. REAGAN. I must object if this shall give rise to debate.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I do not think it will give rise to any debate.

Mr. KEIFER. There may be a desire to have other matters considered than those upon the Calendar. There may be business upon the Speaker's table quite as important which should be taken up for consideration. I ask therefore that the resolution be amended so as to include that business.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I will modify the resolution in that way so as to include business on the Speaker's table to be called up by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DUNN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that I offered a rule to that effect at the last session of Congress, and that it was referred to the committee of which he is a member and never reported back.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to say I am in favor of it. There need be no trouble on that score.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California consents to the modification of his resolution, and it will be read as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Tuesday, January 6, 1885, after the reading of the Journal, be assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs for the consideration of business reported from that committee now on the Calendar and similar Senate bills on the Speaker's table; this order not to interfere with general appropriation and revenue bills or prior orders.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object, as the resolution is too general in its character.

Mr. WASHBURN. I make the point of order that the objection comes too late. The resolution was received and modified, and as modified was read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the objection did come too late. The consent of the House had been given to its introduction after which it was modified.

The resolution as modified was adopted.

Mr. ROSECRANS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LUCY LE G. JEFFRIES.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 1337) granting a pension to Lucy Le G. Jeffries. I desire to say that a bill of like tenor was reported from the Committee on Pensions of the House, of which I am a member, and passed at the last session of Congress. This bill passed the Senate and is here upon the Speaker's table, and I ask that it be taken up and passed.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the vote will be taken on the bill without debate.

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope so. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before the objection is waived I ask that the report be read.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not before the House, objection being made.

ADJOURNMENT OVER HOLIDAYS.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to submit the following privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Tuesday, December 23, 1884, they stand adjourned until Monday, the 5th day of January, 1885.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to ask the gentleman to allow me to have a vote on an amendment making it Saturday, December 20. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. If we vote down the demand for the previous question will not the resolution be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then I hope it will be voted down.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 83.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MORRISON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 99, nays 118, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—99.

Alexander,	Buckner,	Cook,	English,
Bagley,	Burnes,	Cosgrove,	Ermentrout,
Ballentine,	Cabell,	Cox, W. R.	Finerty,
Barksdale,	Clardy,	Curtin,	Follett,
Blackburn,	Cobb,	Deuster,	Foran,
Breckinridge,	Collins,	Dibrell,	Forney,
Browne, T. M.	Converse,	Dunn,	Geddes,
Glascock,	Jones, J. H.	Payson,	Springer,
Greenleaf,	Jones, J. K.	Peel,	Stewart, Charles
Guenther,	Jordan,	Pettibone,	Stockslager,
Hancock,	Ketcham,	Price,	Storm,
Harmer,	Lacey,	Pryor,	Talbott,
Hatch, W. H.	Lewis,	Pusey,	Taylor, J. M.
Herbert,	McAdoo,	Randall,	Thompson,
Hewitt, A. S.	McComas,	Reagan,	Townshend,
Hewitt, G. W.	McMillin,	Reed,	Wallace,
Hill,	Mills,	Rice,	Ward,
Hiscock,	Mitchell,	Riggs,	Warner, A. J.
Holman,	Morrison,	Robinson, W. E.	Wemple,
Hopkins,	Morse,	Rosecrans,	Williams,
Horr,	Moulton,	Ryan,	Willis,
Hunt,	Mutchler,	Scales,	Wilson, W. L.
Hurd,	Neece,	Singleton,	Wise, G. D.
Johnson,	Ochiltree,	Slocum,	Wood.
Jones, B. W.	O'Neill, Charles	Snyder,

NAYS—118.

Adams, G. E.	Davis, G. R.	McCoid,	Struble,
Aiken,	Davis, L. H.	McCormick,	Sumner, C. A.
Anderson,	Davis, R. T.	Millard,	Taylor, E. B.
Atkinson,	Dibble,	Miller, J. F.	Taylor, J. D.
Barr,	Dockery,	Morrill,	Thomas,
Beach,	Eaton,	Murphy,	Throckmorton,
Bennett,	Elliott,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Bisbee,	Everhart,	Nicholls,	Tully,
Blount,	Findlay,	Nutting,	Turner, H. G.
Boutelle,	Funston,	O'Hara,	Turner, Oscar
Brainerd,	Goff,	Patton,	Van Alstyne,
Bratton,	Hammond,	Pierce,	Wadsworth,
Breitung,	Hanback,	Peters,	Wait,
Brewer, F. B.	Hatch, H. H.	Phelps,	Wakefield,
Brewer, J. H.	Haynes,	Ranney,	Warner, Richard
Brown, W. W.	Hepburn,	Ray, G. W.	Washburn,
Buchanan,	Holmes,	Reese,	Weaver,
Campbell, J. E.	Houseman,	Robinson, J. S.	Wellborn,
Candler,	Howey,	Rockwell,	White, J. D.
Cannon,	James,	Rogers, W. F.	White, Milo
Carleton,	Jeffords,	Shelley,	Whiting,
Chalmers,	Jones, J. T.	Shively,	Wilkins,
Clay,	Keifer,	Skinner, C. R.	Wilson, James
Clements,	Kleiner,	Skinner, T. G.	Winans, John
Cox, S. S.	Lanham,	Smalls,	Wolford,
Crisp,	Lawrence,	Smith, A. H.	Worthington,
Culberson, D. B.	Libbey,	Stephenson,	Yaple,
Cullen,	Long,	Stevens,	York.
Cutcheon,	Lovering,	Stewart, J. W.
Dargan,	Lowry,	Stone,

NOT VOTING—106.

Adams, J. J.	Dunham,	Kean,	Potter,
Arnot,	Eldredge,	Kelley,	Rankin,
Barbour,	Ellis,	Kellogg,	Ray, Ossian
Bayne,	Ellwood,	King,	Robertson,
Belford,	Evans,	Laird,	Rogers, J. H.
Belmont,	Ferrell,	Lamb,	Rowell,
Bingham,	Fiedler,	Le Fevre,	Russell,
Blanchard,	Fyan,	Lore,	Seney,
Bland,	Garrison,	Lyman,	Seymour,
Bowen,	George,	Matson,	Shaw,
Boyle,	Gibson,	Maybury,	Smith, H. Y.
Broadhead,	Graves,	Miller, S. H.	Spooner,
Brumm,	Green,	Milliken,	Spriggs,
Budd,	Halsell,	Money,	Steele,
Burleigh,	Hardeman,	Morgan,	Strait,
Caldwell,	Hardy,	Muldrow,	Sumner, D. H.
Campbell, Felix	Hart,	Muller,	Tucker,
Campbell, J. M.	Hemphill,	Murray,	Valentine,
Cassidy,	Henderson, D. B.	Oates,	Vance,
Chace,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Ferrall,	Van Eaton,
Connolly,	Henley,	O'Neill, J. J.	Weller,
Covington,	Hitt,	Paige,	Winans, E. B.
Culbertson, W. W.	Hoblitzell,	Parker,	Wise, J. S.
Davidson,	Holton,	Payne,	Woodward,
Dingley,	Hooper,	Perkins,	Young.
Dorsheimer,	Houk,	Poland,
Dowd,	Hutchins,	Post,

So the previous question was not ordered.

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. KING with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. YOUNG with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. ELWOOD.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. HART.

Mr. HARDY with Mr. SPOONER, for this day only.

The vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to amend the resolution by inserting Saturday, December 20, instead of Tuesday, December 23.

Mr. MORRISON. I move to amend by inserting the 22d.

Mr. RANDALL. I know it is a great interference with the comfort of members, especially those who live at a distance, to make the adjournment at so close a day as the 23d to Christmas. Yet I think that those who live a long distance away could be spared better than we could lose the sessions of Monday and Tuesday, for I feel authorized to say one of the appropriation bills could be considered on Monday and Tuesday of next week, to wit, the District appropriation bill, as the gentleman having charge of that bill states he thinks it would be ready at that time and could be got out of the way before the two Houses took a recess.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to previous holiday adjournments, and before doing so desire to say that if this resolution means anything at all—if the custom heretofore adopted by the House means anything, it is to allow members of Congress the privilege of being with their families on Christmas and New Year's Day. I know of no other reason for it; and if we do not propose to accomplish that by this resolution, we ought to vote it down. If we do mean to continue that custom, then we should make it effective by giving sufficient time.

I hold in my hand from the Journal a record of the recesses taken by several previous Congresses. The Forty-fifth Congress in its second session adjourned from December 15 to January 10, and in its third session from December 20 to January 7; a longer time than is proposed now under this amendment. The Forty-sixth Congress adjourned in its second session from December 19 to January 6, 1880, and in its third session from December 22 to January 5, 1881. The Forty-seventh Congress had no holiday adjournment except, perhaps, for a week, as the tariff bill was then under consideration and the debate continued, although many members were absent.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Does the gentleman propose to allow the members from California, from Washington Territory, from New Mexico, and other portions of the extreme West sufficient time to go home for Christmas?

Mr. BLOUNT. I will answer the gentleman a little further on.

This has been the habit of Congress on this question. The Committee on Ways and Means propose a holiday recess, and I believe the present purpose of the House is to allow some recess. The only question is as to the time.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, says that they hope to be able to take up on Monday or Tuesday the District of Columbia appropriation bill. I venture to say from my experience here, and I believe the prediction will be verified by the experience of other gentlemen upon the floor, that these exact calculations in reference to the business of the House fail fully half the time to come up to the expectation of those who make them.

I predict that we will not get to the District bill; but assuming that we might if we did not take this adjournment, what would be the result? I say, sir, nothing can come of it. We have adjourned since we came on Thursday over to Monday. There has not been a single session on Saturday since the House has assembled. We will have no difficulty about passing the appropriation bills, and never have, and this resolution, if adopted, can not affect their passage in any degree.

If the bills are ready for passage I for one am willing at all times to be present here in evening sessions or on Saturdays to take them up and consider them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to remind my friend from Georgia that probably as soon as the pending bill is out of the way I shall be able, as I hope, to get the Mexican pension bill before the House and consider that during the present week.

Mr. BLOUNT. If we are in session we will have many matters called up for consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But this is a public measure.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am aware of that.

My friend from Indiana desires to know if I propose to give time to the members from California and other Western States to go home. It has not been the practice of members residing so far from Washington to take advantage of the holiday recess, whether the length of time is satisfactory or not. But because he cites an extreme case, it affords to my mind no reason for making any difference from what has heretofore been the practice of the House. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says that those gentlemen who desire to go home, and who may not have time to reach their homes if they remain here until the day fixed by the resolution from the Committee on Ways and Means, could be spared from the House to start at an earlier date. That, perhaps, is true, sir; but I take it for granted that a great many gentlemen, I certainly among the number, do not propose to start under such circumstances. I feel it my duty to be present on the floor of the House during the sessions of Congress, and shall be here when the House is in session, no matter what may be the action of the House on this resolution. I can see no reason for not making this change from the 23d to the 20th, a Sunday intervening between, merely a difference of two days, and when, as is very likely, should the resolution in its present form pass, on Monday and Tuesday no quorum will be present in either House.

Another thing: We began this session on the 1st day of December, as has been suggested to me by my colleague, an unusually early time, and so the proposition for the amendment that I have suggested is less disadvantageous than at any other previous occasion in the last few years. Under this present resolution, if the amendment is not adopted, not a single gentleman from my State can be at his home on Christmas day. I trust, therefore, the amendment will be adopted, and, if in order, I ask the previous question upon the pending proposition.

Mr. BEACH. I trust the gentleman will allow us the privilege of debating this matter. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLOUNT. In deference to the wishes of the House, I must insist upon the demand for the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore decided that by the sound the ayes prevailed.

Mr. BEACH. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 135, noes 10.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BEACH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the motion to recommit which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has the right to make a motion to recommit. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to so amend it that it will read, that when this House adjourns on Wednesday the 24th instant it shall be to Friday the 26th instant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 16, noes 169.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 4 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment for the 22d, so that a vote may be taken directly as to the preference of the House between the 20th and 23d.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment of Mr. BLOUNT was again read.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 120, noes 63.

Mr. BEACH, Mr. BROWNE of Indiana, and Mr. HOBLITZELL demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 20 members voting therefor.

Mr. BEACH. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF BILL.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 5667) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate, was ordered to be reprinted for the use of the House.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the House, as the regular order, to proceed now with the consideration of the unfinished business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House resumes the consideration of the special order, the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and to regulate such commerce. By previous order of the House, all general debate on this bill will be closed in one hour and a half.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] is recognized.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, it is conceded that the provision of the Constitution declaring that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes is authority for the proposed legislation. If, then, a law be necessary to restrain the railroad companies of the country engaged in commerce between the States from using their corporate powers to the prejudice of the public, Congress shall not hesitate to enact it.

The Committee on Commerce, I think I may say, are of one mind as to the existence of facts authorizing if not demanding legislative action for the protection of the people from the growing exactions of railroad companies; but they differ, and honestly differ, as to the details of a law that will accomplish their purpose. There is certainly no feeling on the part of the committee or any member of it of hostility to railroad corporations, and the assumption by certain gentlemen in the course of this discussion that a spirit of unfriendliness exists either among those supporting what is known as the committee's bill or those supporting the substitute I regard as wholly unwarranted. We all acknowledge and appreciate the benefactions conferred upon commerce by our grand system of railways. We look with awe and admiration upon the magnificent highways that span the continent and wed the sunrise to the sunset, and yet we are impressed with the truth of the utterance of a very distinguished man that the Government must control these colossal corporations or they may in time control the Government.

The subject upon which we propose to legislate is a delicate one and a complex one, and I admit that there is danger that in our effort to regulate or control we may do injustice to the railroads and a wrong to the public. However, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the bill, except those relating to the remedy, and all the provisions of the substitute, except one, are in my judgment but enunciations of the common law in force, and not unknown to the companies at the time their charters were granted. If in the enforcement of these common-law principles which we propose to emphasize by legislative enactment we do not prescribe a remedy that impairs or destroys their corporate rights, the railway companies can have no just cause of complaint.

In the time allotted to me I can do little more than indicate in a general way my position on the proposition of my friend the gentleman from Texas to substitute for the first seven sections of the committee bill the corresponding sections of what is known as the Reagan bill. There is no controversy in regard to the first section, which provides that railroad companies shall transport all freights at reasonable rates. The second section is perhaps obnoxious to the objection that it suggests itself a mode for its own evasion. After declaring that it shall be unlawful for persons engaged in the transportation of property by railroad to charge to or receive from any person a greater or less rate of compensation than is by them charged to or received from any other person for like and contemporaneous service in the carrying, receiving, handling, or delivering the same, it adds the words, "under substantially similar circumstances."

It would seem that "for like and contemporaneous service" railroad companies, as common carriers, ought to be willing, or, if not willing, ought to be compelled, to carry the freight of all their customers at the same rate. It is certainly not our design to relieve the railroad companies from the obligations they now sustain to the public. "The carrier," to quote the common law, "is bound to carry for a reasonable sum and not to extort what he will, and he is bound to carry for all persons at the same price." If this were not so, say the law writers, the duty of carrying for all would be of little value, since the carrier could select his own customers by arbitrary discrimination in prices. Unless we propose, then, to enlarge the powers of the railroad corporations of the country against the interests of the people we ought to strike out these words, "under similar circumstances," making the section conform to the one presented by Judge Reagan on the same subject.

The third section, which prohibits and then under certain circumstances allows rebates, puts it in the power of railroad companies to defeat the object or the supposed object of the second section, which is to secure equality of rates for all shippers. This section not only recognizes, as some gentleman has said, the system of rebates, but it commends it and enjoins the universality of its use. Gentlemen supporting this provision insist that circumstances may arise under which rebates may be allowed in the interest of some shippers without detriment to the rights of others engaged in like business. This may be true. But it were better that isolated instances of individual hardship should occur than that we should give statutory countenance to the employment of secret methods by common carriers that enable them to enrich some of their customers while they pauperize others. I trust that we shall not give legislative sanction to a practice that has caused the bankruptcy of thousands and thousands of honest shippers who, unlike their more fortunate neighbors, were not able to drive a secret bargain with railroad companies for the reduction of schedule rates—a practice which has been the prolific parent of railroad wars in this country.

I suggest that we either refrain from legislation on the subject of rebates or that we prohibit them altogether. I do not believe the section proposed by the gentleman from Texas could injuriously affect the railroads or their customers, but if a majority of the House think otherwise, then let the section be stricken out. Let us not destroy the symmetry of the law by retaining a provision that approves the evils we are attempting to prevent.

I believe the committee are practically unanimous in their support of the fourth section of the bill, which prohibits pooling. I think, if I may be permitted to say so, that every section in the bill received a majority of the votes of the committee, and I make this statement because the matter has been referred to by some of my colleagues, and they have unintentionally perhaps created the impression that a majority of the committee were against every section, or perhaps I should say almost every section of the bill.

We ought to reflect that private corporations are not instrumentalities of the Government in the sense that they are possessed of the attributes of sovereignty that enable them to do acts beyond the reach of an individual. A railroad corporation, like all other corporations, has the rights conferred upon it by its charter or such as necessarily and incidentally arise and which may be exercised in order to carry out the purposes of the charter. A railroad company has no right to go beyond the charter which gives it being. The charter confers upon the company the right of eminent domain and the right to take toll, as they say in England—the right to receive a reasonable compensation for the transportation of freight and passengers; nothing more. The charter does not confer upon the railroad company a right to combine with other railroad companies in the formation of a mammoth copartnership designed to deprive the public of legitimate competition which would exist in the absence of such combination.

There is nothing to prevent the members of the pool from fixing rates for the carriage of property greatly in excess of what such carriage is worth. The amendment which my friend from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR] suggests he may offer at the proper time will not, in my opinion, if adopted, prevent the exercise of this power by the companies. He proposes to declare unlawful all pooling contracts the purpose and effect of which are to raise charges above reasonable rates. But with competition practically destroyed, how will the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a given charge be shown. One of the elements to be considered in investigating the rate charge of a common carrier is the rate adopted by other carriers. If the carriers unite in establishing the same rate, as they might do under this system, the evidence, I apprehend, would hardly be worth considering.

Gentlemen have maintained that it is necessary for these pools to exist, because they say that competition, while legitimate under certain circumstances and within certain bounds, may cease to be legitimate as among the railroads or beneficial to the shipping public.

Now, in discussing another provision of the bill the gentleman from Connecticut instanced the case of a shipper of freight from the city of Chicago to the city of New York who, upon a discovery that other lines of road between the points named were shipping freight at a less cost, could effect an arrangement with the railroad company which would not be prejudicial to it and would put him in the market of New York on terms of equality with shippers by other lines. But if this system of pooling be maintained, as that same gentleman proposes, I imagine that the railroad company in the case supposed would have little incentive to make reparation to its customer by abating a part of its overcharge; for it will not be to its interest to lower the freights in order that they may conform to freights of other roads, because there may be an arrangement among the roads by which their earnings are subjected to a division, and so, with perfect security from the competition of rival lines, the road can afford to be independent.

Now, in regard to the section which follows, and which has been discussed by several gentlemen—the one which provides a penalty for the violation of the preceding sections—I have no hesitation in declaring that I prefer this to the corresponding section in the substitute.

I believe that pooling ought to be prohibited. I believe that the system of allowing rebates should be forbidden, and that penalties ought to be prescribed that will secure the observance of the law. But I do not believe that a mere error of judgment on the part of railroad officials should be declared a misdemeanor and punished by fine not less than $1,000, as the gentleman from Texas proposes.

The provision of the committee's bill I am now discussing excepts from its operation the first section of the bill which prescribes that all rates shall be reasonable. The substitute applies the penalty to a violation of the first section as well as to those prohibiting pooling, rebates, and discriminations between shippers.

Under the substitute an agent at a way station who exacts the schedule prices for the shipment of freight may be indicted and convicted of a misdemeanor and fined in any sum not less than $1,000 if such prices be adjudged higher than the company ought to have fixed, because he has committed the error of putting into practice a schedule furnished him by his superiors.

A jury in the State of Massachusetts might hold that in a given case the rates were reasonable, while a jury in the State of Illinois might hold in a similar case that the rates were too high and therefore unreasonable. Thus that would be an offense in the State of Illinois which would be no offense in Massachusetts.

For an error of judgment in the case supposed the agent could be compelled to respond to the injured party in treble the amount of damages sustained by such party, and besides could be convicted of a misdemeanor and fined $10,000 or $20,000 or any other sum exceeding $1,000.

This section of the substitute, with its minimum punishment of $1,000, certainly can not receive the sanction of the House.

I have briefly adverted to the several sections of the committee bill and undertaken to mark the difference between them and those proposed by the gentleman from Texas. The substitute contains another section embodying a principle that has been the fruitful topic of discussion both in and out of Congress for a series of years. I refer to the provision which declares that railroad companies shall not charge more for a short than for a longer distance.

I know the ability of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], and I know too he brought to the consideration of this question not only great ability but a purpose while demanding justice for the people to do no injustice to the parties to be affected by this legislation. But I am not able to agree with him as to the justness or equity of the principle announced in the section to which I refer.

The gentleman stated the other day, in opening this discussion, that railroad companies are in the habit of attempting to grasp more business than legitimately belongs to them by establishing low rates of freight at competing points, and that one of the objects of this section is to compel these companies to rely on the commerce which legitimately belongs to them. I beg leave to remind him that railroad companies as common carriers have the legitimate right to all the carrying business that is offered to them which they have the facilities to do.

Gentlemen asked is it fair or just or right that a man living at a non-competing point shall be compelled to pay two or three times the value of the cost of transportation in order that the railroads may be able to carry freight from competing points at less than they can afford to carry it? I say to the gentlemen that railroad companies do not run their cars for glory; they do not carry freight from competing points at lower rates than they can afford to carry it. They carry thousands of tons of freight, perhaps, from competing points where they carry thousands of pounds from non-competing points, and are thus able to carry at lower rates.

But the gentlemen need not have made that inquiry, because if this bill be passed the railroad companies will be inhibited from charging more than reasonable rates for the transportation of property from and to any points on their roads. If this bill shall become a law, railroad companies can be checked in their efforts to make the intermediate traffic of the roads pay the cost and expenses of the roads and the dividends to the stockholders, as they are charged with doing now. I have supposed our object to be to secure reasonable and uniform rates to all freighters, and not to prevent the carriage of property between competing points at as low a price as the railroad companies might agree to.

When the gentleman says he gives to the railroad companies the advantage of the distance between non-competing points and the competing points that, for example, they may charge as much from the city of Philadelphia to the city of New York as from the city of Chicago to the city of New York, he states only a part of the case. The railroad companies can charge as much from the city of Philadelphia to New York as they do from the city of Harrisburg to the same city, and as much from the city of Harrisburg as they do from the city of Pittsburgh, and as much from the city of Pittsburgh as they would from the city of Steubenville and Columbus and Indianapolis, and on back to the station five miles this side of the city of Chicago. I regard it as practically establishing a rate per mile.

From Saint Louis, Mo., to the city of East Saint Louis, in Illinois, the railroad companies can charge no more than they can from the city of East Saint Louis to a station five miles east of that city. While the commerce between East Saint Louis and the five-mile station is not interstate, and therefore not affected by the bill, it serves to illustrate the principle. The railroad from Saint Louis, Mo., to East Saint Louis was built at a cost perhaps of $14,000,000, and the cost of the road from East Saint Louis to the station suggested was probably $150,000. A railroad freight car which runs seventy-five miles through the prairie and then plunges into the mountains and over cañons, and crosses in its path it may be the home of the eagle, can receive for the last fifty miles of its travel no more than is exacted for the seventy-five miles on the plain. I say the mere statement of the proposition shows it would be injustice to the railroad companies to adopt it.

Why should they say to the citizens of Chicago or Saint Louis, who are blessed with natural advantages, that because of these facilities and natural advantages they have they shall be put in a worse position than parties who live at intermediate points and who have the benefits of no competition at all.

I say, then, Mr. Speaker, this provision in the substitute does not commend itself to my mind. It would not only be unfair to the railroads, but, in my opinion, it would be unjust to the people who patronize the roads. It might succeed in driving out of the carrying business the railroad companies at competing points, and this would result in a disadvantage to the people who live between the termini.

I want to say now that I indorse the substitute of the gentleman from Texas except in the particulars I have named. I can not support the motion of my friend from Texas because of the presence in his substitute of what is known as the long and short haul section.

If the sections of the committee bill can be amended in the respect I have named, and what is known as the commission feature can be stricken out, I think we will have as perfect a bill as we can devise.

I can not indorse the ornamental part of the bill. I do not favor the establishment of a commission. If it be true that this is tentative legislation, then we ought not to favor the prohibition of pooling, nor should we prohibit the rebate system or discrimination in rates. We ought to put this commission into the field and allow it to gather—as some gentleman has said their office under this bill will be—all the facts to enable us to legislate intelligently.

I think, however, that we at least have facts that would authorize us in declaring the principles of the common law and providing remedies for their enforcement. The commission which it is proposed to appoint to examine into the matter is required, among other things, to look into the principle of pooling. We prohibit pooling, in the first place, and then appoint the commission to say whether in that legislation we have been guilty of unwisdom or otherwise.

But my friend the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TURNER] so aptly described the duties of the commission, as declared in this bill, that I shall say nothing further upon that subject. Let whatever law we pass be enforced in the courts of the country, where justice is, or ought to be, administered without sale, denial, or delay.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, what I have to say in closing this debate I am satisfied I can not say in the course of one hour, and therefore, if the House will indulge me with an extension of the time, I would like to have it understood now, so that I may proceed with my remarks to their conclusion.

Mr. LONG. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. REAGAN. I can not very well fix the time, as I have a quantity of matter here.

Mr. WELLBORN. I would ask unanimous consent that such time as my colleague wants may be granted to him.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas, before that is done, whether, after he is through with his argument, it is designed to give an opportunity of going through this bill by sections?

Mr. REAGAN. According to the agreement with the House, I propose to call the previous question on the two motions which I have submitted, so that the House may determine which bill it will take up to be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. That is satisfactory to me. I simply desired to know whether we were to act upon either of these bills by sections.

Mr. REAGAN. It was so understood in the House.

Mr. LONG. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the time of the gentleman from Texas may be extended indefinitely at the conclusion of his hour.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I will not trespass upon the patience of the House for a greater length of time than I can possibly help.

I had thought my course on the subject under consideration was animated by a sincere desire to promote the public welfare. And when I heard the same arguments which members have repeated on this floor made before the Committee on Commerce by the officers and employés of the railroad companies, and by their paid lawyers and lobbyists, it did not lessen my confidence in the integrity of my motives or in the wholesome and salutary provisions of the bill which I am asking this House to pass. But during the discussion of the provisions of the pending bills before the House I have been so amazed, so almost bewildered by the bold and audacious assumptions on this subject by members of the House, by their bitter arraignment of both myself and the bill I am advocating, acting on their responsibility to their constituents, that I have felt called on to review my action and the policy I am urging to see whether I have been in error. And I will state some facts, some reasons, and some conclusions which induce me to think I am not only right but that I am trying to perform a great duty to the public on a subject on which the people and the best interests of the country demand action.

CHARACTER AND IMPORTANCE OF THE SUBJECT UNDER CONSIDERATION.

We have, according to the best authority, now more than 125,000 miles of railroad, representing a nominal capital of more than $7,000,000,000 and a real capital of probably a little over $3,000,000,000.

The roads do the principal part of the carrying of the vast internal commerce of the United States. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Governor LONG, estimates, as I understand him, the interstate commerce to be of the value of $15,000,000,000 a year, and I do not think this estimate too large. This interstate commerce is subject to just such charges and discriminations as the railroads see fit to make, whether just or unjust. And their power to levy unjust exactions on this commerce, and to make unjust discriminations as between persons and places, is not controlled or restrained by any legislation. State laws do not and can not affect them, and we have no Federal laws for that purpose. They may take away from whole communities all the profits of their labor and capital, leaving the people only enough to keep them at work by charging, as they claim the right to do, whatever the commodity will bear. They may enrich one man and impoverish another in the same business by their unjust discriminations and rebates. They may destroy the business of one town or city and build up another by their unjust discriminations between places. They may enrich one corporation to a fabulous extent, as they have the Standard Oil Company, and in doing so destroy rival corporations by the allowance of rebates to the one and by denying them to others.

In the legislative investigation in New York three years ago it was shown that the railroad companies had allowed and paid rebates to the Standard Oil Company to the amount of $10,000,000 in sixteen months, and yet we have no legislation to prevent or to punish these great wrongs committed by this vast power. In the world's history there is no instance of the exercise of such powers affecting so many people and such great interests as these which is not controlled and regulated by law, except alone the American railway system. Assumptions have been made that the common law furnishes remedies for these evils. I will show as I proceed that it does not.

The question now addresses itself to each member of this House: "Do you mean to show to your constituents by your votes that you intend this condition of things shall continue?" or do you mean that your votes shall show that you will aid in furnishing a remedy for these great evils?

AGREEMENT OF THE PROVISIONS OF THE REAGAN BILL WITH LAW AND PRECEDENCE.

I quote here from an argument made on a former occasion by me to show that the provisions of my bill are not novel and untried by legislation, but that they are in full accord with the provisions of the most recently formed State constitutions:

I now submit to you an abstract of some of the provisions of twelve of the most recently formed State constitutions, which relate to railroads and railroad corporations. My first reason for doing this is because it is the expression of the opinions of the people in their highest sovereign capacity on this subject. A second reason for doing so is to show you that these opinions of the people, as expressed in their State constitutions, are in strict accord, on every point treated of, with the opinions of the courts and law-writers. A third reason for presenting this abstract to you is that it is in strict accordance with and fully sustains the provisions of what is called the Reagan bill, so far as the two relate to the same subjects. And still a fourth reason for presenting it is that you may see at a glance the uniform current of action of the States which have made or revised their constitutions in recent years, and since it has become apparent to the public that the practices and pretensions of these corporations must be curbed and controlled by law in the interest of the people who grant them, and to prevent the worst possible effects of the employment and use of monopoly power.

For greater clearness, before giving you this abstract, and in order that your attention may be the more directly drawn to them, I will mention some of the points in which these State constitutions and the opinions of the courts and law-writers and the provisions of my bill agree.

They agree—

1. That the railroads are public highways.
2. That they are common carriers.
3. That they shall not discriminate in freight rates and charges.
4. That they shall not allow rebates or drawbacks.
5. That there shall be no pooling of freights between parallel or competing railroads, and no combination of the management, stock, property, or franchises of such railroads to defeat competition.
6. That more shall not be charged for hauling like kinds of freight on the same railroad for a shorter than for a longer distance.

Of course I do not wish to be understood as saying that these constitutions agree on all of these points. But, as you will see, taking them as a whole, they sustain, in a striking manner, these points of agreement; and none of them disagree with the law quoted or referred to or with the provisions of my bill.

And I further call you to note, as I shall present them, that they clearly and distinctly disagree with the opinions given you on these points by the railroad attorneys and officers who have spoken before the committee, which had the matter in charge, and who have written on these questions, and with the opinions of members of this House who have expressed similar views.

With these prefatory remarks I will now present the abstracts from these several constitutions, with the date of adoption of each constitution. I shall not pretend to make literal extracts, but only to give you in substance the meaning of the provisions referred to, which can be easily verified.

It is proper for me to observe at this point that, if any question should arise in your minds as to whether the action of the several States on the points referred to should or should not be regarded as precedents for the action of Congress on like questions, the Constitution gives to Congress the exclusive power to regulate commerce among the States; and that, while Congress may not charter railroad corporations in the States, or legislate upon or regulate their corporate rights and franchises, it may do anything in regulating commerce between the States which a State can do in regulating commerce wholly within the State, for Congress has all the power in this respect in the sphere of its action which the State has in the sphere of its action. This view is fully sustained by the authorities I have already cited, and I need not quote them again.

The constitution of Alabama of 1875 declares railroads in that State to be—

1. Common carriers.
2. Public highways.
3. Requires the Legislature to provide against unjust discrimination and extortion in passenger and freight rates.
4. Forbids railroad companies to grant free passes or to sell tickets or passes at a discount to members of the Legislature or other State officers.

The constitution of Arkansas of 1874 declares railroads in that State to be—

1. Common carriers.
2. Public highways.
3. Declares the equal right of all to have persons and property transported over railroads.
4. Declares against undue and unreasonable discriminations in charges and facilities for freight or passengers.
5. Shall not charge more for freight or passengers for a shorter than for a longer distance.
6. Declares that railroads, canals, or other corporations shall not consolidate with any competing railway or canal, and that the same persons shall not be officers of two such competing corporations.
7. Declares that "no discrimination in charges, or facilities for transportation, shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or in favor of either by abatement, drawback, or otherwise."
8. Provides that the General Assembly shall prevent by law the granting of free passes by any railroad or transportation company to any officer of that State, legislative, executive, or judicial.
9. That the exercise of the right of eminent domain shall apply to the property and franchises of corporations as well as to individuals.
10. The General Assembly required to pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges by railroads for transporting freight and passengers, and to provide for enforcing such laws by adequate penalties and forfeitures.

The constitution of California of 1879 declares that—

1. All railroads are common carriers, and subject to legislative control.
2. No railroad or transportation company shall grant free passes, or passes or tickets at a discount, to any person holding any office of honor, trust, or profit in that State.
3. No discrimination in charges or facilities to be made by them between places or persons.
4. Shall not charge more for a short than for a longer distance.
5. The railroad commissioners shall have power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroads.

The constitution of Colorado of 1876 declares that—

1. All railroads shall be public highways.
2. All railroad companies shall be common carriers.
3. Railroads shall not be connected or consolidated with other and competing railroads.
4. All have equal rights to have persons or property transported over railroads.
5. No undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges or facilities for transportation of freight and passengers.
6. The exercise of the right of eminent domain to apply to the property and franchises of corporations the same as to individuals.
7. Corporations are not to be permitted to conduct their business in such manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the State.

The constitution of the State of Georgia of 1877 declares that—

1. The Legislature shall have power to regulate railroad freight and passenger tariffs.
2. To prevent unjust discriminations.
3. To prohibit the charging of other than just and reasonable rates.
4. The exercise of the right of eminent domain shall apply to the condemnation of the property and franchises of corporations as well as to the property of individuals.
5. Corporations shall not so conduct their business as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the State.
6. The General Assembly to have no power to authorize corporations, by contract, agreement, or otherwise, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, or to encourage monopoly.
7. No railroad company shall give or pay any rebate or bonus in the nature thereof, directly or indirectly, or do any act to mislead or deceive the public as to the real rates charged or received for freights or passage.

The constitution of Illinois of 1870 declares that—

1. No railroad corporation shall consolidate its stock, property, or franchises with any other railroad corporation owning a parallel or competing line.
2. That the railways of the State are public highways.
3. That the General Assembly shall pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight.
4. That the exercise of the power of the right of eminent domain shall never be so construed or abridged as to prevent the taking, by the General Assembly, of the property and franchises of incorporated companies.
5. The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses, and to prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in the rates of freight and passenger tariffs.

The constitution of Louisiana of 1879 declares that—

1. Railways are declared public highways.
2. Railroad companies are declared common carriers.

The constitution of Michigan of 1850 declares that—

1. The Legislature shall pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight on railroads.
2. Shall prohibit running contracts between such railroad companies whereby discrimination is made in favor of either of such companies owning connecting or intersecting lines of railroad.
3. No railroad corporation shall consolidate its stock, property, or franchises with any other railroad corporation owning a parallel or competing railroad.

The constitution of Missouri of 1875 declares that—

1. It shall not be lawful in this State for any railway company to charge for freight or passengers a greater amount for the transportation of the same for a less distance than the amount charged for any greater distance.
2. Railways in this State are declared public highways.
3. Railroad companies are declared common carriers.
4. The General Assembly shall pass laws to correct abuses and to prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in rates of freight and passenger tariffs.
5. And shall pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight.
6. No railroad or other corporation shall consolidate the stock, property, or franchises of such corporation with any railroad corporation owning, or having under its control, a parallel or competing line.
7. No officer of a railroad corporation shall act as an officer of any other railroad corporation owning, or having the control of, a parallel or competing line.
8. No discrimination in charges, or facilities in transportation, shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or in favor of either, by abatement drawback, or otherwise.
9. No railroad or other transportation company shall grant free passes or tickets, or passes or tickets at a discount, to members of the General Assembly, or members of the board of equalization, or any State, or county, or municipal officers.

The constitution of Nebraska of 1875 declares that—

1. No railroad corporation shall consolidate its stock, property, franchises, or earnings, in whole or in part, with any other railroad corporation owning a parallel or competing line.
2. Railways declared public highways.
3. Compelled to transport persons and property under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.
4. The Legislature shall pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight.
5. The liability of railroad corporations as common carriers shall never be limited.
6. The exercise of the power of eminent domain shall never be so construed as to abridge or prevent taking the property or franchises of corporations the same as of individuals.
7. The Legislature shall pass laws to prevent abuses, and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in charges of railroad companies.

The constitution of Pennsylvania of 1875 declares that—

1. Railroads are public highways.
2. Railroad companies are common carriers.
3. They shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.
4. All individuals, associations, and corporations shall have equal right to have persons and property transported over railroads, and no undue or unreasonable discrimination shall be made in charges for, or in facilities for, transportation of freight or passengers.
5. Persons and property transported over any railroad shall be delivered at any station at charges not exceeding the charges for transportation of persons and property of the same class, in the same direction, to any more distant station.
6. No railroad corporation, or the lessees, purchasers, or managers of any railroad, shall consolidate the stock, property, or franchises of such corporation with, or lease or purchase the works or franchises of, or in any way control any other railroad corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line.
7. No corporated company doing business as a common carrier shall, directly or indirectly, prosecute or engage in mining or manufacturing articles of transportation over its works.
8. No such company shall, directly or indirectly, engage in any other business than as common carriers, or hold or acquire lands, freehold or leasehold, directly or indirectly, except such as shall be necessary for carrying on its business.
9. No discrimination in charges or facilities for transportation shall be made between transportation companies and individuals, or in favor of either by abatement, drawback, or otherwise, and no railroad company or lessee, manager, or employé thereof shall make any preferences in furnishing cars or motive power.
10. No railroad company shall grant free passes, or passes at a discount, to any person except officers or employés of the company.

The constitution of Texas of 1876 declares that—

1. Railroad companies shall receive and transport each other's passengers, tonnage, and cars, loaded or empty, without delay or discrimination.
2. That railroads are public highways.
3. That railroads are common carriers.
4. The Legislature shall pass laws to correct abuses and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in rates of freight and passenger tariffs on railroads.
5. And shall pass laws establishing reasonable maximum rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight on railroads.
6. No railroad corporation, or the lessees, purchasers, or managers of any railroad corporation shall consolidate the stock, property, or franchises of such corporation with, or lease or purchase the works or franchises of, or in any way control any railroad corporation owning or having under its control a parallel or competing line.
7. No officer of a railroad corporation shall act as an officer of any other railroad corporation owning or having the control of a parallel or competing line.

LONG AND SHORT HAULS.

The constitution of Arkansas adopted in 1874 provides that more shall not be charged for a short than for a long distance.

The constitution of California adopted in 1879, the constitution of Missouri adopted in 1875, and the constitution of Pennsylvania adopted in 1875 contain similar provisions.

From this it will be seen that the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. BOYLE] and the two gentlemen from California [Mr. BUDD and Mr. GLASCOCK], who spoke in opposition to the provision of my bill which prohibits railroad companies from charging more for a short than for a long distance, did so in opposition to the provisions of the constitutions of their respective States. The gentleman from Missouri who has just taken his seat speaks in opposition to the provision of the constitution of his State on this subject. And the two gentlemen from Massachusetts, Governor LONG and Governor RICE, and a number of other members have had much to say in praise of the railroad legislation of that State. I will read from the revised statutes of that State to show that they prohibit charging more for a short than for a long haul.

I read now from the Revised Statutes of the State of Massachusetts. On pages 634 and 635, section 190 provides as follows:

No railroad corporation shall charge or receive for the transportation of freight to any station on its road a greater sum than is at the time charged or received for the transportation of the like class and quality of freight from some original point of departure.

Mr. LONG. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not from the "same" original point of departure?

Mr. REAGAN. From same point on the road.

I call attention to this to show that the provisions of my bill stand upon the constitutional provisions to which I have referred and also on the law as laid down by the Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, and I am satisfied if I had taken the labor and time to go into the State statutes generally I could have multiplied examples of the same character and in great numbers sustaining precisely my opinion upon the subject and disagreeing with the gentlemen who oppose and condemn it.

Mr. BLOUNT. Are those constitutions to which you refer in force at this time?

Mr. REAGAN. They are.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas tell me whether there is any difference between these two bills now before the House on that particular point? I thought that there was not, and yet some of the gentlemen who have been discussing the question seem to assume that there is a difference.

Mr. REAGAN. It is simply this: Both prohibit pooling, but what is called the committee bill puts a clause in it requiring the commission proposed to be raised to investigate the question of pooling and see whether it ought to be discontinued or not; and the gentlemen who favor the committee bill, which prohibits pooling, all denounce pooling and denounce my bill because it has a prohibition of pooling.

POOLING DISALLOWED.

The constitution of Arkansas of 1874 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Colorado of 1876 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Illinois of 1870 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Michigan of 1850 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Missouri of 1875 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Nebraska of 1875 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Pennsylvania of 1875 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Texas of 1876 prohibits pooling.
The constitution of Georgia of 1877 prohibits pooling.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], and the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. BOYLE], who are opposing the provision of my bill which prevents pooling, and who are the advocates of the pooling system, are opposing the provisions of the constitutions of their own States.

Mr. LONG. May I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas again to this statute of Massachusetts to show him that the word "some," as read by him, should be "same."

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts desires me again to read the statute.

No railroad corporation shall charge or receive for the transportation of freight to any station on its road a greater sum than is, at the time, charged or received for the transportation of a like class or quantity of freight from the same original point of departure to a station at a greater distance on its road in the same direction.

Precisely what I stated it meant, and precisely in support of my views on this subject.

Mr. LONG. I understood the gentleman to say that it said "from some point of departure."

Mr. REAGAN. I thought it used that word.

Mr. LONG. I want to bring it out that it is "from the same original point of departure and in the same direction."

Mr. REAGAN. But the point is that more shall not be charged for the short than for the longer distance. I am not particular about it further than that it demonstrates that fact.

Mr. LONG. It adds the words "and in the same direction."

Mr. STRUBLE. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to ask him a question. He states the committee's bill prohibits pooling, and further he directs that the commission inquire into and report on that subject. Now, if pooling is prohibited emphatically by the bill, as we all understand it is, what is the objection in the gentleman's mind to an investigation of this question with a view to a report to Congress, and with a view, as I understand, to such additional legislation as the state of the case may demand?

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will wait I will answer that at the proper place.

Mr. STRUBLE. I will do so.

Mr. REAGAN. But I desire here to repeat what I said a moment ago, that notwithstanding the committee bill prohibits pooling the advocates of that bill on this floor all denounce pooling, and I have to meet their arguments because I regard that as a very important provision in my own bill.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REAGAN. I shall have to decline being interrupted further unless merely for a question, as otherwise I shall never get through.

Mr. PETERS. I think the gentleman does me an injustice when he says I differed with him on that question. In that statement he includes all those who have spoken.

Mr. REAGAN. Perhaps I have done injustice to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS], because of all the fifteen members of the committee he is the only one who approved of the committee's bill.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman will remember that in my speech I did not refer to the matter of pooling.

Mr. REAGAN. A good many other gentlemen did.

REBATES.

The constitution of Arkansas of 1874 prohibits rebates, drawbacks, and other modes of discrimination.

The constitution of California of 1879 provides against discriminations of all kinds between persons and carriers.

The constitution of Georgia of 1877 prohibits rebates, drawbacks, &c.

The constitution of Missouri of 1875 prohibits rebates.

The constitution of Pennsylvania of 1875 prohibits rebates, drawbacks, and other discriminations.

The allowance of rebates is simply a secret mode of discriminating in freight rates and charges between shippers. And eleven of the State constitutions out of the twelve I have quoted from prohibit discriminations between shippers by the railroad companies, so that in favoring the allowance of rebates and other discriminations the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. SEYMOUR], the two gentlemen from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG and Mr. RICE], the two gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL and Mr. BOYLE], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WOODWARD], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who have opposed the provisions of my substitute on this subject, have also, in doing so, put themselves in opposition to the constitutions of all these States, and in opposition to the policy and laws of nearly all the States of the Union on this subject.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR] says pooling is not hostile to the interests of freighters and consumers.

My objections to pooling freights are that—

First. It destroys competition in freight rates.

Second. It makes one great monopoly out of several smaller ones.

Third. That it secures to the pooling roads the power to levy such exactions on the commerce they carry as their cupidity may demand.

Fourth. That it enables them to make their roads the means of oppression and ruin to the people to whom they are indebted for their franchises.

Fifth. That such a power never has been and never can be safely surrendered by a free people to a few men who deny their responsibility to the public. I ask if these five objections do not embody that number of axiomatic truths?

PENALTIES FOR UNREASONABLE CHARGES.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR], in speaking of the provision of the Reagan bill which imposes penalties for unreasonable charges, and several other gentlemen say "this is a highly penal clause for the mere mistake of the judgment of the directors of a road in fixing the rate charges."

My friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], in his remarks just made, takes the same position—that it is a harsh bill, imposing penalties on mere mistakes of construction. The House will remember how many gentlemen have dwelt upon that point.

I ask if this is a fair way to state the case? The provision of my bill is, if any person shall willfully do anything prohibited, or shall willfully omit to do anything required by the bill to be done, he shall, in either case, suffer the penalty prescribed.

I submit that there is a great difference between a willful and intentional violation of law and an accidental mistake. The first is a crime. The last is never so treated, and these able gentlemen and lawyers must know this. I propose to punish crimes, not mistakes. As well talk of a man committing larceny, burglary, or arson by mistake as to talk of his willfully violating the provisions of this bill by mistake. The gentleman from Connecticut assumes that my bill is too strict and minute in its provisions, so much so "as to interfere with the laws of trade." Is it an interference with the laws of trade to say that railroad corporations shall not make unreasonable charges, or that they shall not allow rebates, or that they shall not charge more for hauling a given amount of freight one hundred miles than for five hundred miles, or that they shall not pool their earnings with a competing road and thereby deprive the people of the advantages of competition, or to require them to post up a schedule of their charges so that the public may be advised of what they have to pay for given services? If these are not unreasonable things, then the bill is not unreasonable, for these are substantially all of its requirements. The Constitution and laws of many States say that these requirements are reasonable. Railroad officers and railroad attorneys say they are unreasonable. The latter say so from self-interest and through a desire to maintain an unlimited control over the commerce of the country.

IS THERE DEMAND FOR SUCH LEGISLATION AS IS PROPOSED BY THIS BILL?

The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, Governor LONG, and some other gentlemen who have addressed the House speak of there being an entire absence of any outcry against railroads from the people at large, and of a very limited complaint from any one else.

Do facts justify this statement? Let us see. The Legislatures of New York, of Pennsylvania, and of other States have demanded legislation by Congress to restrain and control the railroads. The National Board of Trade has several times demanded such legislation, and more than once specifically approved the Reagan bill. The Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade and Transportation, and the Produce Exchange, of New York, have demanded such legislation, and each have specifically approved the provisions of the Reagan bill. Chambers of commerce and boards of trade from nearly all parts of the country have made similar demands of Congress.

The Grain Receivers' Association of Chicago, the Millers' Association which assembled at Cincinnati demanded such legislation and approved the Reagan bill. Twelve, at least, of the most recently formed State constitutions and the laws of many other States show that they demand legal protection against the rapacity of the railroads. The national and many State granges and numerous local granges have demanded such legislation and approved the provisions of the Reagan bill; and citizens from every State in the Union have, in the last few years, by the thousands petitioned Congress for legislation on this subject, and much the greater part of them have asked for the passage of the Reagan bill.

I read from the Wall Street Daily News of December 4, 1884, the following:

THE CORN CROP AND THE RAILROADS.

Prime's crop report in the Journal of Commerce yesterday calls attention to railroad freights in connection with the crop of corn coming to market, and points out some very serious facts. Of the situation in Nebraska he says:

"Corn now sells in Nebraska at an average from 10 to 12 cents per bushel. The freight from many points in Nebraska to Chicago is 22 cents per bushel. This means simple starvation to the farmer. When corn was selling a few weeks ago at from 16 to 18 cents a bushel the movement in that State was quite free, but grain dealers now write me that scarcely a load comes where ten came before. Banks are also refusing to advance any money to crib corn, and the outlook for all kinds of business in that State at present is very poor."

Since the above was written the Union Pacific, which serves Nebraska Territory, has announced a 5-cent reduction, and yesterday it was stated that other roads were considering what they should do about meeting this cut. The Union Pacific also carries for Kansas, and Prime says for that State:

"Last winter at this date the farmers got from 35 to 40 cents for their corn just as fast as they could haul it in. Shellers ran night and day, and Kansas supplied the world with corn. Her crop was exceptional in quality and quantity. This year the conditions are entirely changed. Corn only brings from 12 to 20 cents a bushel, according to locality and distance from Kansas City."

In consequence of previous good crops, Kansas is better off than some other States. In Minnesota the corn is mainly going into hogs and cattle; but in Iowa and Illinois, where poor crops of corn had practically cleaned the country out, the first new corn came upon the market at good paying prices, but the demand has now been filled, and the price has fallen in Illinois to 22 to 25 cents per bushel, and in Iowa it is 4 to 5 cents a bushel less; "and we find," says Prime, "very little movement in this State." He then sums up the situation thus:

"At present very low prices all over the corn belt, and farmers are not selling anything like the quantity of corn that the trade expected to have seen thrown upon the market at this date. Those who have been arguing that an era of low prices of grain would tend to increase our exports and make business lively have an opportunity this winter of putting their theory to a practical test."

As bearing directly on this question of the movement of the corn crop and the railroads, we print the following private dispatch, received by one of the large houses in the street yesterday from its Chicago correspondent:

"CHICAGO, December 3.

"A gentleman who has our entire confidence has just made a thorough examination of the outlook in the West, and the business prospects for the railroads, and this is the gist of his views: 'There is a paralysis to-day in the legitimate grain trade of the Northwest caused by outrageously high freights. Corn is worth in Nebraska, on an average, 12 cents per bushel, and it costs 22 cents per bushel to move it to Chicago. At some points in Nebraska it is selling at 8 cents. In Kansas, 13 to 20 cents. Railroads prefer to waste money in moving passengers at $1 per head from Kansas City to Chicago, but will make no reduction in freights except at competitive points. This condition shows that farmers in the South are not obliged to sell corn at these figures, as the wheat-growers in the Northwest are, and have been, and will continue to be.' I don't consider my friend an alarmist. He remarks that a continuance of these conditions means a second granger war, and the results will be even more effective than the war of ten years ago."

This shows that the grain-growers of the West are now at the mercy of the railroads as to the terms of transportation of their grain, and contradicts the many glowing accounts we have had during this debate of cheap railroad freights for the West.

And as further evidence of the necessity and of the demand of the public generally for such legislation as will "prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation by the railroad companies," I read the following declaration made by the Republican national convention on the 5th day of last June:

The regulation of commerce with foreign nations and between the States is one of the most important prerogatives of the General Government, and the Republican party distinctly announces its purpose to support such legislation as will fully and efficiently carry out the constitutional power of Congress over interstate commerce. The principle of the public regulation of railway corporations is a wise and salutary one for the protection of all classes of the people, and we favor legislation that shall prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation, and that shall prove to the people and to the railways alike the fair and equal protection of the law.

I commend that to my Republican friends, who are so earnestly combating legislation of this kind. If some of the Republican members who have been discussing this question do show that they believe the people of the country have no rights which the railroads are bound to respect, they surely ought to manifest, outwardly at least, some respect for the political declaration which their national convention thought it necessary to make in order to enable them to carry the recent election for President and Congress. Or do they prefer that the public shall understand that this declaration was simply made to deceive the people and cheat them out of their votes by a false pretense? I must not be understood as applying these remarks to those Republicans who are trying in good faith, as many of them are, to redeem the pledge of their party to the people on this subject.

I also quote from my argument made two years ago expressions of a number of the leading men and newspapers on this subject, as follows:

In contrast with the extravagant and unreasonable declarations of the railroad attorneys and railroad experts that there is no danger in leaving these corporations free to do as they please with all questions of railroad transportation, and that it would endanger the interests of both the railroads and the people for us to legislate to control and restrain them, I give the following extracts, showing the opinions of leading public men and newspapers, the representatives of the real opinions and of the real interests of the great body of the American people.

In a letter written by Hon. David Davis, late a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, and then a Senator from Illinois and President of the Senate, he says:

"Great corporations and consolidated monopolies are fast seizing the avenues of power that lead to the control of the Government. It is an open secret that they rule States through procured Legislatures and corrupted courts; that they are strong in Congress; and that they are unscrupulous in the use of means to conquer prejudice and acquire influence. This condition of things is truly alarming, for unless it be changed quickly and thoroughly free institutions are doomed to be subverted by an oligarchy resting upon a basis of money and of corporate power."

In a letter written by Hon. William Windom, then a Senator in Congress, and recently Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, to the Anti-Monopoly League of New York, three years ago, he said:

"The channels of thought and the channels of commerce thus owned and controlled by one man or by a body of men, what is to restrain corporate power or to fix a limit to its exactions upon the people? What is then to hinder these men from depressing or inflating the value of all kinds of property to suit their caprice or avarice, and thereby gathering into their own coffers the wealth of the nation? What shall be said of the spirit of a free people who will submit without protest to be thus bound hand and foot?"

Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, formerly a judge of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, and Attorney-General of the United States, in a speech delivered before the Anti-Monopoly League of New York, a little over three years ago, said:

"All public men must take their side on this question. There can be no neutrals. He that is not for us is against us. We must have legal protection against these abuses. This agitation once begun, and the magnitude of the grievance being understood, it will force our rulers to give us a remedy against it. The monopolies will resist with all their arts and influences, but 50,000,000 of people, in process of time, will learn the important fact that they are 50,000,000 strong."

Governor Porter, of Indiana, in a message to the Legislature of that State, said:

"In my judgment the Republic can not live long in the atmosphere which now surrounds the ballot-box. Moneyed corporations, to secure favorable legislation for themselves, are taking an active part in elections by furnishing large sums of money to corrupt the voter and purchase special privileges from the Government. If money can control the decision at the ballot-box, it will not be long until it can control its existence."

Daniel Webster, whose fame could not be increased by affixing a title to his name, said, long ago:

"The freest government can not long endure where the tendency of the law is to create a rapid accumulation of property in the hands of the few, and to render the masses of the people poor and dependent."

The New York Times newspaper, discussing the question of the encroachments of corporate power, said:

"It is not only absorbing to itself the fruits of labor and the gains of trade, and piling up wealth in the hands of a few, but it is controlling legislation and endeavoring to sway the decisions of courts in its own interest. We are now at a stage in the contest where the people may vindicate the authority and place these corporations under the regulation of the law."

The Brooklyn Eagle, in a recent editorial, said:

"There is pretty general feeling that the continent of America was not discovered by Columbus, and civil liberty established by the fathers of the Republic, to the end that 50,000,000 of people might be made tributary to a band of railroad magnates, or that farmers, artisans, and merchants might by hard work and keen competition raise up a dozen Vanderbilts, with several hundred millions of dollars. Those who entertain this feeling have become persuaded that the time has arrived for the industrious masses of this country to protect themselves, if they ever intend to do so. It certainly will not be easier after the adversary has grown stronger. In this contest every delay is to the disadvantage of the people. Let the issue be deferred for a few years, and nothing but a revolution as violent as that of France will overthrow the oppression. Of all misleading delusions, there is none more mischievous than the notion that popular suffrage and popular power are synonymous. Given the means of bribing multitudes, of intimidating others, of wrecking opponents, coupled with actual possession of the Government, and adverse sentiment must be paralyzed. If the suffrage is to be our salvation it must be applied sharply while there are still odds on the side of unbought and unterrorized manhood."

The late President James A. Garfield, who voted for this bill in the Forty-fifth Congress, and whose death we have so recently been called to lament, in discussing the railroad problem and its effect on our Government and people, a few years ago, said:

"The modern barons, more powerful than their military prototypes, own our greatest highways and levy tribute at will upon all our vast industries. And, as the old feudalism was finally controlled and subordinated only by the combined efforts of the kings and the people of the free cities and towns, so our modern feudalism can be subordinated to the public good only by the great body of the people, acting through their government by wise and just laws."

I might multiply such evidences of opinion of impartial, disinterested, and patriotic men of all parts of the country; and I invite you to contrast them with the interested, selfish opinions of railroad lawyers and railroad managers and experts, paid for by the railroads, out of money wrung from the hard earnings of people engaged in other vocations. Do you think such a question can be whistled down the wind by the vast throng of mercenaries who infest the halls and corridors and committee-rooms of Congress, for the purpose of influencing the action of members whenever this question comes up for consideration?

From President Arthur's message of December 4, 1883, I read the following on this subject:

Complaints have lately been numerous and urgent that certain corporations, controlling in whole or in part the facilities for the interstate carriage of persons and merchandise over the great railroads of the country, have resorted in their dealings with the public to divers measures unjust and oppressive in their character.

In some instances the State governments have attacked and suppressed these evils, but in others they have been unable to afford adequate relief because of the jurisdictional limitations which are imposed upon them by the Federal Constitution.

The question how far the National Government may lawfully interfere in the premises, and what, if any, supervision or control it ought to exercise, is one which merits your careful consideration.

While we can not fail to recognize the importance of the vast railway systems of the country and their great and beneficent influences upon the development of our material wealth, we should, on the other hand, remember that no individual and no corporation ought to be invested with absolute power over the interest of any other citizen or class of citizens. The right of these railway corporations to a fair and profitable return upon their investments, and to reasonable freedom in their regulations, must be recognized; but it seems only just that, so far as its constitutional authority will permit, Congress should protect the people at large in their interstate traffic against acts of injustice which the State governments are powerless to prevent.

And he renewed this recommendation in his recent message.

And yet Governor LONG and other gentlemen who concur with him, in their zeal to preserve the railroads in their unrestrained and uncontrolled power to levy whatever tribute they please upon the commerce of this country, seem to be oblivious to all of these facts; and allege in the face of this House, and the knowledge of the members to the contrary, that there is no demand for such legislation. He and others have told us that the National Board of Trade last winter declared against what is known as the Reagan bill and recommended a commission. It did last winter declare for a commission under the influence of railroad corporations, or rather of their representatives, after having at several previous annual meetings declared for the Reagan bill.

PERCENTAGE OF PROFIT ON INVESTMENTS IN RAILROADS.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] fitly and appropriately exposed the fallacy of Governor LONG about the railroads of the United States only paying about 3 per cent. on investments in them, and showed that in reality they pay nearly 10 per cent. I need not repeat what was said by him.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, Governor LONG, also arraigns the Reagan bill as "a cast-iron, inflexible, perfunctory method;" "mere brutum fulmen;" "a dead letter;" which "would only embarrass business, increase rates, and add to the burden of the people's cost of transportation."

I appeal to the sense of justice and fairness of the House, and of the country, whether this characterization is either sincere, or fair, or just, as against a bill whose substantive provisions are few in number, simple in nature, and easily understood by any one who desires to understand them. He says: "Hardly any remedy of this sort is proposed that does not exist at common law." Is this a true and fair statement? The common law does not give triple damages for the wrongs provided against. My bill does. The common law does not provide either a civil or penal remedy for allowing rebates, drawbacks, &c. My bill gives both a civil and penal remedy. The common law does not prohibit charging more for a shorter than for a longer haul. My bill does.

The common law does not prohibit pooling. My bill does. The common law does not require schedules of rates to be posted up. My bill does.

And yet in the face of these facts the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] says: "Hardly any remedy of this sort is proposed that does not exist at common law." I am persuaded that the real reason why those who champion the interests of the railroads do not want my bill to pass is that it does give plain, statutory remedies, not given at common law, and provides for their easy and effectual enforcement in the courts of ordinary jurisdiction.

As a specimen of the idea of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] of simplicity and directness in obtaining redress for wrongs done to citizens, I will read sections 10 and 11 of the committee's bill, defining a part of the duties of the commission it proposes to create, and the duties of others.

SEC. 10. That any person complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any railroad company or person in violation or contravention of this act may, in addition to the remedies hereinbefore provided, apply to said commission by petition in writing, which shall briefly state the subject of such complaint. If the petition is signed by any board of trade or other commercial body, or, when signed by an individual, if it bears the certificate of any district attorney of the United States, or of any district or county attorney, or officer corresponding thereto, of any State or Territory, that he has examined the facts and in his opinion the complaint is well founded, the commission is hereby required to entertain and investigate the same. In all other cases the commission shall decide whether or not the petition ought to be proceeded with. The commission may, if they think fit, before requiring or permitting any formal proceedings to be taken on any petition, communicate the same to the railroad company against whom it is made, so as to afford them an opportunity of making such observations or taking such action thereon as they may think fit. The commission shall have power, and in a proper case is required, to cause a copy of the petition to be served upon the railroad company complained against, and to issue a notice requiring such company to appear before the commission and answer the said petition. The answer shall be in writing. After the answer is filed it shall then be lawful for the commission, if it shall think fit, to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons or means as it shall think prop r, all such inquiries into matters of fact as may be deemed necessary to enable the commission to form a just conclusion in respect of the matters of said petition. All the proceedings before said commission shall be directed by and under general orders, which shall secure to all persons interested reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the commission, either by the testimony of witnesses or other evidence adduced before it, or by the report of any person to whom the commission may have referred the inquiry, or any part thereof, that anything has been done or omitted to be done in contravention or violation of this act, by any railroad company or person so upon due and proper notice proceeded against, it shall be the duty of such commission to make and record its report in writing in respect of any such contravention or violation of this act, which report shall comprise and embrace the findings of the commission upon and in respect of all questions of fact in issue or involved in such proceedings. Within a reasonable time, not to exceed twenty days, after such report and findings are made by the commission, it shall cause a copy thereof to be served upon or delivered to the railroad company so found to have violated this act, to which shall be appended a notice to be issued by said commission to such company forthwith to cease and desist from such violation; and also to deliver to the district attorney of the United States for the district in which the act complained of occurred another copy of such report, findings, and notice.

SEC. 11. That upon notice that any such railroad company has neglected or refused to conform to the decision of said commission, and to desist from such violation or contravention of this act, it shall be the duty of such district attorney to apply by petition, in the name of the party aggrieved, to the circuit court of the United States for such district, for, and it shall be the duty of such court to grant, an order upon such railroad company to show cause why such company should not be enjoined and restrained against the continuance of such violation, and for such other order and relief in the premises as may be just and proper. For the purpose of making any order or decree in the premises, final or otherwise, such court shall be always open, and the day on which any such order or decree is made shall be a special term of such court. Upon the service and return of such order to show cause, and notice to the parties interested, such court shall proceed in a summary manner to ascertain whether the said report and findings are true; and whenever said court shall be of opinion that such company has done or is doing any act in violation or contravention of this act in said report and findings described, it shall so adjudge; and it then shall be the duty of said court forthwith to issue a writ of injunction requiring such railroad company to desist from such violation and in respect of the matters in said report contained to conform to and obey all the provisions of said act. Such court may enforce obedience to any such injunction, order, or decree, by any person or party, by fine, proceedings for contempt, and all other means within its lawful jurisdiction sitting as a court of equity. Any person interested to restrain such violation may, on application to the court, be allowed to appear and be heard, by himself or counsel; and upon proof that any district attorney has failed in any proper case for the period of ten days to apply for such order to show cause, the court may permit such application to be made and prosecuted to effect by or in behalf of any person so interested. Such court may, in its discretion, award or deny costs to any party to such proceeding. In any case where the court shall adjudge that the violation of this act by any company has been willful, or continued after notice to desist therefrom, the court may award to any party injured such a gross sum by way of costs as will reimburse all his costs, charges, expenses, counsel fees, and disbursements, to be paid by such company.

I submit whether all this verbiage is not intended to hinder, delay, and deny any practical and useful remedy to the individual citizen for wrongs done him by railroad corporations. Under it the citizen can obtain no recovery, no judgment for wrongs done to him. Under it a wrong-doer can not be punished for his crime. In the light of these truths what becomes of the fine rhetoric of the gentleman from Massachusetts and of others on the subject of the iron rule of the Reagan bill and the simplicity and feasibility of the committee's bill? And of what worth are all such opinions as these gentlemen have given us for our guidance on what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] calls "a simple, equitable, and speedy system of relief?"

On the subject of the long and short haul, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] has illustrated his views by two examples, plausible and deceptive enough, but which are only calculated to deceive. He wishes to know if no more should be charged for carrying freight over the bridge at Saint Louis, which cost many millions of dollars, than for a like distance over a road built at the ordinary rate of expense—and my worthy friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] who has just addressed the House propounds the same inquiry, I am sorry to say—and whether no more should be charged for carrying freight through the Hoosac tunnel than for a like distance over an ordinary road.

Now, under the provisions of the substitute bill, in reference to the first illustration, as much may be charged for a given amount and kind of freight (if the road is continuous from New York to Saint Louis) from East Saint Louis to Saint Louis as from Indianapolis, or from Columbus, or from Pittsburgh, or from New York to Saint Louis. And surely the railroad would not suffer any wrong from the effects of this bill, if it could charge as much for the few miles crossing the Mississippi River as for all the distance from one of the places above mentioned. And this is what the bill allows. But the bridge at Saint Louis is a road to itself, separate from the other railroads, and makes its own charges, and would be only bound like others not to make unjust discriminations in its rates. The same may be said of the Hoosac tunnel illustration, except that it is not a separate road. And the other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE], in illustrating his objection to the provisions of this bill in relation to the long and short haul clause, asked if a car-load of flour could be hauled from Saint Louis to New York for 50 cents a barrel if it would be reasonable to compel a train of cars to stop seventy-five miles this side of Saint Louis and charge no more for a barrel of flour from there than from Saint Louis. He, like the balance of the gentlemen who combat the provisions of this bill, finds it necessary in order to ground an argument to state an hypothetical and impossible case.

Who ever heard of a train of cars stopping to take on a barrel of flour anywhere, or whoever expects to hear of it except from the advocates of railroad monopolies? And who can doubt or deny that a freight train can take on a car-load of flour or several car-loads of flour seventy-five miles east of Saint Louis and carry it to New York at as little expense as if its cars were hauled from Saint Louis?

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RICE] says if the Reagan bill is enacted into a law it will be more despotic than the Czar of all the Russias. I do not know how to characterize such an argument except to suppose that it springs from the exuberant fancy of the youthful and untrained statesman from Massachusetts. Certainly it could not be said by a grave, serious man with expectation that any one would believe it.

And he gave us another specimen of his humor, Massachusetts Representative as he is, by warning us against the danger of consolidation and centralization found lurking in the Reagan bill. Doubtless the House, like myself, was a little surprised to find any Republican from Massachusetts an advocate of the doctrine of strict construction and State's rights. He says there are fearful dangers in any attempt which may be made to protect the people against the discriminations, exactions, and injustices of railroad corporations, and finds an asylum for the repose, security, prosperity, and happiness of the people in the railroad pool, which erects one huge monopoly out of several small ones, denying to the people all competition in transportation and subjecting them without remedy to such demands as the railroads may make upon their property. He has no fear of the consolidation and centralization of the thousands of miles of railroads. His fears are awakened only by the effort to compel them to do justice by conservative, just, and wholesome legislation.

My friend from Ohio, General WARNER, illustrates his idea of the impolicy of the provision of my bill which forbids charging more for a shorter than for a longer haul by instancing a coal mine with inferior coal farther from market as compared with one of better coal nearer to market. He wants to know if justice would not require that the poor mine farther from market should have lower rates of transportation than the good mine nearer the market, in order to equalize the profits of the two. He might with this view have gone further and inquired if a man with a poor farm should not have cheaper rates of transportation than one with richer land, in order to equalize the profits of the two farms.

Is it possible that we are to be treated to the assumption in this House and in the discussion of this great subject with a statement which implies that a part of the business of railroads is to equalize the profits of inferior and good mines and of poor and rich farms? The statement of the proposition is its condemnation, and shows to what resorts able and ingenious gentlemen are driven to combat a just and reasonable provision that more ought not to be paid for hauling a given amount and kind of freight 100 miles than should be paid for hauling it 1,000 miles.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOYLE] gravely informed the House that the Reagan bill, if it passed into a law, it would discriminate in favor of the New York Central road and against the Erie road, against the Pennsylvania road, and against the Baltimore and Ohio road, because, they allege, the grain from the lakes can be carried by vessels to Buffalo, N. Y., and from thence to New York city on a road wholly within the State of New York, and would therefore be taken from under the operation of the provisions of the Reagan bill, while on the other roads named it would be under the operation of the Reagan bill.

Now, in the first place, these gentlemen have all the time contended that through rates were cheaper than the local rates, and if this be true, the through rates on interstate commerce, instead of being higher, would be lower than local State rates; but their view rests upon the assumption that we are regulating railroads instead of the commerce that passes over them.

The commerce which is shipped from a point in one State to a point in another State is interstate commerce, no matter by what mode of conveyance it is carried; and the courts have repeatedly decided that this interstate commerce is beyond the reach of State legislation, and can alone be regulated by authority of the Federal Government. So that if merchandise is shipped from Duluth or Chicago or Toledo or any other place on the lakes, and is destined to New York or any other place outside of the State in which shipment is made, it is interstate commerce. It can not be regulated by authority of State laws, and is only liable to be regulated by act of Congress; and whenever it passes over a railroad in any portion of its transit it becomes interstate commerce carried on a railroad, and would come fully within the regulations prescribed in the Reagan bill as to such commerce.

It is assumed that by some fraudulent device or trick of management it might be shipped to Buffalo, and from that point sent by a second shipment as freight under the State law. The Reagan bill provides against this very character of subterfuges. A portion of its third section reads as follows:

> That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the carriage, receiving, storage, or handling of property as mentioned in the first section of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, by changes of schedule, carriage in different cars, or by any other means, with intent to prevent the carriage of such property from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination, whether carried on one or several railroads.

But what motive could there be for shippers wanting to invoke State rates for through commerce instead of through rates? We all know that local State rates in both New York and Pennsylvania are much higher relatively than through rates on Western freight, so that we would be compelled to suppose that shippers would subject themselves to higher rates of freight simply in order not to come under the influence of an act of Congress which would promote their interests. This is the sort of assumption and sort of reasoning necessarily resorted to in the efforts to defeat the Reagan bill. It can surely deceive no sensible man.

As evidence that the officers and attorneys of the New York Central Railroad do not believe what these gentlemen say on this subject to be true, they have united earnestly and vigorously with the attorneys and managers of other railroads in trying to defeat this bill, which they surely would not have done if they believed it would give their road the advantages over the other roads which these gentlemen assume would be given to it by the Reagan bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] say that the Reagan bill would drive all the Western commerce away from our railroads and cause it to go over the Canada roads. Mr. Depew and others used this argument before the committee, and after the answer which was made to it there it was hardly to have been expected that the argument would have been repeated before this honorable body. The Grand Trunk Railroad, of Canada, from Detroit, Mich., by way of Montreal, Canada, to Portland, Me., is 856 miles long. Its connection by way of Montreal with Boston, Mass., is a little longer. Its extension from Port Huron, Mich., to Chicago is 330 miles. This added to 856 miles makes the distance from Chicago to Portland 1,186 miles. In the greater portion of its length it runs through a country sparsely populated and with a limited commerce. Its equipments and the amount of its rolling-stock are nothing like so great as are either those of the New York Central, the Erie, the Pennsylvania, or the Baltimore and Ohio road.

From these causes, as well as because of its greater length, and the greater amount of interruption from frosts and snows, and because it crosses the St. Lawrence River twice, at one place on ferry-boats and at another on a long bridge, it can not carry as large amounts of freight, or carry that freight as cheaply, at paying rates, as either of the above-named four trunk roads on the south side of the lakes and of the St. Lawrence. And it does not go to the markets to which the owners of our Western produce wish to send their commerce. By the New York Central and by the Erie and the Pennsylvania Railroads the distance between Chicago and New York is about nine hundred miles. The distance to Baltimore is more than two hundred miles shorter. The equipments of these roads are of the best; their rolling-stock is abundant; they pass through densely populated States, of great wealth and with very large local business; they avoid the crossing and the recrossing of the St. Lawrence River.

These lines of roads are nearly three hundred miles shorter from Chicago to New York than the Grand Trunk from Chicago to Portland. These three trunk roads south of the lakes, as well as the Baltimore and Ohio road, have in many respects the decided advantage of the Grand Trunk road in fair competition. Either of them is prepared to carry more freight, to carry it cheaper and more expeditiously and to better markets than the Grand Trunk by way of Montreal. And yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAVIS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] are dreadfully alarmed at the danger of the competition of the Canada roads.

But it may be said the branch of the Grand Trunk road, coming from the Northwest to Buffalo, furnishes a route but little longer between Chicago and New York than the trunk lines south of the lakes. It is longer, however, and for more than two hundred miles it passes through a country with much less population, wealth, and commerce than that through which the competing lines south of the lakes pass. And this line, too, has its long ferriage at Port Huron, and has again to cross the Niagara at Buffalo, and it would be dependent on the New York Central and the Erie for its connections at Buffalo with New York, and hence could not compete with them for the Chicago freights against their consent. It has no independent road to New York city.

The Canada Southern road is another of those Canadian roads whose competition these gentlemen so much fear as against the trunk lines south of the lakes. It is three hundred and ninety-two miles long, extending along the southern border of Canada from the Detroit River to Buffalo, N. Y. Its president is William H. Vanderbilt, of New York; its vice-president and treasurer is Cornelius Vanderbilt, of New York. Its connections at Buffalo are with the New York Central and the Erie. It is simply an adjunct to the New York Central, and is in no sense a competing line.

These facts show that there can be no danger of competition of the Canada roads with our American roads. But it is alleged that as the American roads under the Reagan bill can not change their schedules in less than five days, that the Canada roads might during that period underbid them for freight, and that this would be disastrous to their interests. In the first place none of the railroad systems are anxious for railroad wars, and no road under sensible management would seek a railroad war for the advantage of freights for five days. In the next place, shippers from the West have no interest in sending their freights by the Canada roads, as they could not reach the markets south of Boston at any rate without being dependent upon the trunk roads south of the lakes with which they would have to connect. And it must not be forgotten that under the Reagan bill, if it should become a law, the railroads could charge such rates for freight as they might see proper on all Western freights coming to Eastern ports just as they now do.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] becomes tragical in his alarm at the prospects of the passage of the Reagan bill, and informs us that its passage would reduce the price of lands in Kansas and the West $10 per acre. That is, if we prohibit the railroads from discriminating in their charges as against shippers, and prevent them from allowing rebates and drawbacks, and prevent them from charging more for a shorter than a longer haul, and prevent them from pooling their freights and denying to the people competition, and give to the people the protection of a reasonable and just law and equality in the costs of shipment of their produce, and reduce the rates as a result of competition, that their lands would be reduced $10 per acre in price. It would hardly be respectful to the House seriously to combat such a statement as this.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] also says that the right of the railroads to discriminate in their freight rates enables them to build up the commerce of the country, not to destroy it; to enrich the country, not to impoverish it. That is, the right to allow their friends, such as the gentleman from Michigan, to send their shipments of freight to market at half-price, and to charge his neighbors, to whom they feel under less obligation, double rates, would be building up the commerce of the country, not destroying it; enriching the country, not impoverishing it. Such is the characteristic logic by which advocates and defenders of the great corporations attempt to persuade this House and the country that inequality, unjust discriminations, and harsh and oppressive exactions in freight rates upon the commerce of the country is the way to build up its commerce and to enrich the country.

I call attention to two points made by my honorable friend from Vermont, Governor STEWART. He calls up the illustration used by others of the long and short haul as between Memphis and New Orleans by way of Winona, Memphis and New Orleans both being on the Mississippi River, and Winona being an intermediate inland point. We were told by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] that the railroad carries cotton from Memphis to New Orleans, four hundred and fifty miles, for $1 a bale, and that they charge three dollars and a quarter a bale for hauling cotton from Winona to New Orleans, a little over three hundred miles. The gentleman from Vermont says this is right, and that if the railroads are not permitted to charge more from Winona than from Memphis to New Orleans they could do no through business.

It is plainly seen from this statement that to do a through carrying business from Memphis to New Orleans involves the necessity of compelling the people of Winona to pay a large part of the freight charges for other people from Memphis to New Orleans, or else that the charges from Winona to New Orleans are unreasonably high, and therefore unjust. We must accept one horn or the other of this dilemma. There is no escape from it. And neither is allowable under any rule of justice and fairness. His difficulty in this case is that God made the Mississippi River, it cost men nothing, while men made the railroad at great expense, and that railroad transportation can not be made as cheap as water transportation; and no attempt, either by discriminations in rates by railroads or by legislation, to take from the people the advantage of cheap water transportation, in order to increase the profits of the roads or for any other purpose, should be allowed.

The railroads should do such business as they can without improper discriminations or injustice, and without violating the natural laws of trade; and they should not be encouraged or permitted to do a business which they can only do by compelling a portion of the people to pay for transporting the produce and merchandise of another portion of the people.

This principle applies with equal force and reason to the commerce on the great lakes as on the rivers, and is an answer to much that has been said about water transportation on the lakes. He says there is nothing in the Reagan bill which would correct the evils of railroad wars, but that there is a provision in it which would promote them.

During the Forty-fifth Congress, when this subject was first being seriously discussed in the House, Governor Cox, of Ohio, then a member of the House and a friend of this bill, and myself received a number of letters from railroad presidents and superintendents approving the provisions of the bill, both because it would protect the people against the wrongs complained of, and because its tendency would be to benefit the railroads by preventing railroad wars.

And this would undoubtedly be one of the necessary effects of the bill. It would compel the railroad companies to adopt regular and honest business methods, such as are employed by persons engaged in any other large business, instead of employing such methods as they now do to cheat one another and the public. It would compel them to rely on the business legitimately belonging to their several roads, and would prevent them from endeavoring to take from each other by rebates and cut rates business which would legitimately belong to other roads. Most of the railroad wars spring from the attempts of one road to take from another or other roads business which does not belong to it, thus provoking counter efforts of a similar character. One of the great objects and one of the undoubted effects of my bill would be to prevent this. My friend from Vermont [Mr. STEWART] did not point out the provision of my bill which he thought would promote railroad wars, and I am at a loss to know to what section he referred.

Several of the gentlemen who have been engaged in this debate have spoken of the gradual reduction of freight rates in past years as if it resulted from the virtuous intentions of the railroad companies; and some of them have compared the cost of railroad transportation with the old time cost of transportation by wagons, as if the railroad companies had in their beneficence and as a matter of good-will to the people caused this reduction of rates. It is not to them but to the inventors and improvers of the steam-engine and other appliances of transportation by steam that we are indebted for cheap railroad freights; and the gradual reduction of the rates of freight is due, not to the beneficent purposes of the transportation companies, but to the improvements constantly going on in rolling-stock, in facilities for handling freight, and to the substitution of steel for iron rails; to the constantly increasing amount of freight and travel, and in some measure to the competition of different roads and systems of roads, and of the water ways.

I have omitted the discussion of the question as to the constitutionality of the authority of Congress to pass such a bill as I have presented, because on two former occasions I have fully discussed that subject before the House, when the question was made as to the authority of Congress, and have not thought it necessary to rediscuss the question, as few persons, if any, now doubt our authority on this subject.

A number of gentlemen who have preceded me have denounced my bill as being a cast-iron measure, a harsh measure, imposing injurious restrictions on trade, and as calculated to injure the best interests of the country.

Let us see what truth there is in these charges.

In the first place, it prohibits all discriminations of freight rates and charges between individuals. What is there that is harsh or unjust in this? What is there in it that merits the denunciations that have been made against this bill? The railroads as common carriers, having a complete monopoly of business over their several lines and being subject to the control of political authority, are told that they should not designedly, unjustly, and unfairly charge one man more than another for the same amount and kind of service.

In the second place, it prohibits the allowance of rebates and drawbacks in all cases. Rebates are always secretly made, and they always give the shipper receiving them an advantage over the shipper who does not receive them. The allowance of rebates is simply an invention for fraud, swindling, and injustice, and ought not to be tolerated by any community or country, and has been denounced by all or nearly all of the recently formed State constitutions, and has been denounced by the laws of a greater portion of the States of the Union.

In the third place, it prevents pooling of freights, and thereby would preserve to the people the advantages of freight competition as between railroads, while by permitting pooling we would deny to the people all the advantages of competition, and give to the pooling roads the power to levy any exactions which their avarice might demand upon the commerce of the country.

In the fourth place, it would limit the power of railroads in making discriminations between places. It would not take away the power of discriminations, but would prevent them on the line of any given road from charging more for a part of the length of that road than for the whole length of it.

Some of the gentlemen who have preceded me, and especially the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD], can not understand the proposition that the whole length of a road embraces every intermediate part of it; and that if there are steep grades on some parts of it and costly structures on other parts of it, a through haul would necessarily have to pass all the steep grades and all the costly structures on it; and that while there is a limitation placed upon the power of discrimination as between places the power is not taken away, but a very large latitude is allowed by my bill for discriminations in favor of cheap freights for long hauls as against short hauls.

Thus, if a road is 1,000 miles in length, while there is nothing in the bill that fixes the rates of charges, or limiting the power of railroad companies in this respect, except that their charges shall be reasonable, and that they shall not charge more for hauling a given amount and quality of freight 100 or 500 miles than for 1,000 miles; the bill has been argued against because it discriminates against long hauls. It in fact discriminates against short hauls to a greater extent than is believed to be equitable, but we found it difficult to fix upon a more equitable rule.

Let me say here that it is marvelous to hear gentlemen on this floor say that it is unjust not to allow freight carriage from Saint Louis to New York, or from Chicago to New York, at rates cheaper than from Harrisburg to New York or from Albany to New York. I say it is marvelous. What right has the shipper to complain if for a thousand miles his freights are carried as cheap as they can be carried for a hundred miles? All the committees that have acted on this subject have considered that provision of the bill carefully and fully, and while the railroad attorneys and lobbyists have all the time denounced it and urged that it is unjust, I venture the expression that there is not an honest disinterested man in this land who, upon examination of this provision, will not give his assent to it, unless he demands that freights shall be carried a thousand miles for a less price than they can be carried a hundred miles.

The committee felt that in allowing the discriminations for short hauls they have gone beyond what the rules of right and equity demand; but they felt they could not limit the rate to so much per mile for long and for short hauls, because that would be to discriminate against the long hauls and to do injustice to the railroads, for the same loading and unloading and the same handling would have to take place for the long as for the short haul. And we only adopted the discrimination of this bill against short hauls on account of the difficulty of fixing a more equitable rule in a practicable form. So that all that has been said about discrimination against long hauls will be seen on fair investigation of the bill to be without foundation. It will be found that the discriminations instead of being against the long hauls are against the short hauls.

I apprehend when we get to the bottom it will be found that the purpose of those who oppose this is to secure the carriage of freight on long hauls from the competing points at less rates than the railroads can afford to carry it for, and then increasing the rate of freight on the intermediate shipments to make up the loss of revenue sustained on the long haul. One of the effects of that policy is to invite the railroads to attempt a scramble for commerce that does not legitimately belong to them—to contend with each other for that commerce that does not belong to them, and, by rebates, by cutting the rates, by frauds and deceptive practices upon each other and upon the country, to do their business at the expense of the shippers at intermediate points. There is no escape from this. Gentlemen may argue it as they please; but if you go to the bottom of their objection to this it is that they want their freights hauled a thousand miles at rates cheaper than others can be hauled a hundred miles.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does my friend go so far as to say that there is no exception at all to the principle he has just laid down?

Mr. REAGAN. I do unhesitatingly say that there ought to be no exception to this rule of justice, and whenever my friend seeks, as others have done, to open the door to discrimination, rebates, and drawbacks, and makes the railroad companies the judges who are to decide the rights and interests of the people, he will perpetrate a wrong upon the people.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is not necessary, is it?

Mr. REAGAN. There may be differences of opinion. I do not undertake to control the gentleman's opinion. I only undertake to give the House the reasons for mine.

Mr. LONG. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to ask him whether his bill does not permit as large a charge for a hundred miles as for a thousand?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; it does.

Mr. LONG. Then why does not the gentleman's bill permit the sacrifice of the shorter routes to the longer?

Mr. REAGAN. I have already said that it does discriminate against the short routes.

Mr. LONG. Then the gentleman's bill is a discrimination against short routes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does not Jay Gould discriminate against short routes?

Mr. REAGAN. The bill does discriminate against the shorter hauls. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] is a great advocate of cheap rates for long hauls; yet it has been shown in this debate, as will be seen by reference to the RECORD, that the rates of transportation are higher per ton per mile in New England than they are even in the South and West.

Fifth. It requires the posting up of schedules of rates of charges, and provides a penalty for charging more or less than schedule rates. This provision is absolutely necessary in any legislation destined to protect the people against excessive charges and discriminations by railroad companies. With schedules of charges posted up for inspection, every citizen would be advised as to what the charges would be upon the shipment of his merchandise. This would be fair, it would be just, it would be reasonable, and no fair or just man could reasonably object to it.

I ask what there is in this provision that is harsh or unreasonable or that would interfere with the laws of trade or with the best interests of the country? Is it to be assumed that these corporations are above the authority of the Government and are beyond the reach of the law? Shall we not hold them amenable to the law for its violation and for the violation of the rules of right and reason, just as we hold all other persons, natural and artificial, down to obedience to the law?

I am obliged to say that the declamation to which I refer, it seems to me, has and can have but one object, and that is to confuse the minds of those who are called upon to legislate upon this subject, and to deceive and bewilder the public.

It has been objected that the requirement which I urge would impose a burden upon the railroads. In answer to that I desire to say that every railroad professes to do that very thing now; but their obedience to their schedule is the exception, not the rule of their conduct. I propose to make them put up a schedule and to make it the rule to obey the schedule. I propose they shall cease to swindle and to defraud one another and the people. I propose that we shall compel them to charge no more and no less than the schedule rates, and punish them if they do charge more or less. As common carriers, deriving their franchises and their right to charge at all from the political authority of the country, they owe it to the country to be honest and fair and not to discriminate as between citizens—not to make their partiality and their friendships the measure of their conduct and their duty to the public.

In conclusion, I have to express my gratification that after years of struggle and labor we have at last got this matter before the people's representatives, where they, on their responsibility to their constituents, can act upon it and provide such legislation as will remedy the evils complained of, and compel obedience to just and necessary regulations. [Loud applause.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] whether I was correct in understanding him to say that he would incorporate in his remarks at the proper place the constitutional provision of the State of Pennsylvania upon the subject of railroads and canals—article 17 of the constitution of 1873.

Mr. REAGAN. I will do so.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will publish with his remarks all the clauses of this article, by which the House can see exactly what the constitution of Pennsylvania provides for—that there shall be no undue discrimination against any individual in reference either to freight or passage.

Mr. REAGAN. It provides that more shall not be charged for a shorter than a longer haul.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I only regret that the gentleman, when he referred to the constitutional provisions of the State of Pennsylvania on this subject, did not have them read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson;

A bill (S. 2455) to repeal section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and Joint resolution (S. R. 100) authorizing the printing of certain naval and military reports.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce and to regulate such commerce.

Mr. REAGAN. In obedience to the agreement heretofore entered into, I now demand the previous question upon the two amendments I have offered to this bill. But before the vote is taken, as a number of gentlemen desire to print remarks in the RECORD upon this subject, I ask unanimous consent that such gentlemen as wish to exercise this privilege may be permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none, and general leave to print remarks on this bill is granted.

In accordance with an agreement made by the House on the 12th instant, general debate on this bill is now closed. It was further provided by the agreement that upon the close of general debate there should be a vote upon the adoption of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Texas. If that substitute should be agreed to, it will then be open to amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule. If it be disagreed to, the House will proceed to consider the original bill, with the right of amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule.

Mr. REAGAN. It was agreed that I should call the previous question on the two amendments I have indicated, and that afterward we should proceed under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order of the House which has just been stated by the Chair has all the effect of the previous question. Under that order general debate is now closed; and the vote which the Chair has just indicated will be taken.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is the understanding, I believe, that we are now to vote whether we shall take up the substitute and go through with it under the five-minute rule, or whether we shall take up in the same way the committee's bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is on agreeing to the substitute submitted by the gentleman from Texas. If that substitute be agreed to by the House, it will then be open for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule. If disagreed to, the original bill will be before the House for that purpose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. I do not understand the question that way. My understanding is, the first question to be voted on will be the motion to strike out.

Mr. REAGAN. The first seven sections of the committee's bill and insert my substitute in lieu thereof.

Mr. LONG. That is the first question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The effect of this is simply a vote according to the order of the House as to preference between the committee's bill and the substitute.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all there is of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the question again. If this be agreed to, it will bring the substitute before the House for consideration under the five-minute rule, subject to debate and amendment. If disagreed to, the committee's bill will be before the House for debate and amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. We will save time by calling the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. I understand the motion now to be to substitute Mr. REAGAN'S bill for the first seven sections of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair. If agreed to, Mr. REAGAN'S substitute will be before the House under the five-minute rule for amendment and debate.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 142, nays 98, not voting 83; as follows:

YEAS—142.

Alexander,	Eldredge,	McComas,	Smalls,
Anderson,	English,	McMillin,	Snyder,
Bagley,	Ferrell,	Millard,	Springer,
Ballentine,	Foran,	Miller, J. F.	Stewart, Charles
Barksdale,	Forney,	Mills,	Stockslager,
Beach,	Fyan,	Morrison,	Storm,
Bennett,	Geddes,	Moulton,	Sumner, C. A.
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Muldrow,	Taylor, J. M.
Blount,	Glascock,	Murphy,	Thompson,
Bratton,	Goff,	Murray,	Throckmorton,
Breckinridge,	Green,	Neece,	Townshend,
Buchanan,	Halsell,	Nelson,	Tucker,
Buckner,	Hancock,	Nicholls,	Tully,
Burnes,	Hardeman,	Nutting,	Turner, H. G.
Cabell,	Hatch, W. H.	Oates,	Turner, Oscar
Caldwell,	Hemphill,	O'Ferrall,	Van Alstyne,
Campbell, J. E.	Henley,	Patton,	Van Eaton,
Campbell, J. M.	Herbert,	Payson,	Wallace,
Candler,	Hewitt, G. W.	Peel,	Ward,
Carleton,	Holman,	Pettibone,	Warner, Richard
Clay,	Hopkins,	Pierce,	Weaver,
Clements,	Hunt,	Pryor,	Wellborn,
Cobb,	James,	Randall,	White, J. D.
Collins,	Jones, B. W.	Ray, G. W.	Wilkins,
Cook,	Jones, J. H.	Reagan,	Williams,
Cosgrove,	Jones, J. K.	Reese,	Willis,
Cox, W. R.	Jones, J. T.	Riggs,	Wilson, W. L.
Crisp,	Jordan,	Robertson,	Winans, E. B.
Culberson, D. B.	Kleiner,	Rogers, J. H.	Winans, John
Cullen,	Lamb,	Rogers, W. F.	Wolford,
Davidson,	Lanham,	Rosecrans,	Wood,
Davis, L. H.	Le Fevre,	Scales,	Worthington,
Dibrell,	Lewis,	Shively,	Yaple,
Dockery,	Lore,	Singleton,	York.
Dowd,	Lovering,	Skinner, C. R.
Dunn,	Lowry,	Skinner, T. G.

NAYS—98.

Adams, G. E.	Breitung,	Cannon,	Cutcheon,
Atkinson,	Brewer, F. B.	Chase,	Dargan,
Barr,	Brewer, J. H.	Clardy,	Davis, G. R.
Boutelle,	Brown, W. W.	Converse,	Davis, R. T.
Bowen,	Browne, T. M.	Culbertson, W. W.	Deuster,
Dibble,	Holton,	O'Neill, Charles	Stevens,
Eaton,	Horr,	O'Neill, J. J.	Stewart, J. W.
Elliott,	Houseman,	Parker,	Strait,
Evans,	Hurd,	Payne,	Struble,
Everhart,	Johnson,	Perkins,	Talbott,
Finerty,	Kean,	Peters,	Taylor, E. B.
Funston,	Keifer,	Phelps,	Thomas,
Greenleaf,	Lacey,	Potter,	Tillman,
Hanback,	Laird,	Rankin,	Wadsworth,
Harmer,	Lawrence,	Ranney,	Wait,
Hatch, H. H.	Libbey,	Reed,	Wakefield,
Haynes,	Long,	Rice,	Warner, A. J.
Henderson, D. B.	Lyman,	Robinson, J. S.	Washburn,
Henderson, T. J.	McCoid,	Rockwell,	Wemple,
Hepburn,	Milliken,	Rowell,	White, Milo
Hewitt, A. S.	Mitchell,	Ryan,	Whiting,
Hiscock,	Morrill,	Seymour,	Wilson, James
Hitt,	Morse,	Smith, A. H.	Woodward.
Hoblitzell,	Mutchler,	Smith, H. Y.
Holmes,	O'Hara,	Stephenson,

NOT VOTING—83.

Adams, J. J.	Covington,	Houk,	Pusey,
Aiken,	Cox, S. S.	Howey,	Ray, Ossian
Arnot,	Curtin,	Hutchins,	Robinson, W. E.
Barbour,	Dingley,	Jeffords,	Russell,
Bayne,	Dorsheimer,	Kelley,	Seney,
Belford,	Dunham,	Kellogg,	Shaw,
Belmont,	Ellis,	Ketcham,	Shelley,
Bingham,	Ellwood,	King,	Slocum,
Bisbee,	Ermentrout,	McAdoo,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Fiedler,	McCormick,	Spriggs,
Bland,	Findlay,	Matson,	Steele,
Boyle,	Follett,	Maybury,	Stone,
Brainerd,	Garrison,	Miller, S. H.	Sumner, D. H.
Broadhead,	George,	Money,	Taylor, J. D.
Brumm,	Graves,	Morgan,	Valentine,
Budd,	Guenther,	Muller,	Vance,
Burleigh,	Hammond,	Ochiltree,	Weller,
Campbell, Felix	Hardy,	Paige,	Wise, G. D.
Cassidy,	Hart,	Poland,	Wise, J. S.
Chalmers,	Hill,	Post,	Young.
Connolly,	Hooper,	Price,

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BEACH. I move by unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MCADOO said: Mr. Speaker, I was called out and did not think the bill would come to a vote as soon as it has. I wish to say now if I had been present when the vote was taken and had recorded my name I would have voted in the affirmative on the substitute moved by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. FOLLETT with Mr. BLACKBURN, on this vote.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. HART, on this bill. If present, Mr. HART would vote for Mr. REAGAN'S substitute. If that bill failed, he would vote for the committee's bill and Mr. PAIGE would vote against both bills.

Mr. BUDD with Mr. GEORGE, on Mr. REAGAN'S substitute.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE with Mr. KELLEY, for to-day.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. FINDLAY, on the interstate-commerce bill. Mr. COX, of New York, would vote for the substitute and Mr. FINDLAY against it.

Mr. HILL with Mr. CHALMERS, on this bill.

Mr. ERMENTROUT and Mr. PRICE, for this day.

Mr. WELLER and Mr. HOUK, for this day.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the affirmative, and regret that I am compelled to withdraw my vote. I voted hoping that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. RAY] would return to the House before his name was called. He and I, under the order of the House, have to-day been attending the ceremonies at the Executive Mansion relating to the opening of the exposition at New Orleans.

Mr. HAMMOND and Mr. BRUMM, for this day.

Mr. OCHILTREE and Mr. MCCORMICK, for this day.

Mr. SHELLEY and Mr. BISBEE, for this day.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I wish to say if I had not been paired I would have voted for the Reagan bill.

Mr. POST, of Pennsylvania, with Mr. BRAINERD, for this day.

Mr. BRAINERD. Mr. Speaker, I voted under misapprehension, not supposing I was paired, and therefore withdraw my vote. I voted in the negative upon the Reagan bill and would have voted in the affirmative upon the other bill. As it is I now desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with my colleague [Mr. POST].

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By previous order of the House, the question will next be taken on striking out the seven remaining sections of the committee's bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 118, noes 68.

Mr. RICE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered—one-fifth not having voted in the affirmative.

So the motion was agreed to; and the remaining sections of the committee's bill were stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. REAGAN'S substitute is now before the House for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. PETERS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2041) granting right of way to the city of Newport, R. I., over the breakwater of Goat Island;

A bill (S. 2402) authorizing the Secretary of State to procure duplicates of certain French and American medals; and Joint resolution (S. R. 101) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the first section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged alone or associated with others in the transportation of property by railroad from one State or Territory to or through one or more other States or Territories of the United States, or to or from any foreign country, directly or indirectly to charge to or receive from any person or persons any greater or less rate or amount of freight, compensation, or reward than is charged to or received from any other person or persons for like and contemporaneous service in the carrying, receiving, delivering, storing, or handling of the same. All charges for such services shall be reasonable. And all persons engaged as aforesaid shall furnish, without discrimination, the same facilities for the carriage, receiving, delivery, storage, and handling of all property of like character carried by him or them, and shall perform with equal expedition the same kind of services connected with the contemporaneous transportation thereof as aforesaid. No break, stoppage, or interruption, nor any contract, agreement, or understanding, shall be made to prevent the carriage of any property from being and being treated as one continuous carriage, in the meaning of this act, from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such stoppage, interruption, contract, arrangement, or understanding was made in good faith for some practical and necessary purpose, without any intent to avoid or interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the previous question on the adoption of that section.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows he can not do that under the agreement whereby we were to act upon the substitute instead of the committee bill under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order to move the previous question until the bill has been under debate under the five-minute rule. That will be exhausted by an amendment and a speech of five minutes in favor and five minutes against it.

Mr. HORR. It was to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. REAGAN. My only desire is to avoid unnecessary delay in acting on the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule provides for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule; and when there has been a five-minute speech for and a five-minute speech against, then it will be in order for the gentleman to move his demand for the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The agreement was that we were to act upon this bill as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, whereby it was to be open to amendment and debate.

The gentleman's proposition was if the substitute should be taken up instead of the committee bill that it should be open to amendment, not only to debate under the five-minute rule, but to debate and amendment. I do not suppose that the House believed it was going to permit the measure to be voted on under such a misapprehension, if the gentleman's position is a correct one, because many members voted with the expectation of having an opportunity to amend the bill in committee when the House had determined which one it would undertake to amend.

Now I propose to amend line 5 by adding, after the word "railroad"——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not recognized at this time for an amendment. The gentleman from Texas has demanded the previous question. The Chair decides that it is not in order at this time, but understands that the gentleman from Illinois desires recognition to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. My amendment is to another section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to add, in line 5, after the word "railroad," the words "or by water way;" so that it will read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged alone or associated with others in the transportation of property by railroad or water way from one State or Territory to or through one or more other States, &c.

I offer this amendment so that this section of the bill should provide both for railroad and steamboat transportation upon our rivers and lakes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire also to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left has the floor.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I offer this, Mr. Speaker, so that in case this bill becomes a law it would apply to all persons engaged in transportation by whatever means they may employ. I think if we apply the provisions of this bill to the railroads, we had better make the law a little broader so as to include the water ways of the country, and have uniformity in the law, which will reach all modes of transportation as well as all persons engaged in the business, whether of transporting freights or passengers.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to embrace within the provisions of this bill the water ways. On that I wish to say only a word. That question has been considered by the committee and determined against on the ground that the water ways are open public highways, free to all navigators. They are not monopolies, and the competition upon them will regulate itself. They stand upon an entirely different footing from the railroads which we are seeking to regulate and which afford no free competition.

Upon this amendment I ask the previous question.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a word only in reply.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Regular order!

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to say in response to the statement of the gentleman from Texas that the water ways of the country are free to all and open to competition; that as a matter of fact there may be great monopoly in transportation upon them, and as onerous charges as any made by the railroad companies of which he complains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas move the previous question upon this amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. I do, upon the section and the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I desire to know what the rule is under which we are considering this bill. I have no objection to this proposition being voted upon, but I think the gentleman will not carry out the spirit of the agreement or the order under which we are considering this measure in Committee of the Whole if this motion for the previous question is adopted, thereby cutting off further amendment or debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Texas can move the previous question upon this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And on the section?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not upon the section at this stage of the proceedings.

The question will be taken upon ordering the previous question on the adoption of the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 114.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. REAGAN were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 9, noes 157.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "railroad," insert the words "or by pipe-line or lines;" so that it will read:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged alone or associated with others in the transportation of property by railroad, or by pipe-line or lines, from one State or Territory," &c.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire simply to make a word of explanation in support of that amendment.

Gentlemen here may not be generally familiar with transportation by common carrier under what is known as the pipe-line system. I believe the system is practiced only in the States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and in New York, and for the transportation of oil. It was the abuse or discrimination by railroad companies of that traffic that caused the inauguration of this agitation. There are several pipe-lines carrying oil as common carriers through these States that I have mentioned and which come properly under the provisions of this bill; and this amendment is simply to make its provisions applicable to that class.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUDD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the word "is," in the ninth line, the words "by him or them;" so that it will read:

From any person or persons any greater or less rate or amount of freight compensation or reward than is by him or them charged to or received from, &c.

This is simply to correct what seems to have been an omission in the bill. It is probably an oversight, and was left out in the Printing Office. As the bill now reads he can not charge more or less for the same service whether it is performed by means of the railroad or by water transportation, and I think the gentleman from Texas will see the propriety of incorporating that amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. O'HARA. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "reasonable," in section 1, line 13, the following:

"And any person or persons having purchased a ticket to be conveyed from one State to another, or paid the required fare, shall receive the same treatment and be afforded equal facilities and accommodations as are furnished all other persons holding tickets of the same class without discrimination."

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, the amendment I have offered provides that whenever any person purchases a ticket or pays an amount of money as fare to the officer or agent of any railroad corporation in the United States for a continuous passage from one State to another, that person shall be entitled to the same facilities, privileges, accommodations, and advantages that any other person or persons holding the same class of ticket is accorded and entitled to, this and nothing more.

Congress has legislated for the protection of property; it has provided by law how dumb brutes shall be cared for, as evidenced by section 4386 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

No railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals are conveyed from one State to another, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals from one State to another, shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description, for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding, for a period of at least five consecutive hours.

In the bill now under consideration and so ably championed by the honorable gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], he and his friends ask this House (and properly so) to protect shippers of goods, wares, and merchandise from unjust charges, conditions, and discriminations now imposed upon them by the railroad corporations of the country, and daily, for the several days on which this bill has been considered, its friends almost with one accord have proclaimed to the country their intention to abate and stop what they term the inequality of rates between the "long and short haul."

In the face of the many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the right of Congress to regulate commerce between the States none can deny at this date the constitutional right of Congress so to do, nor will any member upon the floor of this House presume to deny the constitutional right of Congress to ingraft the provisions of this amendment to the laws of the United States, and particularly to the bill now under consideration.

In the celebrated Passenger Case, Norris vs. Boston, Justice Daniel uses this language:

The power to regulate commerce includes the regulation of the vessel as well as the cargo and the manner of using the vessel.

Now, sir, if Congress has the right to regulate the using of the vessel it certainly has the right to regulate the using of the cars, and if it has the right to regulate the use of freight cars, a proposition which every friend of the bill admits, then it must certainly follow that it unqualifiedly has the same right to regulate the use of passenger cars.

In Brown vs. State of Maryland the court declares "that the commercial grant of power should be as extensive as the mischief."

Mr. Speaker, would time and opportunity permit I might cite a large number of decisions and authorities in strict accord with the two already cited.

Now an evil exists, and none will deny that discriminations are made unjustly, and to a great disadvantage, between persons holding the same class of tickets who are compelled to travel on business from one State to another, and perchance across several States, en route to their destination in another State. I therefore hold it to be not only within the power but the imperative duty of Congress to abate the evil and protect all classes of citizens from discriminations in any and every from.

This amendment simply proposes that, should any person purchase a first-class ticket or a ticket of any of the several classes sold by a railroad corporation in the United States for a passage over its road or any of its connections for a continuous passage to some point in an adjacent or some other State, whenever he or she arrives within any of the States necessary to be traveled over they shall not be subjected to any discrimination or molestation not imposed upon all other persons holding tickets of the same grade or class or who has paid the same amount of money for transportation.

Mr. Speaker, this is not class legislation. I do not nor would I ask such. It is not a race question, nor is it a political action. It rises far above all these. It is plain, healthy legislation, strictly in keeping with the enlightened sentiment and spirit of the age in which we live; it is legislation looking to and guarding the rights of every citizen of this great Republic, however humble may be his station in our social scale.

Having heretofore provided (as we ought to have done) for the protection of dumb brutes while in transitu, and as we are now providing against discriminations in freight rates by the railroad corporations of the country, let us come nobly forward and in this bill also throw a shield around the citizen's rights.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not doubt the power asserted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA]. But the subject of transportation of persons has never been considered by the committee. The committee did not undertake to examine into that subject with the care necessary to a clear comprehension of it; and I trust the House will not undertake to enlarge the bill so as to make it embrace that subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. O'HARA. I call for the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOPKINS. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 97, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—134.

Adams, G. E.	George,	Lyman,	Smith, H. Y.
Anderson,	Goff,	McCoid,	Spriggs,
Atkinson,	Greenleaf,	McComas,	Springer,
Bagley,	Hanback,	Millard,	Stephenson,
Barr,	Harmer,	Milliken,	Stevens,
Beach,	Hatch, H. H.	Mitchell,	Stewart, J. W.
Blount,	Haynes,	Morrill,	Stone,
Boutelle,	Henderson, D. B.	Morse,	Strait,
Breitung,	Henderson, T. J.	Murphy,	Struble,
Brewer, F. B.	Hepburn,	Murray,	Sumner, C. A.
Brewer, J. H.	Hewitt, A. S.	Nelson,	Taylor, J. D.
Brown, W. W.	Hiscock,	Nutting,	Thomas,
Browne, T. M.	Hitt,	O'Hara,	Van Alstyne,
Buckner,	Hoblitzell,	O'Neill, Charles	Wadsworth,
Budd,	Holman,	Parker,	Wait,
Campbell, J. E.	Holmes,	Payne,	Wakefield,
Campbell, J. M.	Hopkins,	Payson,	Ward,
Cannon,	Houseman,	Perkins,	Warner, A. J.
Carleton,	Howey,	Peters,	Washburn,
Chace,	James,	Pettibone,	Weaver,
Converse,	Johnson,	Potter,	Wemple,
Culbertson, W. W.	Jones, B. W.	Pusey,	White, J. D.
Cullen,	Jordan,	Ranney,	White, Milo
Cutcheon,	Kean,	Ray, G. W.	Whiting,
Dargan,	Keifer,	Reed,	Wilkins,
Davis, G. R.	Lacey,	Rice,	Wilson, James
Davis, R. T.	Laird,	Robinson, J. S.	Wilson, W. L.
Eldredge,	Lamb,	Rockwell,	Winans, E. B.
Elliott,	Lawrence,	Rosecrans,	Winans, John
Evans,	Le Fevre,	Rowell,	Woodward,
Everhart,	Libbey,	Ryan,	Worthington,
Ferrell,	Long,	Seymour,	Yaple.
Follett,	Lovering,	Skinner, C. R.
Funston,	Lowry,	Smith, A. H.

NAYS—97.

Alexander,	Dibrell,	Lore,	Singleton,
Ballentine,	Dockery,	McMillin,	Skinner, T. G.
Barksdale,	Dowd,	Miller, J. F.	Snyder,
Bennett,	Dunn,	Mills,	Stewart, Charles
Blackburn,	Ellis,	Morrison,	Stockslager,
Blanchard,	Forney,	Muldrow,	Storm,
Boyle,	Fyan,	Mutchler,	Taylor, J. M.
Bratton,	Gibson,	Neece,	Thompson,
Breckinridge,	Glascock,	Oates,	Throckmorton,
Buchanan,	Green,	O'Ferrall,	Tillman,
Cabell,	Halsell,	O'Neill, J. J.	Tucker,
Caldwell,	Hancock,	Patton,	Tully,
Candler,	Hardeman,	Pierce,	Turner, H. G.
Clardy,	Hatch, W. H.	Peel,	Turner, Oscar
Clay,	Hemphill,	Pryor,	Van Eaton,
Clements,	Henley,	Randall,	Wallace,
Cobb,	Herbert,	Rankin,	Warner, Richard
Cook,	Hewitt, G. W.	Reagan,	Wellborn,
Cosgrove,	Hunt,	Reese,	Williams,
Cox, W. R.	Jones, J. H.	Riggs,	Willis,
Crisp,	Jones, J. K.	Robertson,	Wolford,
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. T.	Rogers, J. H.	Wood.
Davidson,	Kleiner,	Rogers, W. F.
Davis, L. H.	Lanham,	Scales,
Dibble,	Lewis,	Shiveley,

NOT VOTING—92.

Adams, J. J.	Curtin,	Horr,	Post,
Aiken,	Deuster,	Houk,	Price,
Arnot,	Dingley,	Hurd,	Ray, Ossian
Barbour,	Dorsheimer,	Hutchins,	Robinson, W. E.
Bayne,	Dunham,	Jeffords,	Russell,
Belford,	Eaton,	Kelley,	Seney,
Belmont,	Ellwood,	Kellogg,	Shaw,
Bingham,	English,	Ketcham,	Shelley,
Bisbee,	Ermentrout,	King,	Slocum,
Bland,	Fiedler,	McAdoo,	Smalls,
Bowen,	Findlay,	McCormick,	Spooner,
Brainerd,	Finerty,	Matson,	Steele,
Broadhead,	Forney,	Maybury,	Sumner, D. H.
Brumm,	Garrison,	Miller, S. H.	Talbott,
Burleigh,	Geddes,	Money,	Taylor, E. B.
Burnes,	Graves,	Morgan,	Townshend,
Campbell, Felix	Guenther,	Moulton,	Valentine,
Cassidy,	Hammond,	Muller,	Vance,
Chalmers,	Hardy,	Nicholls,	Weller,
Collins,	Hart,	Ochiltree,	Wise, G. D.
Connolly,	Hill,	Paige,	Wise, J. S.
Covington,	Holton,	Phelps,	York,
Cox, S. S.	Hooper,	Poland,	Young.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BEACH, by unanimous consent the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

Mr. LOWRY. I desire to change my vote from "no" to "ay."

Mr. BLOUNT. I change my vote from "no" to "ay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire, with Mr. MATSON, for this day.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. YORK, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. GUENTHER, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. HORR, for this day.

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. I desire to state that if I were not paired I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. O'HARA. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. REAGAN. And pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CHACE. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to withhold that motion for a moment that I may ask unanimous consent for the passage of a bill.

Many members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 138, noes 73.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and Mr. HEPBURN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 56 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 84, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—139.

Alexander,	Dunn,	Lewis,	Skinner, T. G.
Bagley,	Eldredge,	Lore,	Snyder,
Ballentine,	Elliott,	Lovering,	Spriggs,
Barksdale,	Ellis,	Lowry,	Springer,
Bennett,	Ferrell,	McAdoo,	Stevens,
Blackburn,	Finerty,	McMillin,	Stewart, Charles
Blanchard,	Follett,	Miller, J. F.	Stockslager,
Blount,	Forney,	Mills,	Storm,
Boyle,	Fyan,	Mitchell,	Sumner, C. A.
Bratton,	Gibson,	Morrison,	Taylor, J. M.
Breckinridge,	Glascock,	Morse,	Thompson,
Buchanan,	Green,	Muldrow,	Throckmorton,
Cabell,	Greenleaf,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Caldwell,	Halsell,	Murray,	Tucker,
Campbell, J. E.	Hancock,	Mutchler,	Tully,
Candler,	Hardeman,	Neece,	Turner, H. G.
Carleton,	Hatch, W. H.	O'Ferrall,	Turner, Oscar
Clardy,	Hemphill,	O'Neill, J. J.	Van Alstyne,
Clay,	Henley,	Patton,	Van Eaton,
Clements,	Herbert,	Peel,	Wallace,
Cobb,	Hewitt, A. S.	Pierce,	Warner, A. J.
Collins,	Hewitt, G. W.	Potter,	Warner, Richard
Converse,	Holman,	Pryor,	Weaver,
Cook,	Hopkins,	Pusey,	Wellborn,
Cosgrove,	Houseman,	Randall,	Wemple,
Cox, W. R.	Hunt,	Reagan,	Wilkins,
Culberson, D. B.	Hurd,	Reese,	Williams,
Dargan,	Jones, B. W.	Riggs,	Willis,
Davidson,	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, J. H.	Wilson, W. L.
Davis, L. H.	Jones, J. K.	Rogers, W. F.	Winans, E. B.
Deuster,	Jones, J. T.	Rosecrans,	Wise, G. D.
Dibble,	Jordan,	Scales,	Wolford,
Dibrell,	Kleiner,	Seymour,	Wood,
Dockery,	Lanham,	Shively,	Worthington.
Dowd,	Le Fevre,	Singleton,

NAYS—84.

Adams, G. E.	George,	Long,	Ryan,
Atkinson,	Goff,	Lyman,	Skinner, C. R.
Barr,	Hanback,	McCoid,	Smith, A. H.
Beach,	Harmer,	McComas,	Smith, H. Y.
Boutelle,	Hatch, H. H.	McCormick,	Stephenson,
Breitung,	Haynes,	Millard,	Stone,
Brewer, F. B.	Henderson, D. B.	Milliken,	Strait,
Brewer, J. H.	Henderson, T. J.	Morrill,	Struble,
Browne, T. M.	Hepburn,	Nelson,	Taylor, J. D.
Brown, W. W.	Hiscock,	Nutting,	Thomas,
Budd,	Hitt,	O'Hara,	Wadsworth,
Cannon,	Holmes,	O'Neill, Charles	Wait,
Chace,	Howey,	Parker,	Wakefield,
Culbertson, W. W.	James,	Payne,	Ward,
Cutcheon,	Johnson,	Perkins,	Washburn,
Davis, G. R.	Kean,	Peters,	White, J. D.
Davis, R. T.	Keifer,	Pettibone,	White, Milo
English,	Lacey,	Ray, G. W.	Whiting,
Evans,	Laird,	Reed,	Wilson, James
Everhart,	Lawrence,	Rice,	Woodward,
Funston,	Libbey,	Rockwell,	Yaple.

NOT VOTING—100.

Adams, J. J.	Crisp,	Hutchins,	Ray, Ossian
Aiken,	Cullen,	Jeffords,	Robertson,
Anderson,	Curtin,	Kelley,	Robinson, J. S.
Arnot,	Dingley,	Kellogg,	Robinson, W. E.
Barbour,	Dorsheimer,	Ketcham,	Rowell,
Bayne,	Dunham,	King,	Russell,
Belford,	Eaton,	Lamb,	Seney,
Belmont,	Ellwood,	Matson,	Shaw,
Bingham,	Ermentrout,	Maybury,	Shelley,
Bisbee,	Fiedler,	Miller, S. H.	Slocum,
Bland,	Findlay,	Money,	Smalls,
Bowen,	Foran,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Brainerd,	Garrison,	Moulton,	Steele,
Broadhead,	Geddes,	Muller,	Stewart, J. W.
Brumm,	Graves,	Nicholls,	Sumner, D. H.
Buckner,	Guenther,	Oates,	Talbott,
Burleigh,	Hammond,	Ochiltree,	Taylor, E. B.
Burnes,	Hardy,	Paige,	Townshend,
Campbell, Felix	Hart,	Payson,	Valentine,
Campbell, J. M.	Hill,	Phelps,	Vance,
Cassidy,	Hoblitzell,	Poland,	Weller,
Chalmers,	Holton,	Post,	Winans, John
Connolly,	Hooper,	Price,	Wise, J. S.
Covington,	Horr,	Rankin,	York,
Cox, S. S.	Houk,	Ranney,	Young.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. CRISP with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, for the remainder of this day.

EXPEDITION TO POINT BARROW, ALASKA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent (before announcing the result of the vote on the motion to adjourn), laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, the report of the international polar expedition to Point Barrow, Alaska; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. O'HARA. I ask unanimous consent to print the remainder of my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the remainder of his remarks upon his amendment to the pending bill. Is there objection?

Mr. DIBBLE objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection; and there being no further objection, leave was granted.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MULLER, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. SLOCUM, for five days, on account of important business.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that for the purpose of correcting an error in the engrossment of the bill passed yesterday, to establish a department of agriculture, it is necessary that the bill should be recalled from the Senate. The Chair therefore asks that the resolution which the Clerk will read be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. REAGAN that the House adjourn was then announced as above recorded; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Papers relating to the claim of Mary H. Bush—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BARR: Petition of Lincoln Post, No. 140, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, for publication in Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIN: Petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the establishment of a home for disabled volunteer soldiers in that State—to the same committee.

By Mr. EATON: Petition of the Ætna Insurance Company and others; of Brown, Thompson & Company and others, citizens of Hartford, Conn., for the passage of a bankrupt law—severally to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Petition of Mrs. Ann E. Gridley, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. A. S. HEWITT: Petition of the bevelers of plate glass, for reform in the tariff on beveled plate—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Michael Cahill, M. D., and others, citizens of New York, for an investigation of a material proposed by him to obtain rain by art—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOPKINS: Petition of 150 citizens of New Hampshire and Massachusetts, requesting the passage of the resolution of Hon. JAMES H. HOPKINS relative to the transportation of cattle—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PRYOR: Papers relating to the claim of Stephen J. Mathews, of James M. Peters, and of Reuben Copeland—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. F. ROGERS: Petition of J. Madison Wells, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. WAIT: Petition of the Providence and Stonington Railroad Company and others, asking that a light-ship be located at or near the Ram Island Reef, in Long Island Sound—to the Committee on Commerce.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented, and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Of citizens of Carroll County, Missouri.

By Mr. ANDERSON: Of 10 citizens of Glenwood, Kans., and of 64 citizens of Morganville, Kans.

By Mr. BEACH: Of citizens of Orange County, New York.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Of 106 citizens and ex-soldiers of Boston Station, Ind.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: Of W. W. Manning and 62 others.

By Mr. CARLETON: Of citizens of Lapeer County, Michigan.
By Mr. COOK: Of John Q. A. Davison and 100 others.
By Mr. COSGROVE: Of citizens of Excelsior Springs, Mo.
By Mr. CUTCHEON: Of 419 citizens of Mason County; of N. De-Long and 98 citizens of Muskegon; of M. B. Houghton and 22 citizens of Tustin; and of 40 citizens of Newaygo County, Michigan.
By Mr. DOCKERY: Of citizens of Daviess, of Harrison, of Worth, and of Clinton Counties, Missouri.
By Mr. FORAN: Of 550 veteran soldiers and citizens of East Liverpool, Martinsville, Bloomingburg, and Washington Court-House, Ohio.
By Mr. FORNEY: Of William Bray and others, citizens of De Kalb County, Alabama.
By Mr. FUNSTON: Of citizens of Armordale, Kans.
By Mr. GOFF: Of Leonard Garrison and 62 others.
By Mr. H. H. HATCH: Of citizens of Jennings, and of Oscoda, Mich.
By Mr. W. H. HATCH: Of citizens of Clarke County, Missouri.
By Mr. HAYNES: Of M. M. Collis and 80 others, ex-soldiers and sailors of Portsmouth, and of H. L. Robinson and 63 others, of Manchester, N. H.
By Mr. HOLMAN: Of D. B. Hall and 67 others, ex-soldiers and citizens of Ohio County; of Michael Herrmann and 39 ex-soldiers and citizens of Franklin County; of Selar Meade and 63 ex-soldiers and citizens of Switzerland County; and of W. H. Huffman and 51 others, of Jackson County, Indiana.
By Mr. HURD: Of F. M. Mayer and others, of Sandusky, Ohio.
By Mr. BURR W. JONES: Of William Green and others, of Albany, Wis.
By Mr. KEIFER: Of Leander Tway and 50 other soldiers, of Plain City, Ohio.
By Mr. LAWRENCE: Of citizens of Beaver County, Pennsylvania.
By Mr. LOVERING: Of Edwin T. Pike and 41 others, of Ipswich, Mass.
By Mr. McCOID: Of S. F. Small and 79 others, of Louisa County, and of F. H. Jordan and 115 others, of Des Moines County, Iowa.
By Mr. McCOMAS: Of 63 citizens of Washington County, Maryland.
By Mr. MATSON: Of Daniel P. Owen and 42 others, of Morgan County, Indiana.
By Mr. MILLARD: Of citizens of Tioga, and of Broome and of Tioga Counties, New York.
By Mr. MORRISON: Of citizens of East Saint Louis, Ill.
By Mr. MOULTON: Of 1,000 veterans of Shelby County, Illinois.
By Mr. NEECE: Of citizens of Macomb and of Henderson Counties, Illinois.
By Mr. NUTTING: Of citizens of Hannibal, N. Y.
By Mr. PARKER: Of citizens of Franklin County, New York.
By Mr. PAYNE: Of citizens of Fair Haven and of Kings Ferry, N. Y.
By Mr. PAYSON: Of citizens of Kankakee and of Woodford Counties, Illinois.
By Mr. PRICE: Of N. M. Clapp and 38 others, and of H. S. Rice and 48 others.
By Mr. G. W. RAY: Of 63 citizens of Otsego County, New York.
By Mr. REED: Of citizens of National Soldiers' Home, Maine; of Dexter, of York County, of Machias, of Oxford, of Aroostook County, of Pittston, of North Winterport, of Saint Albans, of Ashland, of Princeton, and of Franklin, Me.
By Mr. RIGGS: Of George T. Jones and others, of Milton, and of Daniel H. Gibson and others, of Patterson, Ill.
By Mr. J. S. ROBINSON: Of citizens of several counties in Ohio.
By Mr. C. R. SKINNER: Of 37 citizens of Port Leyden, N. Y., and of 57 citizens of Lowville, N. Y.
By Mr. SLOCUM: Of inmates of Soldiers' Home, New York.
By Mr. VAN ALSTYNE: Of Smith O'Brien and many others, citizens of Albany County, New York.
By Mr. WAKEFIELD: Of 40 ex-soldiers of Brown County, Minnesota.
By Mr. WAIT: Of citizens of Colchester and other towns in Connecticut.
By Mr. RICHARD WARNER: Of citizens of Franklin County, Tennessee.
By Mr. WEAVER: Of 63 citizens of Nebraska, and of 34 citizens of Nebraska.
By Mr. WOODWARD: Of citizens of La Crosse, Wis.
By Mr. YAPLE: Of Abel Lumbert and 51 others, citizens of Berrien County, Michigan.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 17, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2280) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2041) granting the right of way to the city of Newport, R. I., over the breakwater at Goat Island;

A bill (S. 2402) authorizing the Secretary of State to procure duplicates of certain French and American medals; and

Joint resolution (S. R. 101) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington monument.

SURVEY OF NICARAGUA CANAL ROUTE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of the Navy; which was read:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 17, 1884.

SIR: Responding to the resolution of the Senate of December 15, I have the honor to state that orders have been issued to Civil Engineer A. G. Menocal, Civil Engineer R. E. Peary, and Ensign Washington I. Chambers to visit Nicaragua in order to make a survey of the route for the proposed Nicaragua canal.

These orders have been issued in the exercise of the general power of this Department, under the President, to issue such orders to all officers of the Navy as may be deemed for the public interest.

The arrangements which have been made contemplate the revision of the survey made on a former occasion by Civil Engineer Menocal and the investigation of any change in route which has been suggested as possibly available for shortening the canal and diminishing its cost.

The cost of the arrangements made and contemplated, in addition to the pay and mileage of the naval officers, is expected to be $1,000 as an outfit, and about $1,000 a month during the stay of the party in Nicaragua.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. E. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Navy.

To the PRESIDENT pro tempore
of the United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. VEST. I ask that the communication be laid upon the table and printed, and I give notice that I shall call it up for the purpose of discussing the proposition advanced in it by the Secretary of the Navy that the right rests in any Department of the Government to order such an expedition without any action on the part of Congress. Let the communication lie on the table now and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the communication lie upon the table and be printed. That order will be made if there be no objection.

UNVEILING OF DU PONT STATUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of War; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, December 16, 1884.

The Secretary of War has the honor to report to Congress that the work of preparing the selected site in the city of Washington and the base for a statue of the late Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont, of the United States Navy, as required by the act of Congress approved February 25, 1882, and the making and erection of the statue, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1884, have been completed, and that the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the statue contemplated by the act approved July 7, 1884, have been arranged to take place at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of Saturday, the 20th instant, at Du Pont Circle, provision having been made for the anticipated attendance of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, United States Senate.

COAST-SURVEY REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the annual report of Professor J. E. Hilgard, Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in that work during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1884. If there be no objection the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury will be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration as to printing the tabulated matter.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the New Mexico private land claim, Canada de Cochite, No. 135, in the name of Antonio Lucero; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying document, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONAS presented a memorial of cigar-makers of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MILLER, of California, presented a petition of citizens of Napa, Cal., praying that certain relief be granted Charles Morris Blake, post-chaplain, United States Army, retired; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILSON presented a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Sioux City, Iowa; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Avoca, Iowa; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Atlantic, Iowa; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Lansing, Iowa; and a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Dubuque, Iowa, remonstrating against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty between the United States and Spain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PLATT presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Hartford, Conn.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Danbury, Conn.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Long Hill, Conn.; a memorial of cigar-makers of Norwalk, Conn.; and a memorial of cigar-makers of Ansonia, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish reciprocity treaty; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HILL presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Denver, Colo., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PIKE presented a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Manchester, N. H., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. INGALLS presented a memorial adopted at a representative meeting of cigar-makers at Humboldt, Kans., remonstrating against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HALE presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Bangor, Me., remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of officers of the United States Navy stationed at Newport, R. I., praying for certain legislation touching promotions in the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LAPHAM presented resolutions adopted at a mass-meeting of cigar-makers held in New York city, December 13, 1884, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty between Spain and the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Theodore Thomas, president of the Jersey City Wheel Foundery and Machine Works, and a petition of the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company of New York, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty between Spain and the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Trade and Transportation of the city of New York, in favor of the enactment of a law regulating interstate commerce; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I present memorials of the Cigar-makers' Union of Muscatine, Iowa; the Cigar-makers' Protection Union of Keokuk, Iowa; the Cigar-makers' Union of Dubuque, Iowa; the Cigar-makers' Union of Des Moines, Iowa; the Cigar-makers' Union of Lansing, Iowa; the Cigar-makers' Union of Atlantic, Iowa; the Cigar-makers' Union of Sioux City, Iowa; and the Cigar-makers' Union of Avoca, Iowa, remonstrating against the ratification of one of the clauses of the Spanish treaty. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether those memorials are addressed to the Senate of the United States, or to himself as a Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. A reference to the papers will show. I think some of them are addressed to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first one in the package sent to the desk is addressed to "Hon. WM. B. ALLISON, United States Senate."

Mr. ALLISON. Evidently the people who remonstrate against the treaty intended that the Senate should be placed in possession of proper information in respect to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. The reason why I ask the question is because I have received probably a dozen similar memorials, and I suppose they are all exactly in the same form—they are all printed and addressed at the caption, and then signed officially—and I have not presented them because they were addressed to me and I supposed were intended to influence my action, coming from my constituents. It was only a question as to whether they ought to be presented to the Senate or whether we should simply refer them to the committee personally. That is the only point I desire to raise.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that I supposed I was following the usual custom with reference to these remonstrances.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand the rule of the Senate, it is directly against receiving such papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri as objecting to the reception of the papers.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was simply raising the point. We all ought to act in the same way. I have no objection to the Senate receiving such papers, but I have a number that I have not presented to the Senate, and I understand that other Senators have received a number of papers of the same character.

Mr. HARRISON. I have received quite a number, and acted on the same idea with the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, under the rule of the Senate, a paper not addressed to the Senate can not be received as a petition or memorial unless by the unanimous consent of the body.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent, then, to present these papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that a number of papers presented by him be received as memorials. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The papers are received, and will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have a communication signed by the officers of an association in Winona, Minn., of the same character, which I have withheld from presentation to the Senate for the reason stated by the Senator from Missouri. In view of the change of the practice among Senators, I ask unanimous consent that the memorial be received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the paper will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent also for the privilege of presenting a number of memorials, a part of them addressed to me and some of them directed to the Senate, protesting against the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain. The first one is from the leaf-tobacco dealers, cigar manufacturers, and cigar dealers of Chicago, Ill.; the next is from the Cigar-makers' Union of Morris, Ill.; the next is from the Cigar-makers' Union of Jacksonville, Ill.; the next is from the Cigar-makers' Union of Alton, Ill.; the next are memorials from citizens of Peoria, Springfield, and Quincy, protesting against the ratification of that portion of the treaty with Spain in relation to cigars; the next is from the Chicago Trades and Labor Assembly, protesting against the ratification of the treaty with Spain; the next is from the Cigar-makers' Union of Chicago, and then from the Cigar-makers' Union of Decatur, Ill., and also from the Cigar-makers' Union of Ottawa, Ill., and then one general protest from cigar-makers all over the country against the ratification of the Spanish treaty. I ask that the memorials be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the memorials will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of 1,700 citizens of the city of New York, praying for the repeal of all laws fixing the term of certain administrative offices at four years; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent to present seven remonstrances, addressed to me but evidently intended for the Senate, against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty between some of the Spanish West India Islands and the United States. These remonstrances or resolutions have been passed and sent here by the cigar-makers of Saint Louis, of Kansas City, of Saint Joseph, of Jefferson City, of Brunswick, of Clinton, and of Springfield, Mo. I ask that they be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a memorial of the New York County committee of the People's National party, favoring the bill to prevent the importation of contract labor; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DAWES. I present a petition of the Women's National Indian Association, praying that speedy appropriation may be made for the relief of the starving Piegans, and also that the Government shall no longer delay making appropriations for the payment of just debts due to the Indians. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

LEASE OF CROW RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, some days ago in a discussion in the Senate over a resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] in reference to leased lands in the Indian Territory, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] called the attention of the Senate and of myself in particular to a rumor that there was a very large portion of the Crow reservation about being leased for a nominal sum to a syndicate for purposes of grazing, and he desired some information in reference to that rumor. What was known, what we were able to obtain up to that time, was communicated. Since then I have received, very numerously signed, I do not know by how many, but by a very large number of the citizens of Montana, a protest against the execution of the lease. It is directed to me personally. They seem to have been laboring under a mistaken idea that I hold some official position in reference to such a lease. It is, however, so in the nature of a remonstrance or petition that, notwithstanding it is addressed to me, I ask the permission of the Senate to present it as a petition to this body; and as the substance of it is very brief I ask that so much of it as refers to the substance of the remonstrance be read to the Senate in order that I may make a few remarks in regard to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks consent that the paper he has described, being in the nature of a petition, be received, and that it be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SIR: An effort is now being made by a syndicate of Colorado capitalists and cattle-men to lease the Crow reservation for a term of years, contrary to section 2116, chapter 3, page 369, Revised Statutes. We are informed and believe that the agents of these men are now endeavoring by threats and bribes to coerce the Indians into signing a paper giving their consent to such lease. Although nearly all the Crows are opposed to this lease, yet a majority of them have already given their written consent, being induced thereto by their ignorance, fears, and cupidity.

We earnestly enter our protest against the consummation of this lease and ask your intervention without delay.

* * * * * * *

HON. HENRY L. DAWES,
Chairman of Commission to treat with Crow Indians.

Mr. DAWES. At the time of the discussion alluded to I stated to the Senate that I understood the authority to execute such a lease was based upon some provision in the last agreement made by the United States with the Crow Indians in 1882. I have been unable to ascertain whether there be any such lease as that already executed, or in process, beyond rumor. There is a rumor in the Interior Department that such a lease has been executed of 3,000,000 acres of land at 1 cent an acre. It is claimed that the Indians have a right to execute the lease without reference to anybody, based upon the third of the five clauses in their agreement, made and ratified on the 11th of April, 1882, found in the Statutes, volume 22, page 43. It is in these words:

Third. That if at any time hereafter we, as a tribe, shall consent to permit cattle to be driven across our reservation or grazed thereon, the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the amount to be paid by parties so desiring to drive or graze cattle; all moneys arising from this source to be paid to us under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

What surprised me was the fact that there was no information in respect to this lease in the Interior Department, so far as I have been able to ascertain. I will offer a resolution to draw out whatever there may be. But it will be observed that no such lease can exist except under the sanction and approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

I make this public statement to quiet the apprehensions in Montana and to show that such a lease as rumor has set afloat can not possibly in my opinion exist, because it does not seem to me possible that the Interior Department could sanction such a lease; and the law has placed the responsibility for that, as for all other leases of land on Indian reservations, at the door of the Interior Department.

It is absolutely apparent that Congress can not administer the law; that Congress can not determine what is a wise lease in rental or in quantity or in condition; but it must necessarily be administered by somebody, and the responsibility for the character of that administration must rest somewhere. I do not myself see what legislation can place the Indian reservations under better care than existing legislation. That something must be done with their lands is apparent. What it ought to be can be better determined by the executive than by the legislative branch of the Government, and Congress has wisely placed it there.

The other leases that caused so much trouble rest upon the general provisions of the law and are brought like this, if not as clearly, certainly with distinction and clearness enough, under the control of the Interior Department.

I think it may be assumed that the Interior Department is not indifferent to what is going on upon the Indian reservations. It can not be possible that the Interior Department will have considered that it has done its duty if it keeps itself ignorant of what is done. It sanctions what it permits; and whatever may be wrong in administration can not be excused by saying that it is done without the direct and positive sanction of the Interior Department.

I do not make these remarks as reflecting upon the Interior Department, but to express to those who are troubled about these leases the opinion that the responsibility for their character must rest upon the administration of the Interior Department, and I have no doubt that when the attention of the Interior Department is called to the subject a proper administration of the law in reference to these leased lands will be undertaken and carried through.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair supposes this debate to be on the motion to refer the petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair will so treat it.

Mr. VEST. I suppose so. I just want to supplement what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts with the statement that at the last session of Congress, upon information which I received from very high authority in the West, I offered a resolution asking the Secretary of the Interior by what right certain bands of cattle had been permitted upon the Crow reservation, and inquiring whether the Indian agents in charge of that reservation had not made contracts with certain parties for grazing cattle there. The resolution was adopted and sent to the Interior Department, but no reply has ever been received to it.

I have received at this session of Congress a large number of letters from gentlemen whose acquaintance I formed summer before last in Montana, stating emphatically that the lease was obtained through the influence of the Indian agent and through white persons at Fort Custer, some of whom were able to speak the Crow language, and who went among the Indians and by the use of all sorts of improper means persuaded them to sign the agreement that the lands should be leased. As a matter of course, personally I know nothing about it, but it is a very remarkable fact that a transaction of this magnitude, involving a lease of 3,000,000 acres of land for less than 1 cent an acre, should have been published in the public press and should be a subject of remonstrance now by a large number of citizens of the United States and no notice whatever be taken of it by the Interior Department and it be permitted just to go on its way.

That is all I desire to say, sir, in regard to the matter.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution requesting the return to that body of the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture.

TENNESSEE JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. GARLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2728) detaching Grundy County, Tennessee, from the southern district of East Tennessee, and attaching it to the middle district of said State, and for other purposes, to report it with several amendments, and I am instructed also to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, as it is one of a local character entirely and yet of some importance to the section of the country mentioned in the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is very desirable, in view of the action taken by the House upon the question of adjournment over the holidays, that the naval appropriation bill which was reported yesterday morning should be taken up early this morning and passed, and I ask the Senator not to push the consideration of this bill until after the naval appropriation bill shall have been passed.

Mr. GARLAND. If this excites any discussion at all, I shall withdraw my request; but I do not think it will excite any debate or opposition.

Mr. HALE. With that understanding, I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, line 4, after the word "southern," to insert "division of the;" and in line 6, after the word "issuing," to insert "except as hereinafter provided;" so as to make the section read:

That hereafter the county of Grundy, in the State of Tennessee, shall be detached from the southern division of the district of East Tennessee and be attached to the middle district of Tennessee; and that all process hereafter issuing, except as hereinafter provided, against citizens of said county of Grundy from the district or circuit courts of said State shall be returnable before the district or circuit courts for the middle district of Tennessee; and that any case now pending in the district or circuit court of the United States for the southern district of East Tennessee against citizens of said county of Grundy may, at their election, be transferred to the district or circuit court for the middle district of Tennessee at Nashville.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 3, after the word "southern," to insert "division of the;" and in line 4, after the word "issuing," to insert "except as hereinafter provided;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the county of Fentress, in the middle district of Tennessee, be detached therefrom and added to the southern division of the district of East Tennessee; and hereafter all process issuing, except as hereinafter provided, against citizens of the county of Fentress from the district and circuit courts of the United States shall be returnable before said court at Chattanooga, in said State: Provided, That causes now pending in the middle district of Tennessee from Fentress County shall be determined where pending, except in cases where both parties consent to removal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add to section 2 the following:

And provided further, That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses heretofore committed in either of said counties shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill detaching Grundy County, Tennessee, from the southern division of the district of East Tennessee, and attaching it to the middle district of said State, and for other purposes."

THE RECORD FOR AMERICAN LEGATIONS.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing instruct me to report back the joint resolution (S. R. 44) directing the Public Printer to forward a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each of the American legations abroad, with certain amendments, and to ask for its immediate consideration by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the resolution just reported by him be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I simply desire to say with reference to this resolution——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent simply to make a statement in reference to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator will proceed.

Mr. MANDERSON. The joint resolution was introduced at the last session of this Congress by the then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. ANTHONY, at the request of the State Department as I understand. The cost of complying with the resolution will be but $200 or thereabouts per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Printing were, in line 4, after the word "directed," to strike out "under the instructions of" and insert "to furnish to;" in the same line, after the word "to," where it last occurs, to strike out "forward hereafter;" in line 6, after the word "RECORD," to strike out "to" and insert "for," and to add to the joint resolution "to be forwarded by the Department of State;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to furnish to the Secretary of State free of charge one copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for each of the American legations abroad, commencing at the beginning of the present session, to be forwarded by the Department of State.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the apparent necessity of amending the title, as it does not now correctly represent the contents of the joint resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that it be so amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be amended so as to read, "A joint resolution directing the Public Printer to furnish a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the Secretary of State for the use of each of the American legations abroad." The title will stand amended if there be no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2355) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 817) to permit Henry Vignaud, of Louisiana, second secretary of the legation of the United States at Paris, to receive the decoration of the Legion of Honor of France, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I am also directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio relative to foreign cheap labor, to report it back to the Senate. It should have been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, but that committee having reported a bill on the subject of cheap foreign labor, I ask that the resolution be laid on the table.

The committee were discharged from the further consideration of the resolution, and it was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 542) for the relief of John Fletcher, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1575) to provide for the payment to the legal representatives of Arvah Hopkins of the rent of certain property in Tallahassee, Fla., for the use of the Army, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1800) for the relief of Edward Corning; and

A bill (S. 1685) for the relief of Edmund Wolf.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 378) for the relief of Thomas B. Wallace, submitted an adverse report thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. SHEFFIELD, from the Committe on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 165) for the relief of William H. Gray, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

UNITED STATES JURISDICTION IN TUNIS.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a bill. The bill is quite important, but I think it will elicit no opposition, and I am instructed by the committee to ask the consideration of the Senate to it at the earliest period of time. I therefore ask the reading of the title of the bill and the consent of the Senate to its present consideration.

The bill (S. 2463) to authorize the suspension of the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction in the territories of the Bey of Tunis and to amend section 1427 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that this bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. Under the pressure which is upon me with reference to the naval appropriation bill I must object, unless on condition that this shall give rise to no debate.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am perfectly willing to accept the condition. If it gives rise to debate I shall not press it. I think it will not cause debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever the President of the United States shall receive satisfactory information that the French Government has established in and over the territories and dominions of the Bey of Tunis judicial tribunals similar in all respects to the judicial tribunals now organized in the dominions and territories of France under the laws of that country, and such as will secure to citizens of the United States within said territories of the Bey of Tunis the same impartial justice which they now enjoy there under the judicial functions exercised there by the consuls and other functionaries of this country under the laws of the United States and pursuant to international law and usage, he is hereby authorized to suspend by his proclamation the further exercise of the extraterritorial jurisdiction now claimed and exercised by the United States in Tunis, and accept for American citizens resident or sojourning in the territories of the Bey of Tunis the jurisdiction of the French judicial tribunals thus established in the territories and dominions of the Bey of Tunis.

SEC. 2. From and after the date of the proclamation of the President provided for by the first section of this act section 4127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "Tunis."

Mr. GARLAND. It would be well to put in after the reference to section 4127 some words to show to what it relates. After the words "section 4127" there should be a description of what the section relates to.

Mr. PENDLETON. Our extraterritorial jurisdiction in Tunis, as well as other countries.

Mr. GARLAND. I move to amend by inserting after "4127" the proper descriptive words.

Mr. PENDLETON. "In relation to the exercise of jurisdiction in Tunis."

Mr. GARLAND. In section 2, line 4, after the words "United States," I move to insert:

"In relation to the exercise of extraterritorial jurisdiction in Tunis."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate now proceed to consider the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask whether the order of the introduction of bills has been passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. HALE. I did intend to withhold this motion until the completion of the morning business; but it has run along now more than an hour, and it is very important that the naval appropriation bill should be taken up early to-day and sent to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that debate is not in order, but after 1 o'clock even pending the morning business under the rules it is in order to make the motion the Senator from Maine has made. Debate on that motion is not in order.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw the motion for a few minutes.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order is not yet reached. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to offer a resolution which I ask may be adopted at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Resolutions are not yet in order.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD LAND GRANT.

Mr. MORGAN. I submit the report of the committee of conference between the two Houses on House bill 7162.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama presents the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. 7162) to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes. The past action of the Senate and House of Representatives on the bill will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 3, 1884.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7162) to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company "to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes," and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. COBB, Mr. HENLEY, and Mr. PAYSON be the managers of the said conference on the part of the House.

Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 8, 1884.

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7162) to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. MORGAN, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. PLUMB be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Attest:

ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the conference will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7162) to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JOHN T. MORGAN,
H. W. BLAIR,
P. B. PLUMB,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS R. COBB,
BARCLAY HENLEY,
L. E. PAYSON,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have not been able to find any print of this bill, as it passed the Senate with amendments, either here or in the House. I will not ask for the consideration of the report of the conference committee this morning, but will ask that the bill with the amendments as it passed the Senate be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate on the question of whether the Senate will recede from its amendments or further insist upon them, pending which the Senator from Alabama moves that the bill be laid on the table and be reprinted for the use of the Senate, with the amendments. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 2464) granting an increase of pension to Hamilton Elliott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SLATER introduced a bill (S. 2465) to extend the time for filing certain claims for compensation for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 2466) to increase the pension of Mrs. Nannie Cushman; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 2467) to fix rates for the transmission of messages by telegraph west of the Missouri River not to exceed the average rates from the Missouri River east to the seaboard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2468) to fix passenger and freight rates on all railroads west of the Missouri River not to exceed the average rates from the Missouri River east to the seaboard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. LAMAR introduced a bill (S. 2469) to enable the Secretary of War to pay R. C. Hutchinson for services rendered and expenses incurred in the military service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 105) providing for the transportation of the Government exhibit at New Orleans to the proposed American exhibition to be held in London in 1886; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I suppose the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to make a remark in connection with the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HALE. Of course.

Mr. SEWELL. A measure on that subject has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and is now on the Calendar. The chairman of that committee intends to call it up to-morrow; and I would suggest the reference of this resolution to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey suggests that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which has reported a measure on the subject now on the Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. This provides, as I understand, for an appropriation of $300,000; and I thought the Committee on Finance should pass upon it. I know very little about the resolution. I introduced it by request.

Mr. HALE. Then it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, rather than the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well; let it go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SEWELL. The bill reported is a general bill, authorizing the President to accept invitations to these exhibitions from foreign governments. I should think the same committee that has considered the general subject ought to consider this joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let it go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest choice about the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations to the fact that there is no invitation whatever from Great Britain in this case. This is simply a private enterprise, which proposes to expend $300,000.

Mr. BUTLER. As I said, I know nothing about it except that a gentleman requested me to introduce the resolution and have it referred to a committee. That I have done. The committee can report favorably or unfavorably, as they please. I know nothing about it, and have no choice about the committee to which it shall go; but inasmuch as it provides for an appropriation, I thought the Committee on Appropriations might take charge of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

BREAKWATER AT OSWEGO.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate as soon as may be the extent of the damage done to the United States breakwater in the harbor of Oswego, N. Y., by the recent gale there, together with the amount necessary for its reparation.

LEASES OF LAND ON CROW RESERVATION.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to offer a resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interfere with my colleague, but I inquire whether the resolution which I submitted yesterday, and which went over, should not come up in order before the introduction of new resolutions? I make no objection to my colleague offering a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would come up, but the present occupant of the chair was not present yesterday, and by an accident the Clerk did not lay on the presiding officer's table the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. If the Chair will lay it before the Senate after my colleague's resolution is disposed of, that will do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will do so. The resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts farthest from the Chair [Mr. DAWES] will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate all the information in his Department in respect to any proposed or existing leases of land on the Crow reservation for purposes of grazing, and what action, if any, he has taken in reference to the same.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CALENDAR OF HOUSE BILLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now lays before the Senate the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts nearest the Chair [Mr. HOAR], which by accident failed to be laid on the presiding officer's table.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. HOAR:

Resolved, That when the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions is next taken up for consideration under Rule VIII, measures from the House of Representatives shall first be considered in their order subject to said rule.

Mr. HOAR. I stated yesterday when the resolution was offered that there were then three hundred and six measures on our Calendar in addition to those reported yesterday, and probably yesterday and to-day will make a dozen additions to that number, and of those only twenty-two were measures which came from the House of Representatives, and with two or three exceptions I think those twenty-two will be disposed of as a matter of course; at any rate without objection under the five-minute rule.

I have looked at the Calendar of the House of Representatives, and I find that they have on their Calendar two hundred and seventy-one measures which the Senate have sent to them, and among them some of the most important public measures that have been introduced into Congress for many years. It is not necessary to recite them; but they include the bankruptcy bill, the bill for the settling of the Presidential count and that for the Presidential succession, the bill dealing with Mormonism, and a large number of other important measures, among which is the educational bill of my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. It seems to me it is useless for us to be spending our time in adding to that number of two hundred and seventy-one Senate measures, but we had better dispose of the House business which has come here, and act on measures which will become laws if we agree with the House, and I therefore propose this resolution:

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that another view may be taken of this matter. It is quite true, as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that it is of very little use for the Senate at this late stage of the present Congress to pass bills of its own and send them to the House. I have here a statement of the number of bills passed by the respective Houses during the first session of this Congress. The House of Representatives passed of bills introduced in that body five hundred and seventy-five, and the Senate passed or otherwise finally disposed of two hundred and eighty-seven of them, so that practically 50 per cent. of the bills sent to us by the House were disposed of by the Senate. Of these two hundred and seventy-three were passed and only fourteen disposed of in other ways.

The Senate passed at the same session of Congress three hundred and eighty-three bills originating in this body, and the House considered one hundred and sixty-two of those, or about one-half as many as the House bills disposed of by the Senate. There are now on the Calendar of the House, of the important bills which the Senate has passed, these:

S. 19. A bill for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories. Passed the Senate February 8, 1884.

S. 22. A bill to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President. Passed the Senate January 15, 1884.

S. 48. A bill to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes. Passed the Senate March 26, 1884.

S. 343. A bill concerning the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the United States in places out of their territory and dominion, and to amend the Revised Statutes from sections 4082 to 4130, inclusive. Passed the Senate March 6, 1884.

S. 398. A bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools. Passed the Senate April 7, 1884.

S. 554. A bill to provide for the efficiency of the General Land Office. Passed the Senate April 2, 1884.

S. 698. A bill to authorize the construction of additional steel vessels for the Navy. Passed the Senate February 29, 1884.

S. 1139. A bill authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library. Passed the Senate February 12, 1884.

S. 1155. A bill to provide for the issue of circulating notes to national banking associations. Passed the Senate February 25, 1884.

S. 1283. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882. Passed the Senate June 19, 1884.

S. 1372. A bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States. Passed the Senate April 22, 1884.

S. 1459. A bill relating to the improvement of the coinage. Passed the Senate April 2, 1884.

S. 156. A bill to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms for the militia. Passed the Senate February 20, 1884.

S. 309. A bill to amend section 673 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the quorum of the Supreme Court of the United States. Passed the Senate March 7, 1884.

S. 462. A bill to provide for the removal of obstructions to the navigation of the navigable waters of the United States. Passed the Senate February 21, 1884.

S. 25. A bill to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and decision of questions arising thereon. Passed the Senate January 16, 1884.

That is but a partial list of bills of a national and of a very important character, some of them seriously affecting the peace and prosperity of the American people, which have been passed by the Senate, and to which the House of Representatives has given no consideration whatever. I do not make this statement in the way of complaint, but it seems to me that the reciprocity which ought to exist between the two Houses has been utterly ignored on the other side, and if we are to continue to make House bills special and give them attention to the exclusion of our own, the discrimination existing will not only continue but go on with increasing ratio until finally the House will claim, as practically its prerogative, the right to originate not only revenue bills but also all other bills. To this it is coming as matters are now going on, and the function of the Senate is gradually being limited to the consideration and passage of House bills. If we wish to preserve the function of the Senate as a co-ordinate branch of the legislative authority, and as possessing authority in its own right to originate bills and consider them in the first instance, more attention it seems to me ought to be paid to the subject now.

While I do not care to object to the passage of the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, it seems to me that it would be proper to consider the question in this larger phase.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the suggestions of the Senator from Kansas are of very great weight and interest, and would require, I think, that he or some other Senator should develop them at some proper time for the public information, and call the attention of the House to them. But this resolution relates only to unobjected cases on the Calendar. It will only have the effect of taking up a dozen or so House measures which will go through without objection and become laws, instead of taking up the large number of bills on the Calendar without securing a disposition of them.

I ought to say further that I told the Senator from Maine that if this resolution excited any serious discussion I should let it go over another day with the leave of the Senate, so as not to interfere with the naval bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope it will go over, as it will evidently give rise to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this resolution be postponed until to-morrow, to be laid before the Senate on the call for resolutions at that time. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection it will be ordered that the bill named in the request of the House be returned to that body. It is so ordered.

A. L. SINGLETON.

Mr. HAMPTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be authorized to pay three months' salary to A. L. Singleton, late an employé of the Senate and who was dropped from the rolls on account of illness contracted in the discharge of his duty.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

Mr. LOGAN. Before the motion is put I desire to make an inquiry. The joint resolution (S. R. 18) proposing an amendment to article 1, section 7, clause 2, of the Constitution of the United States in relation to the veto power, was put down as the special order for to-day. Appropriation bills having the right of way, I desire to know whether or not that resolution will come up as soon as this bill is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will come up at 2 o'clock, which is the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce and for other purposes. The other special orders will be laid before the Senate on every occasion after 2 o'clock when any pending unfinished business shall have been disposed of.

Mr. LOGAN. I only desire that the joint resolution shall not lose its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Special orders do not lose their place; they stand as ordered, and will be laid before the Senate at any time after 2 o'clock, whenever any pending bill is disposed of. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

COLORADO INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. HILL. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield for a moment to allow us to finish the consideration of a bill which was under consideration at the close of the morning hour yesterday. It was about to be put on its passage, and I think there is no objection to the bill. As I have to be absent from the city after to-morrow, I should be glad to have it disposed of now. I am sure it will only take a moment of time.

Mr. HALE. If it is only to be put on its passage without further debate, under the circumstances, the Senator being called away, I shall yield for a moment, but if it gives rise to objection I can not do it.

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to take any time from the appropriation bill, but I am sure this bill will give rise to no debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the naval appropriation bill the Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that that order be laid aside informally, and that Order of Business 376, being the bill (S. 1695) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians, be now considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1695) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White River Ute Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield until I can enter a motion to reconsider. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson was passed yesterday, in order that the bill may be recalled from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas enters a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson, and moves that the House of Representatives be requested to return the bill to the Senate. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

The Secretary began to read the bill.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me inquire if there is any necessity for reading the bill? It has been read often in the Senate, I think, and I understand the bill as reported to be practically one that we passed last year subject to some modifications required by circumstances. Can not the Senator from Maine state what changes have been made, and the necessity for passing the bill in this form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the reading of this bill and amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations be dispensed with.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair will correct me if I am wrong; that is, if he chooses to state the result of his own experience; but I think there has been no instance of a bill (except those bills for paying the judgments of the Court of Claims or the Treasury Department for Southern claims, where there is a mere list of names and sums) being passed without being at some time read in the Senate; and I think I ought to object to dispensing with the reading of this bill unless there is some important exigency. It seems to me that a departure from this rule allowed, though in this case it would not make the slightest difference, would be a very serious thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks there is no instance of suspending the reading of any bill, except the Revised Statutes of the United States, within the recollection of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. McPHERSON. I withdraw the request.

Mr. HALE. Let me state what I propose to do.

Mr. HOAR. The chairman of the Committee on Claims informs me that I was wrong in supposing that claims bills were not read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Claims bills have always been read at length.

Mr. HALE. The Clerk is now engaged in reading the bill which the House of Representatives has sent to us within the last ten days. That bill has never been read in the Senate, and I did not propose to ask that the reading of it should be dispensed with. When we come to the committee amendment, the items of which have been before the body and considered fully, then I shall ask unanimous consent that the first reading be dispensed with and that it only be read for amendment; but I did not propose making that request, as to the House bill which has not been read in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HALE. As we have now come to the Senate committee amendment, I ask that it be read for amendment, so that there may be but one reading of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations be read by paragraphs for amendment as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Does that mean that we stop the reading of the bill?

Mr. HALE. No; it is read for amendment.

Mr. BECK. The announcement was made that there was no objection. I only rose to request the Senator from Maine, who has charge of this bill, and who I have no doubt is familiar with it, before the amendment is read to explain just what it contains, so that the Senate will have no difficulty in understanding it. Instead of giving a lump sum there is a proposition to appropriate in detail, deducting the sums already appropriated for this year.

Mr. HALE. I was just going to do that.

Mr. BECK. I thought it would save time to have that done before the reading proceeds.

Mr. HALE. The regular naval appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1885, was prepared by the House at the last session, passed that body, came to the Senate, was reported with amendments from the Committee on Appropriations, and passed the Senate with certain amendments. To those amendments the House disagreed in bulk and the bill went into conference. The two bodies were unable to agree. In the waning hours of the session the House sent to this body a lump appropriation giving the Navy Department 50 per cent. of the previous year's appropriations to run until January 1, 1885. The Senate passed that bill, and thereby the Navy Department was provided with money to run it for six months. The regular appropriation bill which made the appropriations in detail after the fashion that was always observed was reported from the conference committee with a disagreement, and was left in the Senate to be taken up at the beginning of this session. The report of the conference committee upon the regular appropriation bill was called up some ten days ago, a new conference was ordered, and a request was made to the House of Representatives to join in the conference. So far as the records of the House go (which are open to the inspection of Senators and Members and of the public), the House has done nothing upon that courteous request of the Senate. About ten days have passed, and the Senate is confronted with this situation, that upon an appropriation bill necessary to be passed before the recess, or otherwise this great Department will find itself without money, the House declines to consider the request of the Senate. It is not for me to say whether such action comports with the courtesy that is commonly maintained between the two bodies. Senators must judge for themselves of that.

The Senate is not, however, by this non-action of the House, in any way estopped from bringing up and sending to the House a regular appropriation bill for the Navy Department made out in detailed items, because the House of Representatives has at this session sent over to this body another temporary appropriation bill giving an additional lump sum of 50 per cent. more of the appropriations of last year to run the Navy Department for the additional six months of the year before July 1, 1885, thereby bridging over an entire year by these two lump bills.

I do not like that way of appropriating; the Committee on Appropriations do not like that way of appropriating. I do not suppose that the Senate will agree to or desires that form of appropriation. It is better to keep the scrutiny each year on the bills, and not get into the way (unless you are obliged to at the last hours of the session) of making appropriations in general sums; and therefore when the House bill which they have sent us, covering another lump appropriation for six months, came before the Committee on Appropriations, that committee took it up, and has as an amendment substituted for it the regular naval appropriation bill that was considered last session by the two Houses, and it reports that as an amendment, deducting from the several sums the amount already given to the Navy Department for the six months ending January 1, 1885, and thereby the consideration of the regular appropriation bill as considered at the last session is brought before the Senate, notwithstanding the non-action of the House; and if the Senate, as I hope it will, passes the bill with this amendment it will be sent to the House, and the House must needs consider it.

That is the form of the bill. It has all been considered; it was debated at length on the part of Senators, and also in the House. The Committee on Appropriations has put that on here substantially the same as it was matured in the Senate at the last session; and it is to that bill that I ask the consideration of the Senate now.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am obliged to think that it is necessary to fulfill the engagement which I made yesterday, and I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I have no doubt that we shall get through in season to dispose or this bill to-day, but the executive business had better be done first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to make a remark on that motion. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HALE. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to withdraw that motion for awhile. Senators will see how important it is that this measure should go through now. A few hours' delay may embarrass its consideration between the two Houses. I do not expect under the circumstances that any time will be taken by this bill except to read it, because it has been so fully considered and matured that I believe it will go right through without any amendments, unless formal ones. I hope the Senate will continue the consideration of this bill until it is completed, giving ample time for an executive session at the end of such business as the Senate considers in open session to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. I think, Mr. President, it will be very much better to dispose of the other business first, and therefore I insist upon my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 30, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Garland,	Maxey,	Sheffield,
Bayard,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Camden,	Harrison,	Morrill,	Slater,
Cameron of Wis.,	Jackson,	Pendleton,	Vest,
Coke,	Jonas,	Platt,	Walker,
Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Sabin,	Wilson.
Dolph,	Kenna,	Sawyer,
Edmunds,	Manderson.	Sewell,

NAYS—24.

Allison,	Cockrell,	Hale,	McMillan,
Beck,	Cullom,	Hampton,	Miller of Cal.,
Blair,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,
Brown,	Frye,	Hoar,	Morgan,
Butler,	George,	Ingalls,	Pugh,
Call,	Gibson,	Logan,	Saulsbury.

ABSENT—22.

Bowen,	Groome,	Mahone,	Vance.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill,	Palmer,	Van Wyck,
Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Voorhees,
Fair,	Lamar,	Plumb,	Williams.
Farley,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Gorman,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,

So the motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had directed him to return to the Senate in compliance with its request the bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2280) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations as a substitute.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment, and read to line 31.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know of the Senator from Maine if we are to act upon the bill as it is being read, or is it simply being formally read?

Mr. HALE. No; the substitute is being read for amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know what is the meaning of the clause beginning in line 17—who shall hereafter, after fifteen years' service, be entitled to receive, as annual pay, when at sea, $2,100, when on shore-duty $1,800, and when on leave or waiting orders $1,600.

Mr. HALE. That is under a provision of existing law, and is put into every naval appropriation bill to cover this particular class. It is in every naval appropriation bill, and has been for years.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not, then, a new provision at all?

Mr. HALE. No; it is no new provision at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. I made the inquiry because some very serious and dangerous legislation has crept into bills under such provisions.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the amendment and read to line 418.

Mr. BECK. The provision from line 302 to line 418, which has just been read by the Secretary, for the increase of the Navy, is the long provision which was inserted after full discussion upon a call of the yeas and nays by a majority of the Senate in the bill of the last session. I was one of those who voted against it. As a member of the committee having the bill in charge, I felt that it was my duty to report the provision back to the Senate, as the Senate had already passed it, and submit it to the House for their consideration, so that there might be a conference between the House and the Senate in regard to it.

I only desire to say now, that while I agreed to report the provision I opposed it before, and I am not quite satisfied with the experience that we have had as to the ships already produced that it is a good one; but I do not make any objection to it. I believed that the Senate having once passed it, it was the duty of the committee to submit it again and send it to the House.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment, which is to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof insert:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the naval service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes:

For the pay of the Navy, for the active-list, namely: For one Admiral, one Vice-Admiral, eight rear-admirals, seven chiefs of bureaus, twenty-one commodores, forty-five captains, eighty-seven commanders, seventy-eight lieutenant-commanders, two hundred and seventy-two lieutenants, ninety-five junior lieutenants, ninety-five ensigns, ninety-eight junior ensigns, fourteen medical directors, fifteen medical inspectors, fifty surgeons, seventy-nine passed assistant surgeons, eight assistant surgeons, two assistant surgeons not in the line of promotion (who shall hereafter, after fifteen years' service, be entitled to receive, as annual pay, when at sea, $2,100, when on shore-duty $1,800, and when on leave or waiting orders $1,600), thirteen pay-directors, twelve pay-inspectors, forty-nine paymasters, twenty-nine passed assistant paymasters, twenty assistant paymasters, sixty-nine chief engineers, ninety-three passed assistant engineers, seventy-eight assistant engineers, twenty-four chaplains, eleven professors of mathematics, ten naval constructors, nine assistant naval constructors, ten civil engineers, one hundred and eighty-eight warrant officers, thirty-eight mates, two hundred and ninety-five naval cadets; in all, $1,743,750.

For pay of the retired-list, namely: For forty-three rear-admirals, twenty commodores, eleven captains, twelve commanders, sixteen lieutenant-commanders, twenty-seven lieutenants, seven ensigns, twenty-two medical directors, two medical inspectors, four surgeons, five passed assistant surgeons, seven assistant surgeons, nine pay-directors, two pay-inspectors, four paymasters, two assistant paymasters, one assistant paymaster, eleven chief engineers, twenty passed assistant engineers, twenty-six assistant engineers, eight chaplains, six professors of mathematics, one chief constructor, three civil engineers, thirteen boatswains, ten gunners, nine carpenters, and seven sailmakers; in all, $351,865.

For pay to petty officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, and boys, including men in the engineers' force and for the Coast Survey service, not exceeding $8,250, in all, $1,245,000.

For two secretaries, one to the Admiral and one to the Vice-Admiral, clerks to paymasters, clerks at inspections, navy-yards, and stations, and extra pay to men enlisted under honorable discharge; commission and interest, transportation of funds, exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, which shall specify the special necessity for such travel, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of naval cadets while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as cadets, and for the payment of any such officers as may be in service, either upon the active or retired list, during the year ending June 30, 1885, in excess of the numbers of each class provided for in this act, and for any increase of pay arising from different duty, as the needs of the service may require; for rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, boards of investigation, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses of purchasing-paymasters' offices at the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and advertising; foreign postage; telegraphing, foreign and domestic; telephones; copying; care and fittings of library; mail and express wagons, and livery and express fees; costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress, and pilotage; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; care and transportation of the dead; reports, professional investigation, cost of special instruction, professional journals, and information from abroad, and the collection and classification thereof, $222,500.

For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., $12,500.

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

For foreign and local pilotage and towage of ships of war; services and materials in correcting compasses on board ship, and for adjusting and testing compasses on shore; nautical and astronomical instruments, nautical books, maps, charts, and sailing directions, and repairs of nautical instruments for ships of war; books for libraries of ships of war; naval signals and apparatus, namely, signal-lights, lanterns, rockets, running-lights, drawings, and engravings for signal-books; compass fittings, including binnacles, tripods, and other appendages of ships' compasses; logs and other appliances for measuring the ship's ways, and leads and other appliances for sounding; lanterns and lamps, and their appendages, for general use on board ship, including those for the cabin, wardroom, and steerage, for the holds and spirit-room, for decks and quartermasters' use; bunting and other materials for flags, and making and repairing flags of all kinds; oil for ships of war, other than that used in the engineer department; candles when used as a substitute for oil in binnacles and running-lights; chimneys and wicks, and soap used in the navigation department; stationery for commanders and navigators of vessels of war, and for use of courts-martial; musical instruments and music for vessels of war; steering signals and indicators, and speaking-tubes and gongs for signal communication on board vessels of war; and for introducing electric lights on board vessels of war, not exceeding $2,500; in all $50,000.

For erection of compass-testing house, $7,000.

For contingent expenses of the Bureau of Navigation, namely: For freight and transportation of navigation materials, postage and telegraphing on public business, advertising for proposals, packing-boxes and materials, and all other contingent expenses, $2,000.

For the civil establishment of navy-yards and stations, $2,500.

BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

For procuring, producing, and preserving ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, tools, materials, and labor to be used in the general work of the ordnance department; for furniture at magazines, at the ordnance dock, New York, and at the naval experimental battery, $65,000.

To continue the manufacture of modern guns, carriages, and ammunition for the rearmament of the Navy, $100,000.

Toward the modern armament of the Navy: For machine-cannon of small caliber, and appliances, $59,480; and for Gatling guns and appliances, $16,500; in all, $75.980.

For necessary repairs to ordnance buildings, magazines, gun-parks, boats, lighters, wharves, machinery, and other objects of the like character, $7,500.

For miscellaneous items, namely: For freight to foreign and home stations, advertising and auctioneers' fees, cartage and express charges, repairs to fire-engines, gas and water pipes, gas and water tax at magazines, toll, ferriage, foreign postage, and telegrams to and from the bureau, $1,500.

For the civil establishment at navy-yards and stations, $2,500.

For the torpedo corps, namely: For labor, material, freight and express charges; general repairs to grounds, buildings, and wharves; boats, instruction, instruments, tools, furniture, experiments, and general torpedo outfits, $25,000.

For the construction or purchase of one torpedo-boat, after the best model of construction now in use, $55,000.

BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING.

For equipment of vessels: For coal for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling; hemp, wire, hides, and other materials for the manufacture of rope and cordage; iron for the manufacture of anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, bags, and hammocks; heating apparatus for receiving-ships; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels and manufacture of equipment articles in the several navy-yards, $450,000. The coal or other fuel for the Navy purchased under this appropriation shall be of the kind which may be preferred by the Secretary of the Navy, after an investigation by a suitable board of officers of the comparative merits of anthracite and bituminous coal and of other fuel for ordinary naval uses, and the price of said coals and of other fuel, and the readiness with which they may be procured in the ports of the world.

For expenses of recruiting: For expenses of recruiting for the naval service, rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same, advertising for men and boys, and all other expenses attending the recruiting for the naval service, and for the transportation of enlisted men and boys at home and abroad, $12,500.

For contingent expenses equipment and recruiting: For extra expenses of training-ships, freight and transportation of equipment stores, printing, advertising, telegraphing, books and models, postage, car-tickets, ferriage, ice, apprehension of deserters and stragglers, assistance to vessels in distress, continuous-service certificates and good-conduct badges for enlisted men, school books for training ships, medals for boys, and emergencies arising under cognizance of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting unforeseen and impossible to classify, $5,000.

For the civil establishment at navy-yards and stations, $4,500.

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

For general maintenance of yards and docks, namely: For freights and transportation of materials and stores; books, models, maps, and drawings; purchase and repair of fire-engines; machinery; repairs on steam fire-engines, and attendance on the same; purchase and maintenance of oxen and horses, and driving teams, carts, and timber-wheels; and all vehicles for use in the navy-yards, and tools and repairs of the same; dredging; telegrams; furniture for Government houses and offices in the navy-yards; coal and other fuel; candles, oil, and gas; cleaning and clearing up yards and care of public buildings; attendance on fires, lights, fire-engines, and apparatus; for clerical and incidental labor at navy-yards; water-tax, and for toll and ferriages; rent of four officers' quarters at League Island; pay of the watchmen in the navy-yards; and for awning and packing-boxes, and advertising for yard and dock purposes, $140.000.

For contingent expenses that may arise at navy-yards and stations, $10,000.

For the civil establishment at navy-yards and stations, $12,000.

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

For support of the medical department: For surgeons' necessaries for vessels in commission, navy-yards, naval stations, Marine Corps, and Coast Survey, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy-yards, naval laboratory, and Naval Academy, $30,000.

For the naval-hospital fund, namely: For maintenance of the naval hospitals at the various navy-yards and stations, $15,000. And if the Secretary of the Navy shall not be able to maintain properly the whole number of naval hospitals now kept open on the amounts hereby appropriated for the maintenance of and civil establishment at naval hospitals, he shall close those which are least necessary to the service, and provide for the patients now cared for therein at such other naval hospitals as may be most convenient.

For contingent expenses of the bureau: For freight on medical stores; transportation of insane patients; advertising; telegraphing; purchase of books; expenses attending the medical board of examiners; rent of rooms for naval dispensary; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; purchase and repair of wagons and harness; purchase and feed of horses and cows; trees, garden tools, and seeds, $12,500.

For necessary repairs of naval laboratory, naval hospitals, and appendages, including roads, wharves, outhouses, sidewalks, fences, gardens, farms, and cemeteries, $12,500.

BUREAU OF PROVISIONS AND CLOTHING.

For provisions for the seamen and marines; commuted rations for officers, seamen, and marines; expenses of the handling and transportation of provisions; of inspections and storehouses; purchase of water for ships for cooking and drinking purposes; and for provisions and commutation of rations for seven hundred and fifty boys, $550,000.

For contingent expenses: For freight on shipments (except provisions); candles, fuel; books and blanks; stationery; advertising and commissions on sales; furniture for inspection and pay-offices in navy-yards; foreign postage, telegrams, and express charges; toll, ferriages, car-tickets; yeoman's stores, iron safes, newspapers, ice, and incidental expenses absolutely necessary, $20,000.

For the civil establishment, $3,000.

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; preservation of materials; purchase of tools; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care, increase and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair, and incidental expenses, namely: advertising, foreign postage, telegrams, photographing, books, plans, stationery, and instruments for drawing-room, $850,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home.

For the civil establishment, $10,000.

BUREAU OF STEAM-ENGINEERING.

For repairs, completion, and preservation of machinery and boilers, including steam-steerers, steam-capstans, steam-windlasses, &c., in vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase and preservation of all materials and stores; purchase, fitting, and repair of machinery and tools in the navy-yards and stations; wear, tear, and repair of machinery and boilers of naval vessels; incidental expenses, such as foreign postages, telegrams, advertising, freight, photographing, books, stationery, and instruments, $550,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be applied to the repair of engines and machinery of wooden ships where the estimated cost of such repair shall exceed 30 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines and machinery of the same character and power.

For contingenciess, such as instruments and materials for draughting-room, $500.

For the civil establishment, $5,000.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, with the assistance of the gun-foundery board, which is hereby revived, to report to Congress, on the first day of the next ensuing session, a plan and estimate for the preparation and purchase of plant for a gun factory to complete guns from 6-inch caliber to 16-inch caliber, including buildings and shrinking-pit, and to report the full and detailed estimate for the cost of the work aforesaid, and whether the same can be better and more economically performed in establishments owned by the Government, or by private contract, or by a combined system whereby the said work can be accomplished partly by the Government and partly by private contract, and in what annual installments the said appropriations can most economically be made.

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to Congress, at its next regular session, a plan or plans for the construction of one armored vessel for the United States Navy of not exceeding 8,500 tons displacement, the cost of the same, with machinery and armament, and the time which the process of construction of such vessel would take.

To enable the President to strengthen the naval establishment of the United States the sum of $2,500,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended as follows and under the following limitations: For the construction of one cruiser of 4,500 tons displacement, one cruiser of 3,000 tons, one dispatch-vessel of 1,500 tons, two heavily-armed gunboats of 1,500 tons each, and one light gunboat of 750 tons, and one gunboat not to exceed 900 tons, this boat to be built on plans and specifications to be furnished by the Admiral of the Navy, and under his supervision and directions, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy; one steel ram, as recommended by the first naval advisory board, November 7, 1881; one cruising torpedo-boat, advocated by the same board and by the present advisory board in its memorandum of November 21, 1882; and two of the harbor torpedo-boats recommended by said first board and in the report from the Bureau of Ordnance of November 1, 1883, all of which are recommended in the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy. And, under existing law, it shall be the duty of the advisory board appointed in conformity with an act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes, approved August 5, 1882, to advise and assist the Secretary of the Navy, in his office or elsewhere, in all matters referred to them by him relative to the designs, models, plans, specifications, and contracts for said vessels in all their parts, and relative to the materials to be used therein and to the construction thereof, and especially relative to the harmonious adjustment, respectively, of their hulls, machinery, and armament; and they shall examine all materials to be used in said vessels, and inspect the work on the same as it progresses, and have general supervision thereof, under the direction of said Secretary. But said board shall have no power to make or enter into any contract, nor to direct or control any officer of the Navy, the chief of any bureau of the Navy, or any contractor. Neither of the vessels hereby authorized to be built shall be contracted for or commenced until full and complete detail drawings and specifications thereof, in all its parts, including the hull, engines, and boilers, shall have been provided or adopted by the Navy Department, and shall have been approved, in writing, by said board, or by a majority of the members thereof, and by the Secretary of the Navy; and after said drawings and specifications have been provided, adopted, and approved as aforesaid, and the work has been commenced, or a contract made for it, they shall not be changed in any respect, when the cost of such change shall in the construction exceed $500, except upon the approval of said board, or a majority of the members thereof, in writing, and upon the written order of the Secretary of the Navy; and if changes are thus made, the actual cost thereof and the damage caused thereby shall be ascertained, estimated, and determined by said board; and in any contract made pursuant to this act it shall be provided in the terms thereof that the contractor shall be bound by the determination of said board, or a majority thereof, as to the amount of the increased or diminished compensation said contractor shall be entitled to receive, if any, in consequence of such change or changes. And for the construction of all which vessels the Secretary of the Navy shall invite proposals from all American ship-builders and builders of machinery who shall show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy that within three months from the date of the contract their ship-yards will be equipped for building and repairing iron and steel steamships, and constructors of marine engines, machinery, and boilers; and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to construct said vessels and procure their armament at a total cost for each not exceeding the amounts estimated by the naval advisory board; and in the event that such vessels, or any of them, shall be built by contract, such building shall be under contract with the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, made after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five of the leading newspapers of the United States, inviting proposals for constructing said vessels, subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence, and provisions as to bonds and security for the due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe; and no such vessel shall be accepted unless completed in strict conformity with the contract, with the advice and assistance of the naval advisory board, and in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882, except as they are hereby modified; and the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall utilize the national navy-yards, with the machinery, tools, and appliances belonging to the Government there in use, in the building of said ships, or any parts thereof, as fully and to as great an extent as the same can be done with advantage to the Government.

For procuring tools and otherwise preparing for the construction of iron or steel ships, $150,000, the same to be expended in fitting for construction of the hulls of such ships such navy-yard or yards as may be deemed most advantageous to prepare and use for such work.

For completing the Mohican at the Mare Island navy-yard, $50,000, to be immediately available.

For continuing the work upon the double-turreted monitors, $2,000,000, the same to be applied toward procuring the side and turret armor and armament and finishing the vessels; and the Secretary of the Navy, acting under the advice of the naval advisory board in the same manner in all respects as in the construction of the steel cruisers, shall not, in procuring such armor and armament and finishing the monitors, exceed as the total cost of such completion the amounts estimated in the report of the board of October 25, 1883, and the report of the Secretary of December 1, 1883; and in all purchases of armor or contracts for construction there shall be free and open public competition.

NAVAL ACADEMY.

For pay of professors and others: For two professors, namely, one of mathematics and one of chemistry, at the rate per annum of $2,500 each; three professors (assistants), namely, one of physics, one of Spanish, and one of English studies, history, and law, at the rate per annum of $2,200 each; six assistant professors, namely, four of French, one of English studies, history, and law, and one of drawing, at the rate per annum of $1,800 each; sword-master, at the rate per annum of $1,500, and two assistants, at the rate per annum of $1,000 each; boxing-master and gymnast, at the rate per annum of $1,200; assistant librarian, at the rate per annum of $1,400; secretary of the Naval Academy, at the rate per annum of $1,800; three clerks to Superintendent, at the rate per annum of $1,200, $1,000, and $800, respectively; one clerk to commandant of cadets, at the rate per annum of $1,200; one clerk to paymaster, at the rate per annum of $1,000; one dentist, at the rate per annum of $1,600; one baker, at the rate per annum of $600; one mechanic in department of physics and chemistry, at the rate per annum of $730; one cook, at the rate per annum of $325.50; one messenger to Superintendent, at the rate per annum of $600; one armorer, at the rate per annum of $529.50; one gunner's mate, at the rate per annum of $469.50, and one quarter-gunner, at the rate per annum of $409.50; one cockswain, at the rate per annum of $469.50; one seaman in the department of seamanship, at the rate per annum of $349.50; one attendant in the department of astronomy and one in the department of physics and chemistry, at the rate per annum of $300 each; six attendants at recitation-rooms, library, store, chapel, and offices, at the rate per annum of $240 each; one band-master, at the rate per annum of $528; twenty-one first-class musicians, at the rate per annum of $348 each; seven second-class musicians, at the rate per annum of $300 each; in all, $26,779.50.

For pay of watchmen and others: For captain of the watch and weigher, at $2.50 per day; four watchmen, at $2 per day each; foreman of the gas and steam-heating works of academy, at $5 per day; ten attendants at gas and steam-heating works, one at $3, one at $2.50, and eight at $2 per day each; one steam-pipe fitter, at the rate per annum of $600; one foreman of joiners, one foreman of painters, and one foreman of masons, at $3.50 per day each; one mason, at $3 per day; two joiners and one painter, at $2.50 per day each; one tinner, one gas-fitter, and one blacksmith, at $2.50 per day each; in all $11,494.25.

For pay of mechanics and others: For one mechanic at workshop, at $2.25 per diem; one master-laborer, to keep public grounds in order, at $2.28 per diem; fourteen laborers, to assist in same, three at $2 per diem each and eleven at $1.50 per diem each; one laborer, to superintend quarters of cadet-midshipmen and public grounds, at $2 per diem; twenty servants, to keep in order and attend to quarters of cadet-midshipmen and public buildings, at $20 per month each; in all, $7,281.83.

For pay of the employés in the department of steam-engineering, Naval Academy: One master-machinist, one boiler-maker, and one pattern-maker, at $3.50 per day each; two machinists and one blacksmith, at $2.50 per day each; four laborers, at $1.50 per day each; in all, $3,832.50.

For necessary repairs of public buildings, pavements, wharves, and walls inclosing the grounds of the Naval Academy, and for improvements, repairs, and furniture and fixtures, $10,500: Provided, That no appropriations provided for in this act shall be construed to authorize or be applied to a new building for the use of the Superintendent or other officers of the academy.

For fuel, and for heating and lighting the academy and school-ships, $8,500.

For contingent expenses, Naval Academy: For purchase of books for the library, $1,000.

For stationery, blank-books, models, maps, and for text-books for use of instructors, $1,000.

For expenses of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, $750.

For purchase of chemicals, apparatus, and instruments in the department of physics and chemistry, and for repairs of the same, $1,250.

For purchase of gas and steam machinery; steam-pipe and fittings; rent of building for the use of the academy; freight; cartage; water; music; musical and astronomical instruments; uniforms for the bandsmen; telegraphing; for feed and maintenance of teams; for current expenses and repairs of all kinds; and for incidental labor and expenses not applicable to any other appropriation, $17,300.

For stores in the department of steam-enginery, $400.

For materials for repairs in steam-machinery, $500.

MARINE CORPS.

For pay of officers on the active-list, as follows: For one colonel-commandant, one colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, one adjutant and inspector, one quartermaster, one paymaster, four majors, two assistant quartermasters, one judge-advocate-general United States Navy, nineteen captains, thirty first lieutenants, and twenty-two second lieutenants, $98,220.

For pay of officers on the retired-list: For one colonel, three majors, two assistant quartermasters, three captains, two first lieutenants, and three second lieutenants, $14,819.

For pay of non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates: For one sergeant-major, one quartermaster-sergeant, one leader of the band, and one drum-major, fifty first sergeants, one hundred and forty sergeants, one hundred and eighty corporals, thirty musicians, ninety-six drummers and fifers, and one thousand five hundred privates, $194,526.

For ten clerks and two messengers, $8,017.50; payments to discharged soldiers for clothing withdrawn, $10,000; transportation of officers traveling under orders without troops, $4,000; in all, $22,017.50.

For provisions for the Marine Corps, and for difference between cost of rations and commutation thereof for detailed men, $30,000.

For clothing, $38,500.

For fuel, $9,000.

For military stores, namely: For pay of one chief armorer, at $3 per day; three mechanics, at $2.50 per day each; purchase of military equipments, such as cartridge-boxes, bayonet-scabbards, haversacks, blanket-bags, canteens, musket-slings, swords, flags, knapsacks, drums, fifes, bugles, and other instruments, $2,500; purchase of ammunition, $500; purchase and repair of instruments for the band, and purchase of music, $250; in all, $4,893.25.

For transportation of troops and for expenses of recruiting, $5,000.

For repairs of barracks, and rent of buildings to be used for the manufacture of clothing, stores for supplies, and offices of assistant quartermaster at Philadelphia, and for hire of quarters where there are no public buildings, $9,500.

For forage for four public horses, one for messenger to commandant and staff, Washington, D. C., and three for general use at marine barracks, Mare Island, California, and League Island, Pennsylvania, $360.

For the purchase of forage, $2,340: Provided, That no commutation for forage shall be paid.

For contingencies, namely: For freight; ferriage; toll; cartage; funeral expenses of marines; stationery; telegraphing; rent of telephone; apprehension of deserters; per diem to enlisted men employed on constant labor for periods not less than ten days; repair of gas and water fixtures; office and barrack furniture; mess utensils for enlisted men; packing-boxes; wrapping-paper; oil-cloth; crash; rope; twine; carpenter's tools; tools for police purposes; purchase and repair of hose; repairs to public carryall; purchase and repair of harness; repair of fire-extinguishers; purchase and repair of hand-carts and wheelbarrows; purchase and repair of cooking stoves, ranges, &c.; stoves where there are no grates; purchase of ice; towels and soap for offices; improving parade-grounds; repair of pumps and wharves; laying drain and water pipes; introducing gas; and for other purposes, including gas and oil for marine barracks maintained at the various navy-yards and stations; and water at marine barracks, Boston, Mass.; Brooklyn, N. Y.; Annapolis, Md., and Mare Island, California; also straw for bedding for enlisted men at the various posts, and furniture for Government houses; in all, $12,500.

At the naval asylum, Philadelphia, Pa.: For superintendent, at the rate per annum of $600; steward, at the rate per annum of $480; matron, at the rate per annum of $360; cook, at the rate per annum of $240; two assistant cooks, at the rate per annum of $168 each; chief laundress, at the rate per annum of $192; six laundresses, at the rate per annum of $168 each; nine scrubbers and waiters, at the rate per annum of $168 each; six laborers, at the rate per annum of $240 each; stable-keeper and driver, at the rate per annum of $360; master-at-arms, at the rate per annum of $480; corporal, at the rate per annum of $300; barber, at the rate per annum of $360; carpenter, at the rate per annum of $845; water-rent and gas, $1,000; ice, $100; car-tickets, $125; cemetery and burial expenses, and headstones, $175; improvement of grounds, $250; repairs to buildings, and preservation of all kinds, painting, and for grates, furnaces, ranges, furniture, and repairs of furniture, $2,250; and for support of beneficiaries, $21,750; in all, $29,906.50, which sum shall be paid out of the income from the naval pension fund.

SEC. 2. That all appropriations made by the act of July 7, 1884, making temporary provision for the naval service for the six months ending December 31, 1884, or any balances thereof that may be unexpended at that date, be, and they are hereby, reappropriated, continued, and made available for the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to report to Congress, at its next and each regular session thereafter, the amount expended during the prior fiscal year from the appropriations for the pay of the Navy, Bureaus of Navigation, Ordnance, Equipment and Recruiting, Yards and Docks, Medicine and Surgery, Provisions and Clothing, Construction and Repair, and Steam Engineering for civilians employed on clerical duty, or in any other capacity other than ordinary mechanics and workingmen, and to submit, under the estimates for pay of the Navy and for the respective bureaus enumerated above, specific estimates for such civilian employés for the fiscal year 1886, and each fiscal year thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Which amendment is that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the substitute for the House bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to amend the report of the committee in one particular. The amendment I desire to offer is on page 20, commencing after the word "modified," in line 411, striking out the words "and the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once," that being the authority to construct new ships provided for in the bill.

It will be remembered that the purpose, as stated by the honorable Senator from Maine when the bill was under consideration at the last session, was to duplicate the ships now under construction, to wit, the Chicago, the Boston, and the Atlanta. One of the principal reasons which actuated the House in not accepting the bill as amended by the Senate arose from the fact of the unwisdom, so to speak, of continuing the construction of a certain kind and class until those ships had been first tested.

It will be remembered that under the contract to complete those ships they ought to be ready to be tested some time in February, or certainly in the month of March. Now the committee propose, if the bill passes in its present form, to give the power to the present Secretary of the Navy to contract for a certain number of new ships in accordance with certain plans that have been adopted by the advisory board, which is a creation of the present Secretary.

It will be remembered further that the ships whose names I have stated have been subjected to very severe criticism, the Secretary of the Navy upon the one hand claiming that they are the best product of the advisory board and he recommends them strongly; on the other hand the criticism coming as it does from very distinguished naval officers in this country and in other countries. I can judge better which is right after the ship is fully completed and tested; perhaps, however, other Senators do not need such aids.

For one, I deem it unwise to continue the construction of new ships of that type until the actual ships have been tested; and inasmuch as the test can be made between now and the 1st day of April let us wait at least until they are tested before new contracts are made under this proposed provision for new vessels of a like class.

Therefore I move, in line 411, after the word "modified," to strike out the words:

And the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, however, That the authority to construct the same shall not take effect until the vessels now under construction shall have been fully completed and tested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now, Mr. President, there is one other reason that I think ought to be a conclusive one for the adoption of the amendment. It is well known that on the 4th day of March the exercise of the powers of this Government in its executive branch will go into new hands. The present Secretary of the Navy, however distinguished he may be as a naval constructor, will not have anything more to do with that Department for the next four years after this winter. I do not understand the idea of conferring on him power to design through the aid of his advisory board a certain class of ships and to contract that those ships shall be built when a new administration soon to come into power may disagree entirely both as to the plans and the contract. In other words, the carrying into effect of the provisions of this law will devolve almost entirely upon the new Secretary of the Navy, while the power to contract, unless my amendment is agreed to, will be given to the present Secretary, and the design of the proposed ships, let me again repeat, is a copy of ships now under construction which can be tested by the 1st of April or before, and which have been severely criticised by distinguished naval officers.

It has been the policy of every great naval power to first construct one ship upon a certain plan, and by practical tests of the actual vessel, if found to be successful and approved in every particular, then to copy that ship in the building of new vessels; but that policy is not being pursued here. We have now four or five vessels under construction which are new in their plans, departures many of them from any known plans, and some of them have been actually condemned—I speak now of the Chicago as to its machinery, which has not been found to be a successful plan of vessel, and it is proposed here simply to duplicate that ship. As to the 4,500 and 3,000 ton ships and the others named here, which will be built under the appropriation now proposed, they will be duplicates of the Chicago, Atlanta, and Boston.

The intention of my amendment is simply to wait until the ships now under construction are fully tested and then let the appropriation be available for the administration soon to come into power, and if they desire to change the plan of ship the plan may be changed and perhaps with great profit to the Government.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it was not the intention of the Committee on Appropriations to open the old discussion of questions that were settled by the Senate at the last session. The Senator from Kentucky has stated very clearly—I think it may have been in the absence of the Senator from New Jersey—what the position taken by the committee was. The House, by its non-action on the Senate's request for a conference, has refused to consider this subject-matter in conference. The Committee on Appropriations deemed it proper and wise and a fitting assertion of the action already taken by the Senate to put on this bill the measure of the last session just as it had been amended, and send it to the House for future conference. Of course when we get into conference the Senate can not drive the House if it is determined and maintains its position with reference to these new cruisers, but it must be a subject of fair consideration in conference. I am sorry as it was going along in this way that the Senator from New Jersey has introduced and brought up the old question about these ships by his amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator yield right there to a question?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator will remember that one year ago this bill was introduced, and was a subject of conference at that time. The present Secretary of the Navy then had one year and six months almost of his time to serve unexpired. Now he has but two or three months. The bill then would have been perfectly proper to confer on the then Secretary of the Navy the power that the bill does confer, to contract for and construct ships; but it will be remembered that a year has elapsed since that time, and now but two or three months of the present Secretary's term have yet to run. What I object to, and I think the Senator himself must see it, is the impropriety of conferring on the present administration of this Government the power to contract for a style of ship which, perhaps, the next administration may desire not to build, and which it may be found unwise to build from the practical test of the ship itself which will be completed now in a very short time.

Mr. HALE. I see the force of that. If the Senator had waited he would have seen where I was coming out in this direction.

I realize that the situation is not as it was a year ago. The bill itself as reported, if the Senator examines its provisions carefully, has such safeguards as to examination into plans and submission to experts, and then a provision that no contract shall be made until after sixty days' advertisement in five leading newspapers in the United States, found from lines 398 to 404, that it would be impossible for the Secretary of the Navy, if he so desired, to go on and make contracts for new cruisers during the last days of his administration. But the Secretary of the Navy has no such desire. I have no such desire as to intrust that to him. If he did desire it I should be opposed to it.

Mr. McPHERSON. Would not the bill do it?

Mr. HALE. The bill would not do it. I have no objection to striking out the words—and I had thought of making that movement myself:

And the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once.

I do not think these words ought to be there. I do not think in this changed condition they should remain there. I would not like to have any provision put in that in any way seems to reflect upon the present Secretary, and I do not think the Senator from New Jersey desires that.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not think my amendment does reflect upon the present Secretary. Certainly it was not intended for that. Whatever my opinion of the present Secretary may be, there was no intention on my part to incorporate it in a measure of legislation.

Mr. HALE. Suppose, then, that the words are stricken out?

Mr. McPHERSON. But one word further, if the Senator please. That is not the object I had in view.

Mr. HALE. I did not suppose so.

Mr. McPHERSON. It was primarily that no contract shall be made by any Secretary, whether the present one or his successor, until the ships now under construction shall have been thoroughly tested. That was the idea.

Mr. HALE. Would the Senator desire now to bind up all the work of examination, for instance, when the new administration comes in?

Mr. McPHERSON. I beg pardon; I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Would the Senator now desire to tie up the new administration of the Navy Department when it comes in, the administration that must have the responsibility of this work in the future? Would he desire to tie that up so that nothing could be done in the way of advertisement, in the way of plans, in the way of consultation with the advisory board, so that this work may be going on?

Mr. McPHERSON. I would tie up any administration until the ships that we have now under contract, costing millions of dollars, which are, as I have already said, the product of what are said to be the best minds in the Navy, shall be thorougly tested and their fitness for the service proved. If they are the class of ships we want to build, let us go on and duplicate them; but in any event it is the part of prudence to wait till a practical test has been had. Perhaps no provision of law would be needed as to the next administration, for I do not believe that the Secretary of the Navy that is to be would take one single step forward in the way of constructing new ships until those now being constructed were tested.

Mr. HALE. I shall be willing to believe that. Of course the present Secretary will do nothing

Mr. McPHERSON. At the same time I prefer, inasmuch as we are making the law, that it shall be made positive and decisive. Let both Secretaries and all Secretaries be bound up by a provision which requires that we shall test these ships, and shall not go any further in a wrong direction, if it should be a wrong direction, than we are now going. If it should be right, it is very easy to continue in the right.

The Senator has spoken of a desire to cast some reflection upon the present Secretary of the Navy. I disavow that. When he says the Secretary of the Navy would not do such a thing at the end of his administration, I wish to call the attention of the Senator and of other Senators to the fact that such a thing is not unprecedented in this country, and therefore perhaps with the experience we have had confronting us it is wise for us to guard in every way we can the present.

Mr. HALE. Let the words "and the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once," in lines 411 and 412, be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the wording of his amendment. He refers to the vessels now in process of construction, and would suspend the right to make contracts for new ships until all those vessels shall have been completed, as I understand him. He is aware that with regard to a certain class of vessels under construction we do not regard them as experimental. We know just what their defects are and what their excellences are. I suppose he has reference more particularly to the Chicago and Boston and those that are to some extent experimental. The monitors we know all about. If his amendment is carried in the form it stands now, nothing in the world can be done until all the monitors shall be finished, which might be two or three years hence.

Mr. McPHERSON. Put in "the new vessels under construction." That would be understood.

Mr. HAWLEY. Or you might name them perhaps, the Boston and Chicago.

Mr. HALE. Say "steel cruisers."

Mr. HAWLEY. "Steel cruisers." That will do it.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is satisfactory. There is no intention to have it apply to the monitors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey has modified his amendment. It will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in the amendment of the committee to strike out, in lines 411 and 412, the words "and the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once" and insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, however, That the authority to construct or contract for the same shall not take effect until the steel cruisers now under construction shall have been fully completed and tested.

Mr. HALE. I do not agree to that amendment; but let us have the action of the Senate upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, as modified, to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McPHERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Jersey will modify his amendment. I understand the Senator from Maine who has the bill in charge to be content that some words in the present bill should be stricken out.

Mr. BECK. The word the Senator from New Jersey proposes to strike out.

Mr. BAYARD. He will agree; in other words to that part of the amendment suggested which strikes out words conferring power immediately to go on. I hope my friend from New Jersey will be content with that.

Mr. HALE. I was proposing to move that myself if the Senator had not made his motion.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit to my friend from New Jersey that that will accomplish fairly what he intends to do. I am not willing to vote for an amendment that shall materially postpone the commencement of the construction of these ships. I voted for them at the last session of Congress and I desire to vote for them again. At the same time I think the words now in the bill which perhaps were proper enough a year ago are not quite so proper to-day, and it is not necessary to give the reasons for that, because I think they are obvious; but as the Senator in charge of the bill agrees to strike out those words it seems to me that by doing that we reach all the Senator from New Jersey desires.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware what there will be left in the bill to prevent the present Secretary of the Navy from proceeding to make contracts, under the authority confefred by this bill, for all the ships proposed? Nothing in the world. The contracts may be made as they were in 1877. The present monitors, which have given us much trouble, it is well known were contracted for at that time. There are three months of time in which to make contracts, and the appropriation will be available in suitable time to pay for the contracts. If the Senate is not willing to check the present Secretary in making contracts the way to do is to accept the amendment of the Senator from Maine. That leaves it perfectly free for him to contract.

Mr. BAYARD. I prefer not to make the presumption that any high officer of this Government will act improperly upon a matter of grave importance and which lies under his discretion; and there is one check, should it become necessary hereafter, upon any such action as is suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, which was, as I remember, very correctly exercised by the successor to a Secretary of the Navy who made large contracts immediately upon his exit from the post. All of the monitor contracts made by Mr. Secretary Robeson were arrested by his successor, Mr. Thompson, and the contractors were placed, as I remember, in rather an unenviable plight. If it shall appear that contracts have been improvidently or improperly made, undoubtedly they will be subject to modifications, or the Government may retire from them.

I have not changed my view that the amendment consented to by the Senator from Maine will reach all that I think fairly ought to be asked in the present case; and, if it be in order, I should like this amendment to be voted upon in parts; in other words, that the vote upon the motion to strike out should be taken separately from the motion subsequently to insert.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is not in order. The rules provide that a motion to strike out and insert shall not be divided.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment can not be severed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can not be severed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Before the Senator from Delaware insists upon that motion I should like to call his attention to a certain fact, which appears to be admitted, regarding the monitors of which he speaks. It is known that during the last days of a Secretary's administration he made contracts for the construction of the monitors. It was made contingent upon an appropriation being made. The Senator will observe that future action by the Department could annul such a contract. This one stands entirely different. The bill which confers the power to make the contract carries with it the appropriation. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware, with a change of administration soon to occur, the present Secretary of the Navy desiring to build more ships of the style now under construction, and which will be completed in two months, would it not be wise for this Secretary or the succeeding one to wait and see whether it was a proper ship and fulfilled all the expectations?

What harm, then, is there in saying in the body of the bill that no Secretary shall contract for a ship of any style or plan until the new ships, which he tells us will be good ones, shall be tested, and then duplicate them, for I want to say to the honorable Senator from Delaware that there is nothing in this bill, if the amendment of the Senator from Maine is agreed to and my amendment is not, that will deter the present Secretary from making contracts for the seven or eight ships named here, and no power on earth can prevent the contractors from demanding the fulfillment of that contract, for the appropriation is contained in the same bill that gives authority to make the contract.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, let me answer the Senator from New Jersey right there. Under the provisions of the bill which is before the Senate no Secretary of the Navy would find it possible to make a single contract for one of these vessels between now and the 4th day of March. If the Senator will look on page 19 he will find these words, beginning on line 398:

> And in the event that such vessels, or any of them, shall be built by contract, such building shall be under contract with the lowest and best responsible bidder or bidders, made after at least sixty days' advertisement, published in five of the leading newspapers of the United States, inviting proposals for constructing said vessels, subject to all such rules, regulations, superintendence, and provisions as to bonds and security for the due completion of the work as the Secretary of the Navy shall prescribe.

Under that, if the Secretary was desirous of crowding through in an unseemly manner contracts with favorites or with anybody he would find it impossible.

I can also say, and speak as I believe and know, that the Secretary of the Navy feels in this matter as any retiring Secretary would do. He would not risk his reputation with the American people and with his friends by rushing in mad haste to make contracts now before he goes out. I can not imagine any man who is fit to be Secretary of the Navy ever daring to do a thing of that kind if there were no prohibition, and I am willing to trust something, if it is necessary, to the honor of heads of Departments. It is not needed here, because he is tied up. I expect to contribute and to join in the work of building up the Navy and of staying the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, if he is a wise and prudent and proper man, as I presume he will be, in the next administration, and I shall be willing to trust him. I shall not all the time believe that he is seeking to do some unfitting thing, and I am sure the Senator from New Jersey when he examines the bill carefully will see, as the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Kentucky have seen, that there is no improper power lodged in the Secretary, if he wanted to exercise it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. There is no answer needed to the arguments of the Senator from Maine except the bill itself. The Senator says it will be impossible for the present Secretary of the Navy to enter into contracts, and he reads as authority the bill. It requires sixty days' advertisement. If an advertisement were made on the 4th day of January, a compliance with the bill would bring it within the present administration.

Mr. HALE. Sixty days!

Mr. MCPHERSON. Sixty days—January and February.

Mr. HAWLEY. Look at the almanac.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly, there is an abundance of time—time enough, anyhow, between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. HALE. It would be utterly impossible.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The plans of the ships already approved, the Chicago, the Atlanta, and the Boston, which the Secretary avers to be the plans upon which he would construct new ships, are already provided; advertisement could be made to-morrow, and contracts for all these ships could be entered into before the close of the administration.

Mr. HALE. No advertisement could be issued until after the bill had passed both Houses.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am speaking of the effect if the bill should pass. The Senator asks the Senate to pass it to-day and he expects the House to pass it very soon, I suppose.

Mr. FRYE. Not until after the holidays.

Mr. BAYARD. I found by private conversation with the Senator from New Jersey that he was under the impression the words he proposed to strike out had been stricken out. That I understand is not the case, however. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey to so modify the amendment as to withdraw that part of it which prevents the inception of this work until the other vessels shall be tested, and let us vote upon the part unobjected to by the Senator from Maine, which is to strike out the words as they now stand in the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I suppose if my amendment should not prevail a motion would then be in order to strike out the objectionable words.

Mr. HALE. I propose to ask the Senate to do that. I did propose that.

Mr. HARRIS. That motion will be in order.

Mr. BAYARD. That can be done afterward.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I desire the vote to be taken upon my amendment as offered.

Mr. HALE. If that is voted down I shall then ask the Senate to strike out the other words, as I proposed to do originally.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I hope it will not be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the amendment recommended by the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read again for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 411, after the word "modified," it is proposed to strike out the words—

> And the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once.

And to insert in lieu:

> Provided, however, That the authority to construct or contract for the same shall not take effect until the steel cruisers now under construction shall have been fully completed and tested.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I should like to state once more, because I think perhaps I may have been somewhat confused in my utterances upon this question, that unless my amendment is agreed to the present Secretary of the Navy may contract for all these ships.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. BUTLER]. He would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea," if he were present.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired on this amendment with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he was present, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Beck,	George,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Slater,
Camden,	Harris,	Maxey,	Vance,
Coke,	Jackson,	Pendleton,	Voorhees.
Colquitt,	Jonas,	Pugh,

NAYS—35.

Allison,	Frye,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,
Bayard,	Garland,	Lapham,	Plumb,
Blair,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Conger,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Sheffield,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Hill,	Morrill,	Walker,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Pike,

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Logan,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Farley,	Mahone,	VanWyck,
Brown,	Groome,	Manderson,	Vest,
Butler,	Hampton,	Miller of N. Y.,	Williams.
Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Lamar,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. I now move to strike out, in lines 411 and 412, the words—

> And the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I would now be pleased to have an opportunity of asking the Senator from Maine in what way it subtracts from the power to make contracts even if those words are taken out. They are entirely superfluous, and mean nothing.

Mr. HALE. I think that those words when put in ought to have been added to so as to read:

> And the authority to construct the same shall take effect at once, subject to the provisions of this bill.

I think when they were put in originally that would have been the wiser and safer way. Striking them out now, under the changed condition, leaves the bill as it ought to have been left.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That fails to answer the question I have put to the Senator. The words, in the first place, were entirely superfluous. The power rests in the bill to use the appropriation the moment it is made. Now, I wish to know by striking those words out how much the Senator adds to the guards he proposes to throw around the whole subject.

Mr. HALE. The rest of the bill furnishes the safeguards. These words are of no account, add nothing and subtract nothing. I am entirely willing that they should go out, and I move that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to amend the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee as amended.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine in charge of the bill for some information in respect to that part of the bill reported by the committee in lines 425 and 426. It reads as follows:

> For completing the Mohican at the Mare Island navy-yard, $50,000, to be immediately available,

I wish to know whether that is to be construed as meaning that the work is to be done in the Mare Island navy-yard.

Mr. HALE. She is there at the navy-yard.

Mr. MORGAN. I know. Is it merely meant to designate the location of the ship at the present time, or that the work shall be done at the Mare Island navy-yard?

Mr. HALE. Oh, that it shall be done at the Mare Island navy-yard, the completing of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge what information the committee have as to the capacity of the Mare Island navy-yard to do that work to complete the ship.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from California [Mr. MILLER] can answer the Senator more fully.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If the Senator will permit me I will state that the Mohican is a wooden ship, which has been constructed at the navy-yard at Mare Island wholly, and this appropriation is merely for finishing it.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the wooden ship lying there?

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is the ship lying at the wharf at Mare Island which the Senator saw when he was there. They have every appliance and facility for finishing it, because they have done all the work so far on the ship.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no doubt about the navy-yard there being entirely competent to finish that ship.

Mr. HALE. This is old work that has been done for years there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. There is a feature of the bill with which I am not satisfied. It is on page 15, under the head of "Increase of the Navy." I will read it:

> That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, with the assistance of the gun-foundery board, which is hereby revived, to report to Congress, on the first day of the next ensuing session, a plan and estimate for the preparation and purchase of plant for a gun factory to complete guns from 6-inch caliber to 16-inch caliber, including buildings and shrinking-pit, and to report the full and detailed estimate for the cost of the work aforesaid, and whether the same can be better and more economically performed in establishments owned by the Government, or by private contract, or by a combined system whereby the said work can be accomplished partly by the Government and partly by private contract, and in what annual installments the said appropriations can most economically be made.

I do not understand how the gun-foundery board can be worked into a harmonious committee with the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War in devising a plan for the establishment of a gun factory to complete guns or to make guns out and out. I think there will be some trouble about this matter, and it would be very much better to leave this subject to the separate reports of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, and let them take advice from any members of the ordnance establishment of the Navy or of the Army with whom they see proper to advise.

The revival of the gun-foundery board for another year is not necessary for the purpose of carrying on this work. It is a board that has been detailed and has been for some time in service. Now it is proposed to incorporate it for a year. It has once visited Europe, and it has also made a very partial excursion through a very limited area of the United States to find out something about the steel-making capacity and the gun-making capacity of this country. It went abroad on its mission after having made a very cursory examination of the condition of some iron and steel industries in the United States. After receiving a few letters from several establishments it came to the conclusion that it was not worth while to make any further examination in this country, and immediately went abroad to look into the different establishments in foreign countries. There they were deliberately snubbed. Mr. Krupp refused to let the gun-foundery board go into his works to examine them, and the rest of the establishments in Europe seemed to look upon it with some suspicion.

Other men have visited Europe from private establishments, from the Cambria Works, from Pittsburgh, from works near Philadelphia, from works in California. They have been well received. They have gone through all the establishments in Europe. They are practical men, practical steel and iron producers and manufacturers, and they have come back with information of a most valuable character, much of which has been obtained from them through the agency of a committee of this body and a committee of the House who were charged with the duty of finding out what the American people could produce in the way of steel and machine tools.

As soon as the two Houses got into activity about this matter (and they got into very great activity at the close of the last session of Congress by raising two select committees to investigate the same field precisely) the gun-foundery board was immediately inspired with a like activity; but still it went to a very few places. I am informed that it has a report which it expects to make to the Secretary of the Navy and through him to the Congress of the United States during the present session. I want to see that report before I consent to the revival of the gun-foundery board and to taking it with its present detail and organization as a fixed and permanent establishment in this country.

I feel it to be my duty to say, after a careful investigation of the former report of the gun-foundery board and a comparison of the facts which they have detailed, with the testimony of enlightened producers and manufacturers throughout the length and breadth of the United States, that the gun-foundery board never put itself to any trouble to find out what is the real power of this country in steel and iron production until a very recent date, and unless it has got the information which the committees of the two Houses have collected it has not yet sufficiently informed itself about this matter. That board started out with a proposition that the guns for the Army should be built by the ordnance establishment of the Army, whether they were field-pieces or whether they were guns for seacoast defense, whether they were guns of 3-inch caliber or 16-inch caliber; that the guns for the Navy should be built by the ordnance establishment of the Navy—guns of all sizes, all calibers, all descriptions; that we should have in the United States under the control of the different ordnance establishments two great gun factories, to say the least of it—one to make guns for the Army and one to make guns for the Navy; that we should divide the power and influence of the Government between the two military departments, as I infer, for the purpose of giving civil employment and home locations to men who hold commissions to be in the field and upon the sea.

Now, when we build up these two separate establishments which the gun-foundery board has uniformly recognized and uniformly recommended, we will shut out the competition of every enlightened manufacturer in the United States.

Without presuming to draw distinctions between the different manufacturers in this country or the many great manufacturing centers, I can say broadly, and without the fear of successful contradiction, that at Johnstown, in Pennsylvania, there is an establishment which has more money invested than Krupp has; that has to-day a larger capacity in the supply of material for the production of steel than Krupp has; that can make better steel than Krupp can make; that makes it by better methods and processes, and makes it exclusively of American material, and almost exclusively with the skill of American workmen. If you will aggregate what has been done at Pittsburgh by the various private manufacturers in that city and add to it the advantages of the natural gas which has been recently brought into use in that city—a most wonderful discovery and development of fuel power—you will find in and about that city twice the power that Mr. Krupp possesses to produce steel of any quality, from that refined and excellent article of steel necessary for a hairspring in a watch up to a gun that will weigh a hundred tons. It is true that in some of the very largest descriptions of machinery and of furnaces these different establishments have not supplied themselves, for the reason that they have had no market for the material that those large machines would produce. But those large machines, whether they are steam-hammers or whether they are hydraulic compressors, can be made rapidly out and out by American workmen with American tools from the very bed foundation of the machines down to the finest cutting tool that they may require.

What I say is equally true in respect of California. California possesses a power of manufacture that most of the people in this part of the country are entirely unacquainted with. It has steel ores finer than any that are on any other part of the earth, so far as chemistry and physical tests have been able to determine. It has ores in greater abundance than any other country in the world. It has ores more convenient to the seaboard even than England has got, and its capacity for the manufacture of steel of every quality is equal to that of any other country on earth, with the exception that it does not possess within its own limits a fuel which is of sufficient power to conduct heavy manufactures. But Washington Territory and Oregon possess in large abundance in various locations near on to the seacoast and in Vancouver Bay fuel that produces coke as excellent as that which is produced at Johnstown, Pa. The transportation of it down to San Francisco or San Diego, both of which places are convenient to immense deposits of excellent iron ore, is as a matter of course of cheap cost, because it is nearly all by water.

Sir, the United States of America stands to-day in the front of all nations of this earth in its power to manufacture steel of every grade cheaper than can be done in any other country in the world, England not excepted. That is a broad and a bold declaration; but when the committee of which I have the honor to be a member shall make its report through its chairman, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the facts that will be detailed here will prove it beyond all controversy. But the gun-foundery board in its former investigations found out little or nothing about this. They left this country and went abroad to make an examination into the steel-producing capacity of other countries. They came back and made their report, and it was not until Congress had started these committees upon the work of investigation that this board seemed to feel the slightest degree of anxiety in searching out what is now so apparent to the whole world, or at least least to men who know anything about these matters.

They came back and reported that it was an impossibility to get the steel made in the United States for the manufacture of certain parts of the heavy guns that have already been required for the armament of the sloops of war that have been launched at Roach's yard; and our contracts for the steel for parts of these guns have been made in England and France—England, I am sure—and they are not yet filled. We can not get our guns because we can not get the English people to accommodate us with breech-pieces made of steel for the guns to arm our own vessels. Some of these guns are being built in the United States now, some at Midvale. I saw one of the guns there the other day, a rather promising-looking gun. The ingots had been cast at Midvale. They had been forged there. They had been sent to the navy-yard at Washington city to be rough-bored and turned. They had then been retransported to Midvale for the purpose of being tempered in oil, and there they were, waiting to be sent back to Washington. They have been making excursions back and forth from the navy-yard at Washington to Midvale, Pa., just above Philadelphia, of course at a heavy expenditure for freights. One of these guns, that I suppose was manufactured at Midvale, was built up at the navy-yard here. It is about a 30-foot gun. It is now at Annapolis, I am informed.

When that gun was built at the navy-yard in Washington city and they undertook to balance it on its trunnion it took, as I am informed, 1,400 pounds on the front end of that gun to make it balance. A single man or two gunners with machinery could not raise that gun to put it in line for action in battle. It has been hustled out of the way down to Annapolis. I propose to inquire something more about the history of that gun, for I want to know whether the recommendations that have been made to us, that the Army ordnance board and the Navy ordnance board are to have the control of this matter so as to build up two heads to an establishment that does not need but one, are to be followed. I wish to know if this gun is to be taken as a test of the skill of our gun factories that are to be under the charge of the officers of the Army and Navy.

Mr. President, there is not a man in the gun-foundery board to-day, I venture to say, who ever made a pound of steel in his life, or one who would know whether a metal found in a Siemens furnace, while it was boiling under the influence of heat, was steel or iron until it had been taken out and subjected to physical or chemical tests. They, as a rule, have no more practical experience in the business of making steel than I have about making sole leather. They know it theoretically. They are highly informed, splendidly educated in chemistry, in physics, in theoretical mechanics, but that is not practical education. I will take an experienced American workman who has been having his eye upon the furnace at Cambria or Midvale or in Pittsburgh, watching the working of these metals, and I would rely upon his eye to judge of a metal while it is being worked with far more security than can be done by the scientific attainments of any man that belongs to the Ordnance Department of the Army or the Navy in the United States.

What we want to do to infuse life, skill, and energy into this matter of building a navy and building the guns that we are compelled to build for the armament of our seacoast and of our Navy is to allow private enterprise in the United States to come into competition for the work. The very moment that you open the door for private competition you will be astonished at the display of genius and power that this country has right at hand for doing the best and finest work that is possible.

We have almost an entire armament of guns to make, and if we shall put these different manufacturing establishments of the United States into this work in different convenient localities so as to get up between them a rivalry in business and a rivalry in the excellence of their productions, and if we will give them a market, which we are obliged to give to somebody, we will find that these establishments will come to the front and they will make us a navy, and they will make us guns that will surprise the world more than it was surprised when Rodman adopted his splendid system of casting iron guns. Rodman revolutionized the whole subject of gun production in the world by his system, and at the close of the late war the United States had the precedence of all the powers in respect to the capacity, the character, and strength of our ordnance.

Now, sir, if we will allow our men to avail themselves, as they will be certain to do, of the advantages of experience gained by the expenditure of untold millions of money in other countries, and let them start out now to build a navy from the bottom, as we are doing; if you will give to our own people the market that we are compelled to provide to somebody for the building of our ships and our guns for seacoast as well as for naval armament, we will find ourselves more astonished and the world will find itself more astonished with the triumphs of American skill and genius in this direction than it was at the close of the last war, when we furnished the world with the Rodman gun and the pattern for the iron-clad ship.

I am opposed to handicapping the Navy Department and the War Department with a gun-foundery board. Let them have access not to the gun-foundery board alone, but let them have access to all the talent and all the ability of the Navy and of the Army Ordnance Department. More than that, let them have access to those sources of information that the committees of the two Houses have consulted, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy will then be able to come before the Congress of the United States with an intelligent array of facts upon which we can hardly hesitate in forming our judgment. But if we put in connection with them and compel them to take the advice of the gun-foundery board, and cause the gun-foundery board to become one of a committee (for that is the nature of this arrangement), consisting of the gun-foundery board, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of War, to make a report to Congress next year as to the best plan to be adopted, we know what the result is to be. It will be merely to leave this whole subject tied down as it has been now for quite a length of time; to leave this whole subject just where it is to-day, and to compel the Congress of the United States in its anxiety to do something for the armament of this country to adopt only such a plan as shall emanate virtually from the gun-foundery board. Your committees that you sent out will have been of no service. The advice of all the balance of the officers of the Army and Navy not included in the gun-foundery board will be of no service. This whole subject will be shaped just as they have shaped it heretofore and as they wish to control it hereafter. Mr. President, if it had not been for the report of the gun-foundery board the guns that are to arm these new sloops of war could to-day have been built by private enterprise in the United States, and would have been equal to any guns in the world of their class. That report only delayed such action by Congress as could easily have accomplished these results.

So we are committing an error when we undertake to arrange for the future investigations and recommendations on this subject on the plan that is contained in this bill. The gun-foundery board ought to be stricken out of it, and allow the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War full liberty to consult whoever they think best for the purpose of gaining the information upon which to make a suitable recommendation to the Congress of the United States.

I move, therefore, if it is in order, to strike out the words, beginning in line 304—

With the assistance of the gun-foundery board, which is hereby revived.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not in order at this time, the Chair thinks, the amendment of the committee having been agreed to. After the bill is reported to the Senate it will be in order to make the motion.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I agree most fully with the Senator from Alabama as to the very valuable work that has been done by the select committee which was raised at the close of the last session to inquire as to the capacity of the steel-producing works in the United States. I know how earnest was the attention given by the Senator from Alabama upon the committee, and I have every reason to believe that the report which will be presented here soon of the work of that committee by the chairman, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], will be most interesting and most valuable; but I hope that the Senator from Alabama will not seek to anticipate that by any discussion upon this bill.

While that committee has done most valuable work, and has gone more deeply into the question of the resources and capacities of our steel-works in America than any other, still I think, and am sure, that the gun-foundery board has done some valuable work; and there is no intention and there is no possibility of binding down the Department either of War or of the Navy to the recommendations of that board. I had proposed in this amendment to strike out the clause providing for the report at the next session, in line 306, at the top of page 16, and to substitute the words, "during the present session," so that this board will not be bound to future work, unless in some subsequent bill or in some measure proposed by the select committee it should be so authorized.

I would not have any attack made upon this board. I do not think the Senator desires that. Whatever they have been doing let them report during the present session. Instead of running them over to the next session let us have the benefit of what they can give to us during this session. That carries out the spirit of the amendment as it was put on at the last Congress and does not keep them open hereafter; and if it is not necessary after the Senator from Connecticut presents his report—in which the Senator from Alabama concurs, I have no doubt—to keep this board alive, let it go.

I think the work that has been done by the select committee will astonish the American people. The sooner we get that report the better, and if the Senator will withdraw his amendment I will move, or he can, on page 16, line 306, to strike out the words "on the first day of the next ensuing session" and insert "during the present session."

Mr. MORGAN. I will accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Neither amendment is in order at this time.

Mr. HALE. It can be done when we get into the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be better to name the 1st of February.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend, on page 16, line 306, by striking out the words "on the first day of the next ensuing session" and inserting in lieu thereof "during the present session."

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator desires to strike out "on the first day of the next ensuing."

Mr. HALE. Those are the words to be stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS. And to insert——

Mr. HALE. Insert "during the present."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HALE, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill making additional appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes."

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. I call up the regular order, Senate bill 2112.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be again laid before the Senate, being the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. SLATER. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill just called up, and ask that it be printed, so that it may be on the desks of Senators to-morrow. I propose to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the desk. I ask that it be printed without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks leave to submit an amendment which he intends to propose to the pending bill, and asks that it be printed. That order will be entered if there be no objection.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 17, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE.

Mr. DOCKERY, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it do pass:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay be authorized to employ an additional clerk, for the remainder of the session only, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, at the same rate of compensation per diem as other committee clerks receive.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, from the Committee on Accounts, submitted the following privileged report:

Your committee, to whom was referred a petition relating to the compensation of certain employés of the House, respectfully report:

That, under a decision of the First Comptroller of the Treasury, the Clerk of the House will not be able to pay certain persons now in the service of the House and employed under a simple resolution of the House after the 4th day of March next; the Comptroller having decided that after the expiration of a Congress the terms of a simple resolution of the House of Representatives can not continue the pay out of the contingent fund of the House of any employés.

This decision will have the effect, without some legislation, of discharging after March 4 next certain clerks and employés whose services are necessary to a proper conduct and discharge of public business.

Among the persons affected by it are the following:

First. The messenger in the Chief Clerk's office, a boy, who is paid $25 per month, under resolution of the House of January 29, 1884;

Second. Three clerks engaged in indexing the list of private claims of the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, at $6 per day, under the resolution of April 28, 1884; and Third. Two laborers in the Clerk's document-room, who have been employed in sacking and shipping to members and others the calf-bound volumes of documents and arranging files, at $75 per month each, under resolution of June 13, 1884.

Your committee have carefully examined into these matters, the work performed by each one of the above employés, and believe that they should be continued in the service of the House, not only this session but after the expiration of the present Congress; and would therefore recommend the passage of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment in some of the general appropriation bills of the following clerks and employés of the House at the same rate of pay as now allowed under sundry resolutions of the House: Messenger boy in Chief Clerk's office, three clerks for indexing private claims, and two laborers in Clerk's document-room, and payments to extend from March 4, 1885, to June 30, 1886.

The petition is as follows:

WASHINGTON, December 13, 1884.

To the House of Representatives:

Your petitioners, Richard Nevins, W. M. Rightmyer, John F. Trentlen, J. J. Coughlan, &c., would respectfully represent that they are employés of the House of Representatives, and that under a recent decision of the First Comptroller of the Treasury they can not be paid any compensation for their services out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives after the 4th day of March next without some additional legislation. They would respectfully ask your honorable body to make such examination into this matter as may be necessary and to afford the relief required, and for this will ever pray, &c.

RICHARD NEVINS,
W. M. RIGHTMYER.
JOHN F. TRENTLEN.
JOHN J. COUGHLAN.
RYDEN HENRY.
WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. ERMENTROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STATUE OF REAR-ADMIRAL SAMUEL FRANCIS DU PONT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, informing the House of the completion of arrangements for the mounting of the statue of Rear-Admiral Samuel Francis Du Pont; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

FEES IN PENSION CASES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to resolution of the House adopted December 12, 1884, a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions relative to contracts for fees to claim agents in pension cases; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

SALARY OF ADDITIONAL MESSENGER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Navy Department for salary of additional messenger; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COAST SURVEY REPORT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report by J. E. Hilgard, Superintendent of the Progress of Coast and Geodetic Survey, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

"CANADA DE COCHITI."

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the New Mexico private land claim "Canada de Cochiti," No. 135, in the name of Antonio Lucero; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

REPRINT.

On motion of Mr. SINGLETON, by unanimous consent, Senate bill 1139, authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library, with accompanying diagram, was ordered to be reprinted for the use of the House, the supply in the document-room having been exhausted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports unless the special order is called for.

Mr. REAGAN. I will waive calling the special order with the understanding that it is to come up immediately after this business is disposed of.

JOHN A. LANDAN.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. 5935) for the relief of John A. Landan; which was referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay.

FREE HOMES FOR UNION SOLDIERS.

Mr. ROSECRANS, from the same committee, also reported back joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, present session, to this the Forty-eighth Congress, relative to free homes for all surviving soldiers and sailors of the Union armies, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely joint resolution (H. Res. 159) for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men in the State of Arkansas who served in the war of the rebellion; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ELLEN R. HARRIS.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 6915) for the relief of Ellen R. Harris; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, PEORIA, ILL.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7521) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois," approved May 9, 1882; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS A. WESTON.

Mr. GREENLEAF (by request of Mr. VANCE), from the Committee on Patents, reported back the bill (H. R. 7544) for the relief of Thomas A. Weston; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM S. CARR.

Mr. DARGAN, from the Committee on Patents, reported back the bill (H. R. 7641) for the relief of the widow and heirs of William S. Carr, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CORDELIA GALE.

Mr. WINANS, of Michigan, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4548) granting a pension to Cordelia Gale; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF BILLS.

On motion of Mr. WINANS, of Michigan, by unanimous consent the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7248) to increase the pension of Jane Brent; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1096) granting a pension to Mary Abbott, widow of William Abbott; and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

T. M. ENGLISH, ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. LORE, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 7760) for the relief of T. M. English, administrator of the estate of William Fitzpatrick, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH M. CUMMINGS AND OTHERS.

Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 1085, a bill (H. R. 7761) for the relief of Joseph M. Cummings, Hamilton J. Miller, and William McRoberts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYÉS DOORKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, from the Committee on Accounts, reported a joint resolution (H. Res. 301) in regard to the adjustment of the salaries of officers and employés of the Doorkeeper's department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with an adverse recommendation bills of the following titles; which were severally ordered to be laid on the table and the accompanying reports printed, namely:

The bills H. R. 814, H. R. 2947, H. R. 3455, and H. R. 4179, amending section 4415 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fixing the compensation of inspectors of hulls and boilers in the several districts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 218) amending section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, regulating the fees of inspectors' certificates issued to masters, engineers, pilots, and mates of steam vessels;

A bill (H. R. 3542) on the reduction of inspection fees; and INSPECTORS OF HULLS AND BOILERS.

Mr. GLASCOCK, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6961) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, relating to inspectors of hulls and boilers; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GARDNER.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. 7585) for the relief of William Gardner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. B. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back the bill (H. R. 7584) for the relief of A. B. Montgomery; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELMINA P. SPENCER.

Mr. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7262) increasing the pension of Elmina P. Spencer; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN SPARR.

Mr. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 7340) granting a pension to John Sparr; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

T. A. MORTON.

Mr. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back the bill (H. R. 7336) granting a pension to T. A. Morton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONTINENTAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, ETC.

Mr. HURD, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 2475, a bill (H. R. 7762) for the relief of the Continental Fire Insurance Company, the Eagle Fire Insurance Company, the City Fire Insurance Company, and the Commercial Mutual Insurance Company, all of New York; the Western National Bank, the Merchants' National Bank, and the Maryland Fire Insurance Company of Maryland.

The bill (H. R. 2475) was laid on the table, and the substitute therefor, the bill H. R. 7762, was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

TRIBUTES TO MEMORY OF DECEASED MEMBERS.

Mr. BRATTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That Tuesday, the 20th of January, at 2 o'clock p. m., be fixed as the time for delivering tributes to the memory of the late Hon. J. H. EVINS, late a Representative from South Carolina.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That Monday, January 26, 1885, at 2:30 p. m., be fixed as the time for paying appropriate honor to the memory of the late Hon. W. A. DUNCAN, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HARRISONBURG, VA.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution of inquiry which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House as follows:

First. Whether he has purchased a site for a suitable building for the accommodation of the United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices at Harrisonburg, State of Virginia, as authorized and directed by an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Harrisonburg and Abingdon, State of Virginia," approved July 7, 1882.

Second. What price was paid for said site, if purchased, and whether a valid title has been vested in the United States, and whether the State of Virginia has ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Third. What amount of the money appropriated for the purchase of said site and the commencement of the erection of a suitable building thereon has been expended, and how and for what expended.

Fourth. The estimated cost, including site, of said building and the amount necessary to be appropriated, in addition to the sum already appropriated, to complete the same.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERKS IN FIRST-CLASS POST-OFFICES.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7763) for the grading and classification of salaries of clerks in all first-class post-offices; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

WRECK OF THE UNITED STATES STEAMER ASHUELOT.

Mr. COX, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7764) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Ashuelot; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EVIDENCE TO QUIET TITLES.

Mr. POLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7765) in relation to evidence to quiet titles; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House, as the regular order, resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce and to regulate such commerce. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA] to lay on the table the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA] was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 121, not voting 53; as follows:

YEAS—149.

Adams, G. E.	Funston,	Lyman,	Seney,
Anderson,	Geddes,	McCoid,	Seymour,
Atkinson,	George,	McComas,	Shively,
Bagley,	Goff,	McCormick,	Skinner, C. R.
Barr,	Greenleaf,	Matson,	Smalls,
Beach,	Guenther,	Millard,	Smith, A. H.
Belmont,	Hanback,	Mitchell,	Smith, H. Y.
Bingham,	Harmer,	Morrill,	Spriggs,
Bisbee,	Hatch, H. H.	Morse,	Springer,
Boutelle,	Haynes,	Moulton,	Stephenson,
Brainerd,	Henderson, T. J.	Murray,	Stevens,
Breitung,	Hepburn,	Nelson,	Stewart, J. W.
Brewer, F. B.	Hewitt, A. S.	Nutting,	Stone,
Brewer, J. H.	Hill,	Ochiltree,	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Hiscock,	O'Hara,	Struble,
Browne, T. M.	Hitt,	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, E. B.
Brumm,	Holman,	Parker,	Taylor, J. D.
Buckner,	Holmes,	Payne,	Thomas,
Burleigh,	Holton,	Payson,	Van Alstyne,
Campbell, J. E.	Horr,	Perkins,	Wadsworth,
Cannon,	Houk,	Peters,	Wait,
Carleton,	Houseman,	Pettibone,	Wakefield,
Chace,	Howey,	Poland,	Ward,
Chalmers,	James,	Post,	Washburn,
Collins,	Jeffords,	Potter,	Weaver,
Converse,	Johnson,	Price,	Wemple,
Culbertson, W. W.	Jones, B. W.	Rankin,	White, Milo
Cullen,	Kean,	Ranney,	Whiting,
Cutcheon,	Keifer,	Ray, G. W.	Wilkins,
Dargan,	Kelley,	Ray, Ossian	Wilson, James
Davis, G. R.	Ketcham,	Reed,	Winans, E. B.
Davis, R. T.	Lacey,	Rice,	Winans, John
Deuster,	Laird,	Robinson, J. S.	Woodward,
Dingley,	Lamb,	Robinson, W. E.	Worthington.
Eldredge,	Lawrence,	Rockwell,	Yaple.
Evans,	Le Fevre,	Rosecrans,
Everhart,	Libbey,	Rowell,
Findlay,	Long,	Ryan,

NAYS—121.

Aiken,	Davis, L. H.	Kleiner,	Singleton,
Alexander,	Dibble,	Lanham,	Skinner, T. G.
Ballentine,	Dibrell,	Lewis,	Slocum,
Barksdale,	Dockery,	Lore,	Snyder,
Bennett,	Dunn,	Lovering,	Stewart, Charles
Blackburn,	Eaton,	Lowry,	Stockslager,
Blanchard,	Elliott,	McAdoo,	Storm,
Blount,	Ellis,	McMillin,	Sumner, C. A.
Boyle,	Ermentrout,	Miller, J. F.	Taylor, J. M.
Bratton,	Ferrell,	Mills,	Thompson,
Breckinridge,	Follett,	Money,	Throckmorton,
Broadhead,	Forney,	Morrison,	Tillman,
Buchanan,	Gibson,	Muldrow,	Townshend,
Burnes,	Glascock,	Mutchler,	Tucker,
Cabell,	Graves,	Neece,	Tully,
Caldwell,	Green,	Nicholls,	Turner, H. G.
Candler,	Halsell,	Oates,	Turner, Oscar
Cassidy,	Hammond,	O'Ferrall,	Van Eaton,
Clardy,	Hancock,	Patton,	Wallace,
Clay,	Hardeman,	Peel,	Warner, Richard
Clements,	Hatch, W. H.	Pierce,	Wellborn,
Cobb,	Henley,	Pryor,	Williams,
Cook,	Herbert,	Pusey,	Willis,
Cosgrove,	Hewitt, G. W.	Randall,	Wilson, W. L.
Covington,	Hopkins,	Reagan,	Wise, G. D.
Cox, S. S.	Hunt,	Reese,	Wolford,
Cox, W. R.	Hurd,	Riggs,	Wood,
Crisp,	Jones, J. H.	Robertson,	Young.
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. K.	Rogers, J. H.
Curtin,	Jones, J. T.	Scales,
Davidson,	Jordan,	Shelley,

NOT VOTING—53.

Adams, J. J.	Ellwood,	Kellogg,	Spooner,
Arnot,	English,	King,	Steele,
Barbour,	Fiedler,	Maybury,	Sumner, D. H.
Bayne,	Finerty,	Miller, S. H.	Talbott,
Belford,	Foran,	Milliken,	Valentine,
Bland,	Fyan,	Morgan,	Vance,
Bowen,	Garrison,	Muller,	Warner, A. J.
Budd,	Hardy,	Murphy,	Weller,
Campbell, Felix	Hart,	O'Neill, J. J.	White, J. D.
Campbell, J. M.	Hemphill,	Paige,	Wise, J. S.
Connolly,	Henderson, D. B.	Phelps,	York.
Dorsheimer,	Hoblitzell,	Rogers, W. F.
Dowd,	Hooper,	Russell,
Dunham,	Hutchins,	Shaw.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BEACH. I ask that by unanimous consent the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I object.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. KING with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. HART, until further notice, on this bill.
The following members were announced as paired for this day:
Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky.
Mr. SHELLEY with Mr. YORK.
Mr. HARDY with Mr. MILLIKEN.
Mr. TALBOTT with Mr. KELLOGG.
Mr. DOWD with Mr. PHELPS.
The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.
Mr. CRISP obtained the floor.
Mr. MILLS. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the amendment last adopted.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has been recognized.
Mr. MILLS. I desire the House shall not pass away from this point till I have had an opportunity to offer my amendment.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at a suitable opportunity.
Mr. CRISP. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "discrimination" insert:
"Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to prevent any railroad company from providing separate accommodations for white and colored persons."

Mr. CRISP. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that before the law all men are equal. I believe every man has the right, and should under any law enjoy the right, to demand at the hands of a common carrier as good accommodations and as good service as any other man receives for the same compensation. The amendment which I have submitted does not seek to invade that right of the citizen. There is nothing in this amendment which seeks to deprive one citizen of any right accorded to another.

In the State which I have the honor in part to represent we have a statute requiring railroad companies to furnish equal facilities to all persons—requiring them to make no discrimination, and providing that if they should violate the act any person injured may by suit recover of the railroad a sum not exceeding $10,000. I will read this statute so that the views of the people of Georgia, as expressed in their statute law, may not be misunderstood:

The different railroads in this State, acting as public carriers, are required to furnish equal accommodations to all, without regard to race, color, or previous condition.

And then follows the provision as to damages, as I have stated it.

That is the statute of Georgia. That statute, Mr. Speaker, has been before the courts in Georgia; and lest some gentlemen on this floor may not have the respect for the State courts of Georgia on questions of this kind that I have I will say that the court in Georgia referred to is the United States court. That court has held that the railroad companies may provide separate accommodations for the white and the colored people under a rule of equality.

That is the law to-day, and why change it? Can any good reason be given why either the colored man or the white man should object to that rule? My amendment does not seek to force the railroad companies to provide separate accommodations. It simply provides that this act shall not require them to carry the white people and the colored people in the same cars. If in response to a public sentiment in a State a railroad company sees proper to furnish separate accommodations for the white people and the colored people, is this objectionable? To whom is it objectionable? Whom does it injure? What bad effect can it have that men should come here and complain of it?

As I understand the provision which was adopted yesterday it goes even further than the bill which was passed some years ago and recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to be unconstitutional—the civil-rights bill or social-equality law. Now, what is the purpose of this movement! Why agitate anew this question? The law is well settled. The rights of the colored man are absolutely protected. Nobody wants to interfere with his rights. He has the same accommodations, the same kind of cars as the white man when he pays the same fare. Why, then, Mr. Speaker, should Congress pass a law which may be construed into requiring the mixture of the two races in the public conveyances of the land?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the amendment just offered will be voted down. I am glad that this amendment comes from a Representative of Georgia. I know, Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman says, that we have no objection to riding in a separate car when the car is of the same character as that provided for the white people to ride in. But I state here to the House that colored men and women do have trouble in riding through the State of Georgia. In Georgia they have a car called a second-class car; and, notwithstanding a colored man may buy a first-class ticket here in Washington, or anywhere else, to go perhaps to New Orleans, yet when he reaches the State of Georgia he is compelled to go into a "Jim Crow car," which is placed next to the locomotive. The railroad officers do not object, as they state, to furnishing us fair and proper accommodations; but when we get to a certain station on the road, and the conductor goes out, as is claimed to attend to business of the road, we always find a crowd coming into the cars and asking us, not very politely, to go out; and if we do not go out peaceably we are put out by force. This has been done time and again in Georgia.

I have no reason to speak of such things, thank God, as occurring in my own State, for we have a statute in that State providing for proper accommodations for the colored people; and I wish to say, to the credit and honor of the people of the State of South Carolina, that no distinction is made in that State among persons traveling through the State. But when you come to the State of Georgia there is a difference; and for that reason a Representative of that State asks that this amendment be made. He has referred to the statute law of that State. Why, sir, that statute, so far as concerns any colored man or lady riding through that State in a first-class car, is as dead as some law that never was thought of.

I hope, sir, that amendment by this House will be voted down. I believe the good sense of the House, and especially the good sense of those Democrats who are now crying out they are going to be the best friends of the colored man, are not going to allow the State of Georgia to come in here at this last hour with any such discrimination as has been proposed. [Applause on the Republican side of the House.]

No, sir, you can not fool the people any longer. If you mean what you say, start doing it now. I believe the same good sense of the House which adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA] will vote down this amendment moved by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. I first thought it would be better to move that the amendment be laid upon the table, but supposing other gentlemen wish to have something to say on it, I will for the present withhold that motion.

And I believe, sir, further that this amendment will be voted down by the right-thinking Democrats of the House, by those who are hallooing and crying out that there is no trouble about this matter; that great and good man Governor Cleveland, who is going to be our next President, will do all that is best for the welfare of the colored people. I do not believe those men are going to say here now to-day the colored people shall have nothing but a "Jim Crow" car in Georgia under the action of the railroad commissioners. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side of the House.]

Mr. HERBERT. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall sustain by my vote the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. If that amendment be adopted the provision offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA] will mean exactly what it would have meant if the words "without discrimination" in the concluding part of that amendment had been omitted.

There is no disposition on the part of the Southern Democrats to deny that all men without regard to race, color, or previous condition are entitled to equal facilities and equal accommodations when traveling on the same class of tickets with other men. That is not only the law in South Carolina, as has been admitted by the gentleman from that State, it is not only the law in Georgia, but it is the law in the State of Alabama. We have a statute to that effect and we have a decision on the statute by our railroad commission, composed entirely of Democrats.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS] who last addressed the House says that the law of Georgia is not enforced. If this amendment be adopted and this bill be enacted into law, then the courts will have the right to enforce the law giving equal facilities and equal accommodations to all men.

And that, sir, will be in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the civil-rights cases. Turn to that opinion delivered by Judge Bradley, and you will see while he intimates that the Congress of the United States would have the right to regulate this question when legislating on this subject of interstate commerce, yet he holds that it is not any infringement on the liberty of the citizen to make judicious and proper discriminations.

I read from the opinion, 109 U. S., p. 25. After deciding that neither the thirteenth, fourteenth, nor fifteenth amendments confer any new rights in this respect, he says:

There were thousands of free colored people in this country before the abolition of slavery enjoying all the essential rights of life, liberty, and property the same as white citizens; yet no one at that time thought that it was any invasion of his personal status as a freeman because he was not admitted to all the privileges enjoyed by white citizens, or because he was subjected to discriminations in the enjoyment of accommodations in inns, public conveyances, and places of amusement. Mere discriminations on account of race or color were not regarded as badges of slavery.

The author of the amendment inserted the words "without discrimination" simply for the purpose of making the amendment odious and raising a political issue, exciting political prejudice, and defeating the bill. If there had been any real desire to have a law passed securing to all men the right to have equal accommodations, equal facilities for their money with other people who paid no more, the amendment would have stopped right there. It would have said that much and nothing more, but the words "without discrimination" were inserted carefully for the purpose of compelling certain gentlemen on this side to vote against the bill if the amendment be adopted.

We have no objection, as I have said before and as I now repeat, to declaring that all men shall have equal facilities and equal accommodations; but we do object to any law that compels a common carrier to put all classes of people in the same cars and deprives it of the natural right to give equal accommodations in separate cars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'HARA. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Speaker, that this color question has arisen in this debate. [Laughter.] I for one, sir, hold that we are all Americans; that no matter whether a man is white or black he is an American citizen, and that the ægis of this great Republic should be held over him regardless of his color. The day is too late, public sentiment and the healthy influence of the nineteenth century all stare us in the face—it is too late, sir, for the American Congress to legislate on the question of color.

My amendment proposes nothing sir, in regard to color; it merely says the white man who may not occupy so high a social position as some of his more favored brethren shall not be discriminated against. It says that the colored man shall not be discriminated against. It is an amendment in a healthy direction, an amendment appealing to the common sense and patriotism of the entire people of this land.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has suggested that I introduced the amendment or rather inserted the words in it "without discrimination" for a political purpose. Mr. Speaker, I am not in the habit of raising a political issue two years before a campaign begins. The campaign has ended, and I and others who believe with me politically will abide the result. And far be it from me at this period to raise anything for political purpose. All I ask of the American Congress is that while you are protecting the property of men, while you are protecting dumb brutes, while you are protecting every other interest, you shall at the same time give voice and expression to the protection of the rights of American colored citizens. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, "without discrimination" seem to be the words that hurt. If, as the gentleman has said, upon the statute-book of Georgia and upon the statute-book of Alabama there are laws which provide no discrimination can be made, or in substance the same thing, then why in the name of common consistency, why in the name of fairness and justice should there be a desire now to place this "rider" upon my amendment? Why, you gentlemen of the North, you gentlemen of Ohio, of New York, of Indiana, and of every other Northern State, yea, gentlemen from my own State of North Carolina, we ride together, we ride according to the fare we pay or feel able and disposed to pay. If I am not able or disposed to pay for or buy a first-class ticket I buy a second-class ticket, and I go right along and there is no trouble.

If the gentlemen mean what they say, that it is the idea and the firm conviction of every man in the length and breadth of this land to accord to all men their rights and privileges, why then is this amendment to the amendment needed? The very amendment itself bears a negative assertion on its very face. When gentlemen come here and say the words "without discrimination" should be stricken from my amendment, it shows a deliberate purpose to discriminate. I do not believe there is a single railroad in the land, I do not believe there is a single corporation in this country which desires to foster any discrimination. Let the man be white or black, humble or great, plebeian or aristocratic, if he pays his fare, if he decently behaves himself, he is entitled to the same right as his money and desire prompt him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I offer the following substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

But nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to railroads the right to classify passengers as they may deem best for the public comfort and safety, or to relate to transportation between points wholly within the limits of one State.

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to a point of order on that amendment. The amendment proposes legislation as to what shall take place in one State, and in that regard it does not relate to interstate commerce, which is the object of this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is one of the objects of the amendment, to prevent interference within the limits of a State.

The SPEAKER. From the reading of the amendment by the Clerk the amendment provides that it shall not relate to regulations within a State.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the gentleman who has suggested the point of order is not the only one who misconstrues the object and spirit of my proposed substitute. As I understand the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA], he wishes by his amendment to guarantee to colored men all the rights under the law that are given to white men. I, sir, for one, do not wish to see his rights under the law changed or disturbed in the slightest degree, nor in any wise less than those accorded to white men.

An objection I have to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is that he speaks of colored men as contradistinguished from white people. I want the legislation, sir, to spread broadly over citizens. I do not wish corporations to have the power to make any discrimination against the comfort of the laboring poor, if you please, or the diseased, or the sick, or the disorderly of the colored race, that they have not over the white race, and gentlemen are entirely mistaken if they think that the Southern people wish to withhold from the colored race equality under the law. What the gentlemen admit here to be the rights under the law of travelers carried by common carriers I am willing to vote for; but when you seek to prevent the assorting of passengers or the providing of equal but separate accommodations from the standpoint of public convenience and public safety, you then introduce a social question into a question of commerce. You seek to prevent the exercise of rights which are now possessed under the common law, as I am told by those who are better informed in the law than I am—for I am not a lawyer—and rights that are as necessary to preserve one set of people from obtrusion as they are to preserve another. Keep out of this domain, but see to it that every man gets value received for his money equally with another. This is commerce. The other is society.

Now, sir, the amendment as offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is vague, in that it implies that when one pays a fare it would apply to places wholly within a State and would not relate to interstate commerce. The exclusive clause of my substitute is to prevent any possible construction of that character.

I submit in all candor and fairness that so far as the Southern people are concerned we do not wish to reserve to the railroads a single power in connection with the transportation of passengers that is not recognized in every part of the Union, or any power over the colored race that they do not have over the white race.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I must say that I rejoice to see this question lifted by the last suggestion from a mere question of politics or of color. I did not propose to discuss it in that light. I thought it very desirable that we should have a vote on the main question without bringing up questions of color or stirring up feelings of race or partisanship. Let wisdom be justified of her children. So I am very much pleased, indeed, to see this last amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas. This at once ceases to be a question of politics or color, and has now become a question of assortment [laughter]; and now this House, which is determined to pursue these "robber barons," has before it the plain question whether it will not merely leave to them the privilege of assorting us, but whether it will absolutely confer upon them the privilege of assortment by direct enactment on the part of Congress. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, I appeal to this House, engaged as it is in the pursuit of wicked monopolists, if it intends to confer upon them a privilege of assortment without rights by law? Why, surely we must have some Treasury regulations as to the method of assortment. [Laughter.] Are we to be assorted on the ground of size? [Great laughter.] Am I to be put into one car because of my size and the gentleman from Arkansas into another because of his? [Renewed laughter and applause.] Is this to be done on account of our unfortunate difference of measurement? Or are we to be assorted on the moustache ground? Are we to be assorted on the question of complexion, or are we to be assorted on the beard basis?

If not any of these, what basis of assortment are we to have? For my part I object to having these "robber barons" overlook and assort us on any whimsical basis they may undertake to set up. [Laughter.]

Why, surely, Mr. Speaker, this House, engaged as it is in putting down discriminations against good men, can not tolerate itself an amendment of this character for an instant [Applause.]

I hope we shall have a vote on the main question.

The SPEAKER. Debate upon the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last words of the pending substitute.

I wish to say a word in relation to the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas. I prefer, if I understood the reading of the language of it, that amendment to the one proposed by the gentleman from Georgia, for the reason assigned by him, that it speaks of people without reference to any distinction between races.

The gentleman from Maine is very facetious and makes himself particularly humorous over the question of assortment; and yet all over the State of Maine I will venture to assert the universal practice of railroad conductors is to assort people; and this is the case not only in Maine, but in every other State of this Union, whether they are white or black.

Mr. REED. Oh, no! not in Maine.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the gentleman will let me complete what I was going to say. For instance, in any part of the State of Maine a gentleman who approaches a car for the purpose of entering, unaccompanied by ladies, will be met by the question, "Have you ladies with you?" If not, you are required to take another car.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, that is not true in reference to Maine, for in Maine every gentleman is considered to be the fit associate of ladies. [Laughter.]

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman not to interrupt me. I repeat, they ask if you have ladies with you. You say no. The conductor says, "Take another car; this is for ladies with escorts."

Mr. REED. Now, Mr. Speaker, just there——

Mr. REAGAN. I must decline to yield in the five minutes I have.

Mr. REED. But I suppose the gentleman desires to recite facts?

Mr. REAGAN. I can not yield for an interruption in five minutes. Besides, sir, I was going on to say, a drunken man or a rowdy or a desperado might want to go into a lady's car. Now, does the gentleman from Maine and those who accept his views desire the conductor to be restrained from saying, "You can not do so?"

Mr. KEIFER. They can clear such characters out of the car in Ohio.

Mr. REAGAN. Is that what the gentleman from Maine means? Would he deprive the railroad conductors of that discretion with reference to their passengers and the comfort and convenience of the traveling public that they have in all parts of the country? If not, then what does the gentleman mean? I am not talking now of races. I am talking about men and women, without reference to race. You say that these men, the conductors of cars, shall have no power, but shall be compelled to put all sorts of people together without discrimination into the same car.

Now, does the gentleman insist on his humor in getting up a laugh about assorting people, or does he wish to pile all sorts of people and all classes into the same car? Besides, so far as this general question is concerned, I attach no importance to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina. It simply reaffirms the common law and the law and the practice in every Southern State in this Union. It adopts no new principle; and for my part I have only the objection to it that it comes here unconsidered by a committee, and not connected with the regulation of the transportation of freight, which has been the great subject under consideration.

Mr. HENLEY. It has been brought up, it may be, with the hope that it may defeat this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. And of course it is voted on with a view to secure the defeat of this bill by appealing to the sentiment of men who will vote on a sentiment. But when we go before the tribunal of the public we will not be required to answer for the speeches men make on this floor but for the measures on which we vote. And when we come to that, lawyers and all sensible men understand and know that the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, if it is not modified, only reaffirms the common law and a right common to all—the right to equal facilities and the right to equal accommodations for equal money. That does not mean that they shall be placed in any particular car. It does not mean that they have a right to any particular seat. But it leaves them as they are left now, under the control of the conductors, compelling them only to give first-class accommodations to holders of first-class tickets, with the discretion of the conductor for the preservation of good order and common decency to "assort," as the gentleman from Maine says, the passengers.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Texas declined to permit me to correct a misstatement which he made to the House with regard to the customs of the part of the country in which I live. I sympathize with the solemn way in which he treats the manner in which I have attacked his proposition. There is nothing that mistake dreads so much as ridicule; the absurdity of a proposition being pointed out, it is left full of holes

The gentleman from Texas says that this proposition is only a reaffirmation of the common law, and yet he voted against it. If it is nothing, why all these exertions on the part of the gentleman? He says if this is not modified, although it is nothing but the common law, you can not put a drunken man out of a car. Why, that is part of the police regulations of every State; and we can protect our citizens against criminals without modifying this amendment. The gentleman from Texas, upon reflection, will see that we can now. In the State of Maine, and I venture to say in all the New England States, there is no discrimination whatever. Every man is considered gentleman enough to associate with ladies, and no man is kept out of a car because he is not accompanied by a lady. This is true throughout New England, and I think throughout New York State. The utmost equality prevails and no harm is done to anybody.

Now, to refer again to this assortment business, I say that that shows the absurdity of this whole proposition. The amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] has brought out directly for the first time the color question. The amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina was simply a provision that all citizens of the United States should be treated alike. Is not that in accordance with the Constitution? Is not that in accordance with the practices of a free people? And this is a bill which has for its object the putting down of tyrants and the establishment of freedom in this country, according to the gentleman from Texas; but the moment it comes to a question of real freedom where freedom has been really denied he is the first one—although he admits it is only a re-enactment of the common law—he is the first one to head the opposition against it. How much, after that, his declamation about what we owe to liberty ought to avail in this House I leave to the House to judge.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CRISP. I renew the pro forma amendment. I had no intention when I submitted the amendment presented by myself to enter into a political discussion. It did not occur to me that in this country there were any people, white or black, who felt that a railroad company might not separate the one from the other. It did not occur to me on the one hand that the colored people of this country insisted on that sort of association. When I say the colored people I mean, Mr. Speaker, the great mass of them. The great mass of the colored people do not require, if I understand their wishes, anything of that sort. I have learned to-day that the white people, a number of them at least in this country, from what has been said here, prefer and require that sort of mixing of the assortment, to use the simile of the distinguished gentleman from Maine.

That gentleman says, Mr. Speaker, that there was no question of color brought into this debate until I brought it by the amendment that I had the honor to submit. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I say to that gentleman that I am in the habit of doing what I feel ought to be done directly, not by indirection, and I do not seek to evade the use of a word or words that exactly convey my meaning and at the same time accomplish a purpose that would be better accomplished if it were more plainly expressed and more frankly stated at the time the proposition was made. As for the amendment that was adopted yesterday at the suggestion of the Representative from North Carolina, whatever may be said about it this morning, I leave it to the good judgment of the House to determine if the purpose was not to prevent a separation of the colors.

If that is true, then that amendment first brought in the question of color upon this bill.

Now I want to say a word or two about the law of Georgia. I have no feeling in this matter. I believe my people desire that the law as it is to-day should remain unchanged. Therefore I have presented this amendment. But I want to say a word about the law of Georgia, because it has been assailed, or rather the practice under the law has been. Mr. Speaker, when a State places upon its statute-book a law, the judgment of the wisdom of the State is thereby expressed that the law is right, that it is founded on reason and justice, and ought to be enforced. If there is any failure in the enforcement of the law, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the fault of the law. Therefore when men say that in Georgia the provisions of the law are not enforced, that equal accommodations are not afforded to all, they say that they are unwilling to appeal to the law for the vindication of their personal rights; for if they are deprived of rights they can get redress if they seek it; the public sentiment that prompted the law will enforce it. The measure of damages for a violation of that law in the State of Georgia is fixed at a sum anywhere from $1 to $10,000. As I said before, it has been determined not only by the State courts but by the district court of the United States that under the law of absolute equality the separation of the races may be made.

That is all we ask. Who ought to complain of it? Do you on the other side complain of the separation? Are you unwilling that even in traveling you should be separated temporarily from any other class of people but white people? Is that the proposition? Is not the amendment that has been adopted, Mr. Speaker, a mere effort to strike at the sentiment existing in some parts of this country which prompts the people there, while fully recognizing the equality of all persons under the law, to avoid as much as possible personal association with a class in their midst?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. HENLEY. I do. Mr. Speaker, the substitute of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is a business, commercial, economic proposition that everybody understands. Now, being in the close confidence of the gentleman from Georgia, I am authorized by him to impart some little comfort to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who seems to be tortured with some apprehension in regard to this question of "assortment." I am authorized to state that in this proposed "assortment" the assorters, the conductors on the railroad trains, are not to be governed by mere questions of personal appearance. Therefore the gentleman from Maine need have no apprehension. [Laughter.]

Now I want this House and every member thereof to understand very distinctly this proposition—that the introduction of this race question, this social question, whether such was the purpose of the gentleman from North Carolina or not, was seized upon by the other side and taken up for the purpose, in my judgment, of defeating this bill, a bill designed to relieve the people of this great Republic against the exactions and aggressions of railroad corporations. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This proposition comes from a suspicious side of the House. For almost twenty years the fight has been going on in this Hall, the forces on one side being led by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], who has achieved imperishable renown by his advocacy of the rights of the people against the railroad corporations. Finally, as the result of his assiduous, unremitting, and tireless efforts, a bill was about to be passed which would relieve the people—which was responsive to the demands of the people throughout this land for some measure of relief. The bill was about to be passed. In comes this proposition.

It is supported by the other side of the House. Why? Oh, they say, upon philanthropic, upon benevolent, upon humanitarian grounds. We have a right, sir, to our own opinions upon the good faith of that pretense. The judgment of the people of the country is, as you will find hereafter, that upon this commercial question, this question affecting fares and freights, the true friends of the people ought to concentrate their efforts to keep out of consideration everything alien or foreign thereto, and address themselves exclusively to the question in hand.

There are two ways of defeating a proposition. One is by fighting it fairly and squarely; the other by resorting to circuity and indirection, by encumbering the proposition with all sorts of foreign matter which may make it objectionable. If the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA], the evil effects of which are sought to be countervailed by the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], should be incorporated without modification in this bill, it is apparent to every one that it jeopardizes the bill; it imperils the passage of the bill on this floor; it creates enemies to it. Whether those enemies are right in their view as to the effect of this amendment is not the question. I appeal to the friends of the people; I appeal to those who believe sincerely that corporations should be seized by the throat and throttled into some kind of decency and regard for the law and the rights of the people of this land; I appeal to them to sustain this measure, and thereby afford some relief, especially to the people of the Pacific coast, whom in part I represent upon this floor, and who (I call attention to the enormous extortion) pay almost 7 cents a mile for transportation from San Francisco to Omaha; in fact, quite 7 cents, including sleeping accommodations.

Now, I think the purport of the amendment as originally introduced—I will not say the intent, for that would be impugning motives—I think the effect of the amendment as originally introduced is likely to be destructive to the bill, destructive to the profound wishes of the people as expressed in the platforms in almost every State in the Union in recent conventions which have been held.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask by unanimous consent to have the amendment read as it has been modified. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CRISP. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BRUMM. I renew it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let the amendment as modified be read.

The amendment as modified was again read.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, I confess I do not understand the object of gentlemen on the other side of the House on this question. They seem to have no objection to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina except as to the last words, "without discrimination." Yet they say there is no color line in this question. They are willing to adopt this amendment provided you strike out those words, "without discrimination." They attempt to have us believe that they are willing there shall be no discrimination as to color.

Now, sir, I speak from experience when I say that in the State of South Carolina—and my experience was while attending the funeral of an honored Senator from the State of Georgia—when I say I found there discrimination on the color line in the cars at least even so far as to prevent or prohibit the colored assistant sergeant-at-arms from sitting in the same room with the funeral cortege.

This is intended to strike out the color line, and these gentlemen may as well say so, and not attempt to bring in other amendments, as the gentleman from the State of Arkansas has done. I saw in the cars passing through South Carolina Southern women coming in who chewed tobacco and spat over the floor, and I saw well-dressed Southern ruffians come in who were allowed to sit in the same cars with white men, and when a colored man came in he was compelled to take a seat in another car. I was interested to know why, and followed him into the other car. I said to him, "Please let me see your ticket." He showed me the ticket, and it was exactly the same ticket sold to and held by those in the same car we were in and from which he was expelled.

Mr. COSGROVE. Which car were you in? [Laughter.] What was the complexion of its inmates?

Mr. BRUMM. Not any blacker than some I see now were in the car I was in. [Applause on the Republican side.] As I have said, discrimination was made there against that colored man; and I wish to say to the gentleman from California, who accuses us of attempting to defeat this bill by introducing this amendment, if you are honest and there is no color line in this, why then do you not vote for it as an amendment and then you will not defeat the bill?

Mr. HENLEY. Because it creates enemies to the bill, and you know it.

Mr. BRUMM. It does by your color line and nothing else. One man says it is not the color line and another man says you are going to defeat it because it creates enemies. Wherein are the enemies created unless it is on the color line?

Mr. HENLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENLEY. Have your side favored this bill?

Mr. BRUMM. I have favored the bill, and a number of gentlemen here have favored it. I say, if you are honest, and I repeat it again, vote for this amendment as it is, and do not attempt to come in here and say we are killing the bill simply because we are attempting to prevent any color line in it.

Mr. HENLEY. If the gentlemen think that the rights of the white race are jeopardized, why do not they introduce a bill, and not encumber the passage of this interstate-commerce bill with such an amendment?

Mr. BRUMM. There is a bill already introduced, and why do you not pass it?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina can speak for that State in reference to alleged discrimination there. I will speak for the State of Mississippi, and will assert there is no discrimination in regard to the transportation of persons under her laws or in the regulations of the railroad companies. Therefore the amendment can have no practical bearing on any practice in vogue in that State.

But, sir, I wish to say that I voted against it because I regarded it as irrelevant and foreign to the objects of the pending bill, and because it purported to correct abuses which do not exist.

The amendment relates to the transportation of persons. The pending bill relates exclusively to the transportation of property. In other words, the bill is designed to provide remedies against acts of oppression and injustice in the transportation of freight.

But, sir, I will not be deterred from voting for a measure of great public importance on account of the irrelevancy of the amendment which has been introduced on the motion of the Representative from North Carolina. It provides that persons purchasing tickets shall receive the same accommodations, be furnished with the same facilities, and afforded the same accommodations that are granted to all other persons. But I submit that the provision does not prevent railroad companies from providing separate accommodations for persons, provided they are equally comfortable, and, for that matter, equally ornamental; and if the amendment is designed to convey a different meaning, it will be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, or whenever the issue is made, in pursuance of its opinion pronounced through Justice Bradley at the October term, 1883, in the cases founded on what is known as the civil-rights acts, passed March 1, 1875. The amendment is irrelevant; and mere brutem fulmen; and I shall still support the bill even if it is retained.

Mr. BRUMM. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I renew it.

Mr. Speaker, the world moves. I desire to admonish gentlemen that the soul of old John Brown is marching on. Only a few years ago an intelligent and educated physician of the State of Massachusetts was put off a street-car in the capital of the nation because he was only one-half white. I should not have particularly objected to the discrimination if they had put the colored part off alone, but they put the white part off with it. [Laughter.] And, sir, in all this character of class legislation we recognize and gentlemen who advocate it recognize the idea that if a man happens to be one-eighth colored it is utterly demoralizing to the seven-eighths white; and that proportion of the man is to be insulted in order that they may get out of the company of so much of the colored.

I want to say also that notwithstanding the colored man was put off the street car in this city in order that white men might have the exclusive privilege of riding along Pennsylvania avenue, the day has come when I see even chivalric gentlemen, not plebeians only, but patricians of the purest blood, riding in our street cars sandwiched between men as black as an imaginary minister from Hayti, to which my friend from New York [Mr. COX] alluded somewhat humorously a few years ago when making an attack upon the colored race. [Laughter.]

We ride now in the same cars with colored people. This is not a social question. It is a question of transportation merely. I do not insist that I am bound to admit to my fireside a colored man, or at my table. That is a question of taste or choice with me. I may meet a white man at my threshold and shut the door in his face. It is not a social question in any sense of the word; this is not; the other might be. What, then, is the question?

It is a question between common carriers, engaged in the transportation of passengers for hire and exacting particular fare in return for particular accommodations agreed to be furnished by them and the passenger. That is the contract. It is a contract between the carrier and the passenger. Now it is a question whether or not the colored people may permit the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to ride upon the same car with them, provided he has the same character of ticket and entitled to the same accommodations. It is insisted by certain gentlemen here on the other side that the colored people have the right to exclude white people from the same car, for if the white man may exclude the colored man why not the colored exclude the white?

Now, let me here appeal to gentlemen upon the other side to ask what sense is there in this controversy? I know it is not long since the Democratic party by public resolution declared that it would be demoralizing to the white race to allow the negro to be buried in the same graveyard with them. As if it made any material difference to the men in the graveyard one way or the other, for if the negro was planted there they could not get out. As a friend of mine said once, when replying to one asking a subscription for keeping up a graveyard fence, that it ought not to have it even by legislation, because those who are in could not get out, and those who were out did not want to get in [laughter]; and there is just as much sense in excluding the colored race from the graveyards as there is from the cars.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, was recognized and yielded to Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me come back to the question again. It is said that this is a social question. There has never yet been a right secured to the colored people by our legislation that was not confronted with that objection. When we proposed to strike the whip from the hand of the master, all over even our northern country it was said it was the first step toward the inauguration of social equality; and after awhile, when we said we would open the doors of the Federal courts so that the humblest American citizen might go into the tribunals of the nation to assert his rights or right his wrongs, the Northern Democracy said it would tend to miscegenation and intermarriage of races. Now, marriage is a matter of taste purely. I have known some instances in which the two races have been intermarried, the white with the colored, and so far as my experience goes in every instance of this kind the colored man or woman got the worst of the bargain. It was a clean cheat, so far as they were concerned.

But after awhile, when, as was suggested by the martyred Lincoln, we put the ballot in the hand of the newly-made freedman that he might assist us in keeping liberty in the family of freedom forever, the whole Democracy, with one accord, said it was an attempt upon our part to introduce the negro into our family relations and create social equality. Emancipation, citizenship, and enfranchisement have come, and the social relations between races continue, as they were, a matter of personal choice.

Gentlemen do not seem to know that this question of social life is not, never was, and never can be regulated by law. It is a question of individual tastes. I associate with gentlemen because I believe them to be my social equals. I decline to associate with other gentlemen, whether they be white or black, because I do not so regard them. If this was a statute to make a colored Republican equal to a white Democrat I should vote against it. I would not vote for it. It could not be possible either to reduce the one or to elevate the other by an act of Congress. [Laughter.]

The time has come when there ought to be an end to this caste legislation, and I hope the time is not far distant when every white American citizen can sit down beside a respectable colored man without feeling that he is disgraced by the mere association, especially when it is simply occupying perhaps a distant seat in the same railroad car. God knows I pity the man, the white man, that would appeal to the Congress of the United States for some statute to protect him from what he would regard as the humiliation of being carried along a public highway in the same carriage of transportation with a man blacker than himself. The man who asks such protection is entitled to commiseration.

Mr. REAGAN. We have had extensive debate on these amendments. I now call the previous question on the pending amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] demands the previous question on the proposed amendments.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does that include my substitute?

The SPEAKER. It does.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 137.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. HORR said: There seems to be a misunderstanding. Some gentlemen understand the Speaker to say that the previous question if now ordered would cut off all debate on future amendments to the pending section.

The SPEAKER. The motion for the previous question applies simply to the pending amendments. The previous question was demanded on the pending amendments, not on the section.

The negative vote being counted, there were—noes 2.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the adoption of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] for the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP]. Both will be read. The Clerk will first read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "discrimination" insert:

"Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to prevent any railroad company from providing separate accommodations for white and colored persons."

The SPEAKER. For which the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] proposes the substitute which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

But nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to railroads the right to provide separate accommodations for passengers as they may deem best for the public comfort and safety, or to relate to transportation relating to points wholly within the limits of one State.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute which has just been read.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 80, noes 111.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 26—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. Count the other side.

The negative vote being counted, there were noes 141—the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, 37 members voting therefor—more than one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. As a matter of compromise, inasmuch as it is the desire of gentlemen to make a record, I hope consent will be given to have the vote taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the vote by tellers on the question of ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEIFER. I suggest that by unanimous consent the vote for tellers might be taken as ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands there was objection to that. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, will act as tellers.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 5.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 137, nays 127, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—137.

Aiken,	Dibrell,	Lewis,	Skinner, T. G.
Alexander,	Dockery,	Lore,	Slocum,
Ballentine,	Dunn,	McAdoo,	Snyder,
Barksdale,	Eaton,	McMillin,	Springer,
Bennett,	Ellis,	Matson,	Stewart, Charles
Blackburn,	Ermentrout,	Miller, J. F.	Stockslager,
Blanchard,	Ferrell,	Mills,	Storm,
Blount,	Findlay,	Mitchell,	Sumner, C. A.
Bratton,	Follett,	Money,	Talbott,
Breckinridge,	Foran,	Morrison,	Taylor, J. M.
Buchanan,	Forney,	Moulton,	Thompson,
Buckner,	Geddes,	Muldrow,	Throckmorton,
Budd,	Gibson,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Burnes,	Glascock,	Murray,	Townshend,
Cabell,	Graves,	Mutchler,	Tucker,
Caldwell,	Green,	Neece,	Tully,
Campbell, J. E.	Greenleaf,	Oates,	Turner, H. G.
Candler,	Halsell,	O'Ferrall,	Turner, Oscar
Carleton,	Hancock,	Patton,	Van Eaton,
Cassidy,	Hardeman,	Pierce,	Warner, A. J.
Clardy,	Hatch, W. H.	Peel,	Warner, Richard
Clay,	Henley,	Price,	Wellborn,
Clements,	Herbert,	Pryor,	Wilkins,
Cobb,	Hewitt, A. S.	Randall,	Williams,
Converse,	Hewitt, G. W.	Rankin,	Willis,
Cook,	Holman,	Reagan,	Wilson, W. L.
Cosgrove,	Hunt,	Reese,	Winans, E. B.
Cox, S. S.	Hurd,	Riggs,	Winans, John
Cox, W. R.	Jones, J. H.	Robertson,	Wise, G. D.
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. K.	Rogers, J. H.	Wood,
Curtin,	Jones, J. T.	Rosecrans,	Woodward,
Dargan,	Jordan,	Scales,	Young.
Davidson,	Kleiner,	Seymour,
Davis, L. H.	Lanham,	Shively,
Dibble,	Le Fevre,	Singleton,

NAYS—127.

Adams, G. E.	Everhart,	Libbey,	Rowell,
Anderson,	Funston,	Long,	Russell,
Atkinson,	George,	Lowry,	Ryan,
Bagley,	Goff,	Lyman,	Seney,
Barr,	Guenther,	McCoid,	Skinner, C. R.
Beach,	Hammond,	McComas,	Smalls,
Belmont	Hanback,	McCormick,	Smith, A. H.
Bingham,	Harmer,	Millard,	Smith, H. Y.
Bisbee,	Hatch, H. H.	Morrill,	Spooner,
Boutelle,	Haynes,	Morse,	Spriggs,
Brainerd,	Henderson, D. B.	Nelson,	Stephenson,
Breitung,	Henderson, T. J.	Nicholls,	Stevens,
Brewer, F. B.	Hepburn,	Nutting,	Stewart, J. W.
Brewer, J. H.	Hill,	O'Hara,	Stone,
Broadhead,	Hiscock,	O'Neill, Charles	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Hitt,	O'Neill, J. J.	Struble,
Browne, T. M.	Hoblitzell,	Parker,	Taylor, E. B.
Brumm,	Holmes,	Payne,	Taylor, J. D.
Burleigh,	Horr,	Payson,	Thomas,
Campbell, J. M.	Houk,	Perkins,	Van Alstyne,
Cannon,	Howey,	Peters,	Wait,
Chace,	James,	Pettibone,	Wakefield,
Chalmers,	Jeffords,	Phelps,	Wallace,
Crisp,	Johnson,	Poland,	Ward,
Culbertson, W. W.	Jones, B. W.	Post,	Washburn,
Cullen,	Kean,	Potter,	Weaver,
Cutcheon,	Keifer,	Ranney,	White, Milo
Davis, G. R.	Ketcham,	Ray, Ossian	Wilson, James
Davis, R. T.	Lacey,	Reed,	Wolford,
Dingley,	Laird,	Rice,	Worthington,
Eldredge,	Lamb,	Robinson, J. S.	Yaple.
Evans,	Lawrence,	Rockwell,

NOT VOTING—59.

Adams, J. J.	Dunham,	Hutchins,	Rogers, W. F.
Arnot,	Elliott,	Kelley,	Shaw,
Barbour,	Ellwood,	Kellogg,	Shelley,
Bayne,	English,	King,	Steele,
Belford,	Fiedler,	Lovering,	Sumner, D. H.
Bland,	Finerty,	Maybury,	Valentine,
Bowen,	Fyan,	Miller, S. H.	Vance,
Boyle,	Garrison,	Milliken,	Wadsworth,
Campbell, Felix	Hardy,	Morgan,	Weller,
Collins,	Hart,	Muller,	Wemple,
Connolly,	Hemphill,	Ochiltree,	White, J. D.
Covington,	Holton,	Paige,	Whiting,
Deuster,	Hooper,	Pusey,	Wise, J. S.
Dorsheimer,	Hopkins,	Ray, G. W.	York.
Dowd,	Houseman,	Robinson, W. E.

So the substitute of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE for the amendment of Mr. CRISP was adopted.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. FINERTY with Mr. ROBINSON, of New York, for this day.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. REAGAN. I now call the previous question——

[The remainder of Mr. REAGAN'S statement was not heard at the reporter's desk.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COX, of New York). The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. GOFF addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is operating at present on the amendment as amended.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] desires to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not now in order.

Mr. REED. It is in order after the substitute is adopted. The previous question was ordered on the pending amendment, but not, as the Speaker expressly said, to cut off any future amendment. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia will be recognized to offer his amendment hereafter. This does not cut off amendments to the first section. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. SMALLS. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to lay on the table the amendment as amended? I move that the amendment as amended be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

The motion of Mr. SMALLS was not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I call the previous question on the section and those two amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is dividing on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. After the vote shall have been taken on agreeing to the amendment as amended by the adoption of the substitute, then I understand the proposition of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] will be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The section is open to further amendment, certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. I had moved the previous question, and we were proceeding to vote, but the result had not been announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the previous question is now operating.

Mr. HISCOCK. It was distinctly stated by the gentleman from Texas that he moved the previous question on the substitute.

Mr. REAGAN. That may have been the understanding of the gentleman; but those around me know that I asked the previous question on the section and the amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. It was announced by the Chair that after the vote had been taken on the amendment as amended the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia would be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending proposition is this——

Mr. MCMILLIN. The Chair stated that the gentleman from West Virginia would be recognized hereafter; but the gentleman from Texas demanded the previous question.

Mr. GOFF. The previous question was only demanded on the amendment to the amendment; it was so stated.

Mr. HISCOCK. The previous question was not demanded upon the section.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I appeal to the Chair to listen for one moment on the question of order. The gentleman from Texas is in charge of this measure. He has stated to the Speaker and the House that, being recognized by the Chair, he had asked the previous question upon this section and pending amendments. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] That is the statement made by the gentleman from Texas, and I know no right on the part of any gentleman to challenge it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do challenge it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am entitled to the floor, and the gentleman from New York will challenge my statement, if he wants to, in his own time, not mine.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am willing to leave the question to the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is the unbroken rule of this House to recognize the gentleman in charge of a measure to enter a motion. The gentleman from Texas has submitted a motion. It is for the previous question, as he tells us, not upon the substitute, but upon the paragraph or section and the pending amendments.

I deny that the gentleman from New York or any other gentleman has the right to challenge that statement, and the Chair is bound to accept it. It is for the House either to order the previous question or reject the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HISCOCK rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will suspend for a moment until the Chair states the proposition before the House. The House was dividing on the question of accepting the amendment as amended by the gentleman from Arkansas. That matter has not yet been determined. When it is determined the Chair will recognize the next person in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is operating on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all we claim.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask what the question before the House is?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition is this: The gentleman from Arkansas moved to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. REAGAN. By his substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By a substitute, and that is the pending proposition. It has been adopted, but a division was called for. The Chair must conclude that proposition first; and now the question is on adopting the substitute as amended on motion of the gentleman from Arkansas.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 148, noes 117.

Mr. REED demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 137, nays 131, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—137.

Aiken,	Davis, L. H.	Lanham,	Skinner, T. G.
Alexander,	Dibble,	Le Fevre,	Snyder,
Ballentine,	Dibrell,	Lewis,	Springer,
Barksdale,	Dockery,	Lore,	Stewart, Charles
Bennett,	Dunn,	McAdoo,	Stockslager,
Blackburn,	Eaton,	McMillin,	Storm,
Blanchard,	Ellis,	Matson,	Sumner, C. A.
Blount,	Ermentrout,	Miller, J. F.	Talbott,
Bratton,	Ferrell,	Mills,	Taylor, J. M.
Breckinridge,	Findlay,	Mitchell,	Thompson,
Broadhead,	Follett,	Money,	Throckmorton,
Buchanan,	Foran,	Morrison,	Tillman,
Buckner,	Forney,	Moulton,	Townshend,
Budd,	Fyan,	Muldrow,	Tucker,
Burnes,	Geddes,	Murphy,	Tully,
Cabell,	Gibson,	Murray,	Turner, H. G.
Caldwell,	Glascock,	Mutchler,	Turner, Oscar
Campbell, J. E.	Graves,	Neece,	Van Eaton,
Candler,	Green,	Nicholls,	Wallace,
Carleton,	Greenleaf,	Oates,	Warner, A. J.
Cassidy,	Halsell,	O'Ferrall,	Warner, Richard
Clardy,	Hammond,	Patton,	Wellborn,
Clay,	Hardeman,	Pierce,	Wilkins,
Clements,	Hatch, W. H.	Peel,	Williams,
Cobb,	Hemphill,	Pryor,	Willis,
Converse,	Henley,	Randall,	Wilson, W. L.
Cook,	Herbert,	Rankin,	Winans, E. B.
Cosgrove,	Hewitt, G. W.	Reagan,	Winans, John
Covington,	Holman,	Reese,	Wise, G. D.
Cox, S. S.	Hunt,	Riggs,	Wolford,
Cox, W. R.	Hurd,	Rogers, J. H.	Wood,
Crisp,	Jones, J. H.	Rosecrans,	Young.
Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. K.	Scales,
Dargan,	Jones, J. T.	Seymour,
Davidson,	Kleiner,	Singleton,

NAYS—131.

Adams, G. E.	Guenther,	Lyman,	Seney,
Anderson,	Hanback,	McCoid,	Shively,
Atkinson,	Harmer,	McComas,	Skinner, C. R.
Bagley,	Hatch, H. H.	McCormick,	Smalls,
Barr,	Haynes,	Millard,	Smith, A. H.
Beach,	Henderson, D. B.	Milliken,	Smith, H. Y.
Belmont,	Henderson, T. J.	Morrill,	Spooner,
Bingham,	Hepburn,	Morse,	Spriggs,
Bisbee,	Hewitt, A. S.	Nelson,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Hill,	Nutting,	Stevens,
Brainerd,	Hiscock,	O'Hara,	Stewart, J. W.
Breitung,	Hitt,	O'Neill, Charles	Stone,
Brewer, F. B.	Hoblitzell,	O'Neill, J. J.	Strait,
Brewer, J. H.	Holmes,	Parker,	Struble,
Brown, W. W.	Holton,	Payne,	Taylor, E. B.
Browne, T. M.	Horr,	Payson,	Taylor, J. D.
Brumm,	Houk,	Peters,	Thomas,
Burleigh,	Howey,	Pettibone,	Van Alstyne,
Campbell, J. M.	James,	Phelps,	Wadsworth,
Cannon,	Jeffords,	Poland,	Wait,
Chalmers,	Johnson,	Post,	Wakefield,
Culbertson, W. W.	Jones, B. W.	Potter,	Ward,
Cullen,	Kean,	Price,	Washburn,
Cutcheon,	Keifer,	Ranney,	Weaver,
Davis, G. R.	Ketcham,	Ray, G. W.	Wemple,
Davis, R. T.	Lacey,	Ray, Ossian	White, J. D.
Deuster,	Laird,	Reed,	White, Milo
Dingley,	Lamb,	Rice,	Whiting,
Eldredge,	Lawrence,	Robinson, J. S.	Wilson, James
Evans,	Libbey,	Rockwell,	Woodward,
Everhart,	Long,	Rowell,	Worthington,
Funston,	Lovering,	Russell,	Yaple.
Goff,	Lowry,	Ryan,

NOT VOTING—55.

Adams, J. J.	Collins,	Finerty,	Jordan,
Arnot,	Connolly,	Garrison,	Kelley,
Barbour,	Curtin,	George,	Kellogg,
Bayne,	Dorsheimer,	Hancock,	King,
Belford,	Dowd,	Hardy,	Maybury,
Bland,	Dunham,	Hart,	Miller, S. H.
Bowen,	Elliott,	Hooper,	Morgan,
Boyle,	Ellwood,	Hopkins,	Muller,
Campbell, Felix	English,	Houseman,	Ochiltree,
Chace,	Fiedler,	Hutchins,	Paige,

Perkins,	Rogers, W. F.	Steele,	Weller,
Pusey,	Shaw,	Sumner, D. H.	Wise, J. S.
Robertson,	Shelley,	Valentine,	York.
Robinson, W. E.	Slocum,	Vance,

So the substitute as amended was adopted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. CHACE said: I wish to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with Mr. ROBERTSON. If he were present, I would vote "no."

On motion of Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. CHACE, for this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute as amended was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 2280) for the relief of Mrs. Jane Venable; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the return, in compliance with the request of the House, of the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish the department of agriculture.

It further announced the Senate requested the return of the bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 1682) to enable the people of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1695) relating to lands in Colorado lately occupied by the Uncompahgre and White Ute River Indians;

A bill (S. 2463) to authorize the suspension of the exercise of extra-territorial jurisdiction in the territories of the Bey of Tunis, and to amend section 4127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and Joint resolution (S. R. 44) directing the Public Printer to furnish copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the Secretary of State for each of the American legations abroad.

It further announced the passage with amendments, in which concurrence was requested, of the bill (H. R. 2728) detaching Grundy County, Tennessee, from the southern division, &c., of the district of East Tennessee and attaching it to the middle district of said State, and for other purposes.

RETURN OF SENATE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Senate has requested the return of the bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson. If there be no objection the request will be granted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the following amendment to be added to the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nor shall any railroad company or its officers charge or receive from any person who is to be conveyed from one State or Territory into another any sum exceeding 3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by said person.

Mr. MILLS. As the House has adopted the subject of regulation of passengers as well as freight in this bill I have offered this amendment. I am aware that a great many of the railroads in the United States charge largely under 3 cents per mile, but I am aware also there are some roads, and among them those who have received the most generous bounty on the part of the Government of the United States, who charge 6 and 8 and even 10 cents per mile. A number of States, as I am informed—certain it is so in my own State—have passed regulations prescribing the rates passengers shall be charged in the State. It is 3 cents per mile as the maximum in my State. I understand it is so in other States. It is so in Kansas. I wish to place a restriction on the charge which railroad companies may make on interstate passengers who are taken up in one State, travel over others, and are put down in a distant State. Three cents is enough for any railroad to charge for passengers. I hope the House will adopt the amendment.

In accordance with my agreement with my colleague I now demand the previous question on that amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 57.

Mr. BUDD and Mr. HOLMAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 139, nays 120, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—139.

Alexander,	Fyan,	Matson,	Skinner, T. G.
Anderson,	Gibson,	Millard,	Smalls,
Atkinson,	Glascock,	Miller, J. F.	Spooner,
Barksdale,	Graves,	Mills,	Springer,
Beach,	Green,	Morrill,	Stephenson,
Bisbee,	Guenther,	Morrison,	Stewart, Charles
Blanchard,	Halsell,	Moulton,	Stockslager,
Brainerd,	Hanback,	Muldrow,	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Hancock,	Murray,	Struble,
Browne, T. M.	Hatch, H. H.	Nelson,	Sumner, C. A.
Brumm,	Hatch, W. H.	Nicholls,	Talbott,
Burleigh,	Haynes,	Nutting,	Taylor, J. D.
Cabell,	Henderson, D. B.	O'Ferrall,	Taylor, J. M.
Campbell, J. E.	Henderson, T. J.	O'Hara,	Thomas,
Campbell, J. M.	Henley,	Payne,	Thompson,
Chalmers,	Hepburn,	Payson,	Townshend,
Clay,	Hewitt, A. S.	Pierce,	Tully,
Clements,	Hill,	Peel,	Turner, Oscar
Converse,	Hitt,	Perkins,	Wakefield,
Cook,	Holman,	Peters,	Wallace,
Cosgrove,	Holmes,	Pettibone,	Ward,
Covington,	Houk,	Poland,	Warner, A. J.
Culberson, D. B.	Howey,	Price,	Warner, Richard
Cullen,	Jones, J. H.	Randall,	Weaver,
Cutcheon,	Kleiner,	Ray, G. W.	Wellborn,
Davidson,	Lacey,	Ray, Ossian	Wemple,
Davis, G. R.	Laird,	Riggs,	White, J. D.
Davis, L. H.	Lamb,	Robinson, J. S.	Whiting,
Davis, R. T.	Lanham,	Rogers, J. H.	Wilkins,
Deuster,	Lawrence,	Rowell,	Wilson, James
Dingley,	Le Fevre,	Ryan,	Wise, G. D.
English,	Lewis,	Scales,	Wood,
Everhart,	Lowry,	Seney,	Yaple,
Foran,	McAdoo,	Shively,	Young.
Funston,	McCormick,	Singleton,

NAYS—120.

Adams, G. E.	Dibble,	Jordan,	Rockwell,
Aiken,	Dibrell,	Kean,	Russell,
Bagley,	Eaton,	Keifer,	Seymour,
Barr,	Eldredge,	Ketcham,	Skinner, C. R.
Belmont,	Elliott,	Libbey,	Smith, A. H.
Bennett,	Ellis,	Long,	Snyder,
Bingham,	Ermentrout,	Lore,	Spriggs,
Blackburn,	Findlay,	Lovering,	Stevens,
Blount,	Follett,	Lyman,	Stewart, J. W.
Boutelle,	Forney,	McMillin,	Stone,
Bratton,	Geddes,	Mitchell,	Storm,
Breckinridge,	Greenleaf,	Money,	Taylor, E. B.
Breitung,	Hammond,	Morse,	Throckmorton,
Brewer, F. B.	Hardeman,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Brewer, J. H.	Harmer,	Mutchler,	Tucker,
Broadhead,	Hemphill,	Neece,	Turner, H. G.
Buchanan,	Herbert,	Oates,	Van Alstyne,
Buckner,	Hewitt, G. W.	O'Neill, Charles	Van Eaton,
Burnes,	Hiscock,	Parker,	Wadsworth,
Caldwell,	Hoblitzell,	Patton,	Wait,
Candler,	Horr,	Phelps,	Washburn,
Cannon,	Houseman,	Post,	White, Milo
Carleton,	Hunt,	Potter,	Williams,
Cassidy,	Hurd,	Pryor,	Willis,
Clardy,	James,	Pusey,	Wilson, W. L.
Cobb,	Jeffords,	Ranney,	Winans, E. B.
Cox, S. S.	Johnson,	Reagan,	Winans, John,
Cox, W. R.	Jones, B. W.	Reed,	Wolford,
Crisp,	Jones, J. K.	Reese,	Woodward,
Dargan,	Jones, J. T.	Rice,	Worthington.

NOT VOTING—64.

Adams, J. J.	Dockery,	Hooper,	Rankin,
Arnot,	Dorsheimer,	Hopkins,	Robertson,
Ballentine,	Dowd,	Hutchins,	Robinson, W. B.
Barbour,	Dunham,	Keiley,	Rogers, W. F.
Bayne,	Dunn,	Kellogg,	Rosecrans,
Belford,	Ellwood,	King,	Shaw,
Bland,	Evans,	McCoid,	Shelley,
Bowen,	Ferrell,	McComas,	Slocum,
Boyle,	Fiedler,	Maybury,	Smith, H. Y.
Budd,	Finerty,	Miller, S. H.	Steele,
Campbell, Felix	Garrison,	Milliken,	Sumner, D. H.
Chace,	George,	Morgan,	Valentine,
Collins,	Goff,	Muller,	Vance,
Connolly,	Hardy,	Ochiltree,	Weller,
Culbertson, W. W.	Hart,	O'Neill, J. J.	Wise, J. S.
Curtin,	Holton,	Paige,	York.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. ROSECRANS with Mr. MCCOMAS, on this vote.

Mr. BUDD with Mr. GEORGE, on this vote.

Mr. DEUSTER with Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, on this vote.

Mr. MCCOID with Mr. DOCKERY, from December 17 to December 21.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. OCHILTREE, on all political questions and on the Reagan bill. Mr. OCHILTREE would vote for the bill, Mr. RANKIN against it.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. GIBSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to submit a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the gentleman from Texas was adopted.

The SPEAKER. That is a privileged motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. GOFF. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the substitute the following——

The SPEAKER. There is no substitute pending.

Mr. GOFF. I desire to offer this to go into the section immediately after the amendment or substitute proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the substitute the following:
"Provided, That no discrimination is made on account of race or color."

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman desire to address the House? If not, I will call the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. GOFF. Just a moment.

The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas permits the railroad companies to make any arrangements that to them may seem fit relative to the classification of passengers. Now I simply propose to add to that provision the words "provided that there shall be no discrimination on account of race or color."

It seems to me that gentlemen who advocate the passage of this bill have suddenly changed their tactics. When they offered it to the consideration of the House it was upon the theory that the proposed legislation was intended to regulate the railroads and to prevent discriminations as against the people. But now it seems they have reversed their former opinion, and the idea, as it is now apparently entertained and enunciated, is to regulate the people and to permit the railroads to discriminate as they choose against them.

I can see nothing unfair in this amendment. It does no injustice to the railroad corporations, and it does simple, even-handed justice to all the citizens of this country. The gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] has told us that amendments of this character tend to jeopardize the bill. Why should they do so?

So far as I am concerned, if to do justice to the citizens of this country jeopardizes the passage of the bill, then I am in favor of justice, and the bill may die. I can see no reason why a citizen of this country traveling from the capital of the nation and going to the great exposition now open at New Orleans, should be compelled when passing through the great State of Georgia to leave the car that he left the capital of his country in and go into those described by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SMALLS]. Such discrimination might apply to members of this House and men occupying high official positions in this country. We sit here as their equals, and before the law and Constitution of our land they are our equals. Now I submit, without desiring to argue this proposition further, that we should not inquire where a man came from, in what clime he was born, or where the sun first kissed his cheek; nor should we inquire what is the color of the skin. All that we want to know is that he is an American citizen; and if he is such, then he is entitled to all the protection of the Constitution and laws of the country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REAGAN. I demand the previous question upon the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Texas to yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. I must decline to yield. I insist upon the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. HISCOCK, Mr. MILLARD, and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 102, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—141.

Adams, G. E.	Davis, G. R.	Hitt,	Lyman,
Anderson,	Davis, R. T.	Hoblitzell,	McComas,
Atkinson,	Deuster,	Holman,	McCormick,
Bagley,	Dingley,	Holmes,	Millard,
Barr,	Eldredge,	Horr,	Milliken,
Beach,	Evans,	Houk,	Mitchell,
Bingham,	Everhart,	Houseman,	Morrill,
Bisbee,	Ferrell,	Howey,	Morse,
Boutelle,	Follett,	Hunt,	Murray,
Brainerd,	Foran,	James,	Nelson,
Breitung,	Funston,	Jeffords,	Nicholls,
Brewer, F. B.	Goff,	Johnson,	Nutting,
Brewer, J. H.	Greenleaf,	Jones, B. W.	O'Hara,
Brown, W. W.	Guenther,	Jordan,	O'Neill, Charles
Browne, T. M.	Hanback,	Kean,	O'Neill, J. J.
Brumm,	Harmer,	Keifer,	Parker,
Campbell, J. E.	Hatch, H. H.	Ketcham,	Payne,
Campbell, J. M.	Haynes,	Lacey,	Payson,
Cannon,	Henderson, D. B.	Laird,	Perkins,
Carleton,	Henderson, T. J.	Le Fevre,	Peters,
Chalmers,	Hepburn,	Libbey,	Pettibone,
Converse,	Hewitt, A. S.	Long,	Poland,
Cullen,	Hill,	Lovering,	Post,
Cutcheon,	Hiscock,	Lowry,	Potter,
Price,	Seymour,	Strait,	White, J. D.
Ranney,	Shively,	Struble,	White, Milo
Ray, G. W.	Skinner, C. R.	Taylor, J. D.	Whiting,
Ray, Ossian	Smalls,	Thomas,	Wilkins,
Reed,	Smith, A. H.	Van Alstyne,	Wilson, James
Rice,	Smith, H. Y.	Wakefield,	Winans, E. B.
Robinson, J. S.	Spooner,	Wallace,	Wood,
Rockwell,	Springer,	Ward,	Woodward,
Rowell,	Stephenson,	Warner, A. J.	Yaple.
Russell,	Stevens,	Washburn,
Ryan,	Stewart, J. W.	Weaver,
Seney,	Stone,	Wemple,

NAYS—102.

Aiken,	Culberson, D. B.	Jones, J. T.	Singleton,
Alexander,	Curtin,	Kleiner,	Skinner, T. G.
Ballentine,	Dargan,	Lanham,	Snyder,
Barksdale,	Davidson,	Lewis,	Stewart, Charles
Bennett,	Dibble,	Lore,	Stockslager,
Blackburn,	Dibrell,	McMillin,	Storm,
Blanchard,	Eaton,	Matson,	Sumner, C. A.
Blount,	Ellis,	Miller, J. F.	Taylor, J. M.
Bratton,	Ermentrout,	Mills,	Thompson,
Breckinridge,	Forney,	Money,	Tillman,
Buchanan,	Fyan,	Morrison,	Townshend,
Buckner,	Geddes,	Moulton,	Tucker,
Burnes,	Gibson,	Muldrow,	Tully,
Cabell,	Glascock,	Neece,	Turner, H. G.
Caldwell,	Green,	Oates,	Turner, Oscar
Candler,	Halsell,	O'Ferrall,	Van Eaton,
Cassidy,	Hancock,	Patton,	Warner, Richard
Clardy,	Hardeman,	Peel,	Wellborn,
Clay,	Hatch, W. H.	Pierce,	Williams,
Clements,	Hemphill,	Pryor,	Willis,
Cobb,	Henley,	Pusey,	Wilson, W. L.
Cosgrove,	Herbert,	Randall,	Wise, G. D.
Covington,	Hewitt, G. W.	Reagan,	Wolford,
Cox, S. S.	Hurd,	Reese,	Young.
Cox, W. R.	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, J. H.
Crisp,	Jones, J. K.	Scales,

NOT VOTING—79.

Adams, J. J.	Dorsheimer,	Kelley,	Rogers, W. F.
Arnot,	Dowd,	Kellogg,	Rosecrans,
Barbour,	Dunham,	King,	Shaw,
Bayne,	Dunn,	Lamb,	Shelley,
Belford,	Elliott,	Lawrence,	Slocum,
Belmont,	Ellwood,	McAdoo,	Spriggs,
Bland,	English,	McCoid,	Steele,
Bowen,	Fiedler,	Maybury,	Sumner, D. H.
Boyle,	Findlay,	Miller, S. H.	Talbott,
Broadhead,	Finerty,	Morgan,	Taylor, E. B.
Budd,	Garrison,	Muller,	Throckmorton,
Burleigh,	George,	Murphy,	Valentine,
Campbell, Felix	Graves,	Mutchler,	Vance,
Chace,	Hammond,	Ochiltree,	Wadsworth,
Collins,	Hardy,	Paige,	Wait,
Connolly,	Hart,	Phelps,	Weller,
Cook,	Holton,	Rankin,	Winans, John
Culbertson, W. W.	Hooper,	Riggs,	Wise, J. S.
Davis, L. H.	Hopkins,	Robertson,	Worthington,
Dockery,	Hutchins,	Robinson, W. E.	York.

So the amendment was adopted.

On motion of Mr. LONG, by unanimous consent the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. LAWRENCE, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. WORTHINGTON with Mr. RIGGS, on this vote.

Mr. PHELPS with Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, for the remainder of this day.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, for the remainder of this day, reserving the right to vote to make a quorum. On Mr. GOFF'S amendment Mr. HAMMOND would vote "no" and Mr. TAYLOR would vote "ay."

Mr. LAMB with Mr. WADSWORTH, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. FINDLAY with Mr. KELLEY, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. COOK with Mr. WAIT, for the remainder of the day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. GOFF. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GOFF. My motion, I understand, is pending.

The SPEAKER. It is; and pending that motion the gentleman from Texas moves to adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I am willing to yield to some requests for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to adjourn is withdrawn, the question will be on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his motion to adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not withdraw it.

INDIANS OF BLACKFEET AND OTHER AGENCIES.

Pending the question on the motion to adjourn,

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of $50,000 from the Interior Department to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the support of Indians of the Blackfeet, Crow, Fort Belknap, and Fort Peck agencies for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOURS OF LABOR FOR LETTER-CARRIERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, in response to a resolution of the House asking his opinion whether the eight-hour law (section 3738, Revised Statutes) applies to letter-carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

The motion of Mr. REAGAN was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Papers relating to the claim of James F. Wooley; also papers relating to the claim of William Evans—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. S. S. COX: Memorial of Nathaniel McKay, relative to contract for plates on United States monitor Miantonomoh—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

By Mr. GEORGE: Papers relating to the claim of John Campbell—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. H. HATCH: Papers improperly referred to the Committee on Agriculture—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: Petition of Allison Louderbach, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of 175 citizens of Massachusetts, requesting the passage of the resolution of Hon. JAMES H. HOPKINS relative to the transportation of cattle—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LYMAN: Five petitions from manufacturers and business men of Boston, Mass., requesting the passage of the resolution of Mr. HOPKINS relative to the transportation of cattle—to the same committee.

By Mr. MORRISON: Petition of sundry citizens of Highland, Ill., for the metric system of weights and measures—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. MURPHY: Petitions of citizens of Dakota, asking reduction of the price of public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Papers relating to the claim of Jessee A. Brown—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. YAPLE: Resolution of Michigan State board of agriculture, relative to the establishment of experimental stations—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers relating to the claim of Henry E. Sills; also papers relating to the claim of Elizabeth Rivers—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. ARNOT: Of citizens of Almond, N. Y.

By Mr. BAGLEY: Of citizens of the counties of Ulster and Schoharie, New York.

By Mr. BLACKBURN: Of certain citizens of Kentucky.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Of 219 citizens and ex-soldiers of Union City, Ind.

By Mr. DOCKERY: Of citizens of Harrison County, Missouri.

By Mr. DEUSTER: Of John H. Wallar and 332 others, soldiers at the National Home near Milwaukee; and of Thomas J. Willis and 139 others, soldiers at the same place.

By Mr. EATON: Of W. H. Burlew and others, of Hartford, Conn.

By Mr. ELDREDGE: Of A. A. Sprague and 62 others, of Lenawee County; of John K. Boies and 64 others, of Hudson; and of Alonzo Shafer and 42 others, of Hillsdale County, Michigan.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of citizens of La Cygne and of citizens of Lawrence, Kans.

By Mr. GEDDES: Of Levi Light and 62 others, citizens of Ashland and Richland Counties, Ohio.

By Mr. GIBSON: Of citizens of Wood County, West Virginia.

By Mr. GUENTHER: Of citizens of Big Springs, Adams County, Wisconsin.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Of F. W. Brady and 50 others, citizens of Osceola, Iowa.

By Mr. HITT: Of 115 citizens of Winnebago County, Illinois.

By Mr. HOUSEMAN: Of Joel A. Pond and 100 others, of Nunica, Ottawa County, Michigan.

By Mr. HOWEY: Of soldiers of the fourth district of New Jersey.

By Mr. HOLMES: Of V. H. Norton and 74 others, citizens of Belmond; of J. H. Beasau and 122 others, ex-soldiers of Mason City; of A. M. Caldwell and 75 others, citizens of Iowa Falls; of Myron Underwood and 125 others, ex-soldiers of Hardin County, and of Simeon Overacker and 91 others, ex-soldiers of Clarion, Iowa.

By Mr. LACEY: Of F. L. Snell and 62 others, citizens of Kalamo, Mich.

By Mr. LAMB: Of citizens of Vigo County, of citizens of Vermillion County, and of citizens of Parke County, Indiana.

By Mr. LONG: Of P. Bryant and 26 others, and of Edward Davis and 36 others, of Massachusetts.

By Mr. McCORMICK: Of citizens of Jackson County and of Vinton County, Ohio.

By Mr. MURRAY: Of 85 members of the National Soldiers' Home, Dayton, Ohio.

By Mr. MAYBURY: Of citizens of Wayne County, Michigan.

By Mr. MILLARD: Of citizens of Hooper, N. Y.

By Mr. NELSON: Of citizens of Verndale, Minn.

By Mr. NUTTING: Of citizens of New York State.

By Mr. PAIGE: Of citizens of Wayne County, of Berea, and of Bedford, Ohio.

By Mr. PAYNE: Of W. N. Deady and 65 others, citizens of Rose, N. Y.

By Mr. PEEL: Of 90 citizens of Arkansas.

By Mr. POLAND: Of B. H. Percy and others, of Jay, and of S. F. Drew and 300 others, of Charlestown, Vt.

By Mr. POST: Of 59 citizens of West Auburn, Pa.

By Mr. G. W. RAY: Of 69 citizens of Delaware County, New York.

By Mr. OSSIAN RAY: Of J. C. Webster and 23 others, of Danbury, N. H.

By Mr. RAYMOND: Of citizens of Dakota.

By Mr. ROWELL: Of 236 voters of McLean and Atlanta, Ill.

By Mr. RYAN: Of 389 citizens of Kansas.

By Mr. SEYMOUR: Of Charles A. Hobbie and others, of Darien, Conn.

By Mr. SPOONER: Of 194 citizens and ex-soldiers of Rhode Island.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Of citizens of Washington, Ill.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Of citizens of Taylor County, Wisconsin.

By Mr. STEVENS: Of 100 citizens of Wyoming County, New York.

By Mr. STORM: Of 32 citizens of Columbus County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. STRUBLE: Of R. J. Hargrave and 79 others, of Spencer, and of Theodore F. Wooster and 63 others, of Mapleton, Iowa.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: Of Elijah Cole and 46 others, citizens of Jefferson County, and of W. H. Boor and 63 others, citizens of Bowerstown, Harrison County, Ohio.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Of 64 citizens of Parrish, Ill.

By Mr. WAKEFIELD: Of ex-soldiers of Minnesota.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Of Aaron Tucker and 105 others, citizens of Athens County, and of S. M. Grimes and 50 others, citizens of Monroe County, Ohio.

By Mr. WILKINS: Of Waldo Taylor and 65 others, citizens of Licking County, Ohio.

By Mr. WEMPLE: Of 61 citizens of Fulton County, New York.

By Mr. E. B. WINANS: Of L. D. Owen and 60 others, citizens of Farmington; of S. A. Perry and 60 others, citizens of Lansing, and of Charles W. Smith and 66 others, citizens of Webbersville, Mich.

By Mr. WOODWARD: Of 51 citizens of Sauk County, and 60 citizens of Richland County, Wisconsin.

By Mr. YAPLE: Of Hugh Wilson and 124 others, citizens of Buchanan, Mich.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 18, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOSEPH F. WILSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 17, 1884.

Ordered, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2376) for the relief of Joseph F. Wilson.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be placed on the Calendar in connection with the motion to reconsider entered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a number of communications from cigar-makers' unions of Indiana, remonstrating against the ratification of the Spanish reciprocity treaty. They are of the kind presented yesterday by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], not in form addressed to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to present them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to present sundry papers touching the Spanish reciprocity treaty. If there be no objection, they will be received.

Mr. HARRISON. I present a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Evansville, Ind.; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Union City, Ind.; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Arcadia, Ind.; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Fort Wayne, Ind.; a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of Richmond, Ind.; and a memorial of the Cigar-makers' Union of New Albany, Ind., remonstrating against the ratification of the reciprocity treaty with Spain, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorials will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have a communication in the nature of a petition from Motley & Sterling, of New York, manufacturers of railway, steamship, and contractors' supplies, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty betwee Spain and the United States, which I ask may be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to present a certain paper on the subject he has named. If there be no objection it will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LAPHAM presented the petition of Harvey Adsit, of Willsborough, N. Y., and the petition of Richard M. Chesbrough, of Ellenburg, N. Y., praying for the enactment of a law extending the time for filing claims for arrears of pensions; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER. I present a memorial and divers papers to be referred to the Committee on Claims to accompany the bill (S. 781) for the relief of the late William A. Burt, inventor of the solar compass, adopted and used in the public surveys of the United States, now before that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the papers and memorial will be received and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. I present a memorial of the Pennsylvania Woman's Suffrage Association, protesting against the admission of Dakota as a State of the Federal Union under a constitution which withholds the ballot from any of its citizens on account of sex.

As a bill upon that subject has passed the Senate, I suppose under the ordinary practice the memorial should lie upon the table; but before that disposition is made I should like to say that while I cordially share the desire of the ladies and other persons composing this association that the suffrage may be extended to all citizens of the United States, irrespective of sex, otherwise duly qualified, yet it seems to me that it would be very unwise for the persons who entertain that opinion to insist upon having Congress in its present state of opinion impose its views in regard to the true policy on that subject upon new States which seek admission, because, if that principle were established, I suppose a majority of both Houses of Congress, as at present advised, would be more likely to deny admission to Washington Territory and Wyoming when they come, as they will in the near future, probably, with provisions in their constitutions admitting women to the privilege of suffrage, than they would to deny admission to Dakota or any other Territory which confined the suffrage to males. Therefore I think this association is unwise with reference to accomplishing the great object for which it is formed in recommending this action.

I ask that the memorial lie upon the table.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator allow me to make one remark? The Territory of Washington, to which this relates, I understand——

Mr. HOAR. The memorial relates to Dakota.

Mr. CONGER. I thought the Senator's remarks applied to Washington Territory. The Territory of Washington in its laws already provides for female suffrage.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, this is a protest against the admission of Dakota containing a clause in the constitution adverse to female suffrage. The remark which I made was that I thought the friends of female suffrage, of which I profess to be one, would not be wise in asking Congress to impose its opinion upon that question on new Territories which knock at the door, because if that were done Congress would be more likely to reject Washington and Wyoming on that account than it would be to reject Dakota for excluding it.

Mr. CONGER. In that connection my remark was that Washington Territory by a vote of its own people having granted woman suffrage, any existing condition there ought not to prejudice Senators here against the admission of Washington Territory as a State when it shall apply with whatever regulation may be in force there.

Mr. HOAR. I do not believe it would, and I do not want to establish that principle by voting against Dakota myself on the other ground.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to make a suggestion. The Committee on Woman Suffrage considered the question while the Dakota bill was pending as to whether we should offer an amendment extending the right of suffrage in the formation of the constitution for the purpose of that Territory applying to become a State, and we concluded that it would be unwise to seek to ingraft that provision upon the proposed bill for the admission of the Territory. Although we prepared the amendment the committee concluded on the whole that it was better to omit presenting it at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I think the example of Washington Territory and of Wyoming will soon be very potent on Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of George E. Spencer, late a Senator from the State of Alabama, praying for the reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defending his title to his seat in the Senate of the United States. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I present also the petition of Joseph Ainley, late private Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, praying that a law be enacted extending the time for filing pension claims, and that relief be granted him from injustice he claims to have suffered under the existing laws. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of F. P. H. Rogers Post, No. 29, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Massachusetts, praying for the publication in the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of Lester Noble, of Longmeadow, Mass., praying the allowance of his claim against the United States for certain damages done his property by the Union forces during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of General Alexander Hays Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, praying for the publication in the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion of photographic illustrations; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON presented the petition of the Louisiana Educational Society, praying for national aid to education; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of David E. Ford, late private Company K, Two hundred and nineteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying to be granted a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the petition of the Phœnix National Bank, of the city of New York, praying to be reimbursed certain moneys collected from them by a United States marshal; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of cigar-makers of Buffalo, Oneida, Little Falls, Onondaga County, Dunkirk, Rome, New York city, Troy, Brooklyn, Binghamton, and Port Byron, in the State of New York, and a memorial of the Utica (N. Y.) Trades Assembly, a memorial of a mass-meeting of cigar-makers held at Steinway Hall, New York city, and a memorial of cigar-makers of Utica, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Leonard C. Bullis, of Syracuse, N. Y., and a petition of Alexander Buchanan, of Rogersfield, N. Y., praying for extension of the time for filing pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I present a petition of marine underwriters and merchants of New York, praying for an additional appropriation to complete the cable and signal communication between Nantucket and the mainland. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The petition will be so referred, if there be no objection.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] suggests that the petition should go to the Committee on Commerce, but the subject was considered by that committee last year, and they made a report which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in order that the appropriation might be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York desire to change the reference?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think the reference I suggest is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from New York that the petition was first ordered to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. At the last session a similar petition came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Commerce, at one point of the session, I do not know whether first to that committee or not. The Committee on Commerce took action and recommended an appropriation to be made. The papers were then sent to the Committee on Appropriations, and they inserted an appropriation in one of the general appropriation bills. It now turns out that the amount appropriated was not sufficient; the work has not been done, and the petition is for an increased appropriation in order that the work may be carried out. The Senators from Massachusetts were particularly interested in the measure at the last session, and as the Committee on Commerce have already considered the matter I think the petition may go direct to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a memorial of the American Atlantic and Pacific Steamship Canal Company, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty between the United States and Nicaragua; and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that those petitions have not hitherto been received in legislative session.

Mr. CULLOM. I was thinking that there had been an order made to receive them. The order was in reference to the Spanish treaty, and I will withdraw the memorial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order related to the Spanish reciprocity treaty.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Motley & Sterling, of New York, and the petition of Theodore Thomas, of Jersey City, N. J., praying for the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of 627 citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of any measure relating to the telegraph which shall increase the number of public officials or establish a governmental monopoly of the telegraph business; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of Western Miami Indians, praying that certain money taken from their tribal funds be returned to them; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1296) for the relief of Mrs. Henrietta H. Cole, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

THICKNESS OF STEAM-BOILERS.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1793) to amend section 4434 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels, to report it favorably with an amendment and to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MORGAN. From what committee does the bill come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. Let the amendment be read. All the change in the present law is contained in the report of the committee in a proviso to be added to section 4434. Let the Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The text of the bill has been already read, and it will be treated as having been read as in Committee of the Whole if there be no objection. The amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That section 4424 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding thereto a proviso so that the section will read as follows:

"SECTION 4434. No boiler to which the heat is applied to the outside of the shell thereof shall be constructed of iron or steel plates of more than twenty-six one-hundredths of an inch in thickness, the ends or heads of the boilers only excepted; and every such boiler employed on steam-vessels navigating rivers flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, or their tributaries, shall have not less than three inches space between and around its internal flues: Provided, That boilers to which the heat is applied to the outside of the shell thereof may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be authorized and used on steam-vessels navigating the Atlantic or Pacific Oceans, or salt-water bays or sounds, when constructed of iron or steel plates not exceeding fifty one-hundredths of an inch in thickness."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE C. TANNER.

Mr. CONGER. I move to take from the table the bill (S. 1661) for the relief of George C. Tanner, United States consul at Liege, Belgium, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce in July last. At that time it was supposed that the provision of the bill would be inserted in one of the appropriation bills, and therefore it was laid upon the table. I move that the bill be taken from the table, and by the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] I ask that it be considered at this time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of State to credit the account of George C. Tanner, consul at Liege and Verviers, in Belgium, with $200, being the amount paid by him out of his personal assets for the rent of a house for one year in Verviers, when the amount should have been paid by the United States.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to say that the amount to repay this consul has been recommended by the Secretary of State, and it is recommended as a just claim on the Government, which ought to be paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR ANTHONY.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported it without amendment, and, by unanimous consent, it was read three times and passed:

Resolved, That the actual and necessary traveling expenses of the officers and members of the Senate who attended the funeral of the late Senator ANTHONY at Providence, R. I., in September last, be paid out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, on vouchers properly allowed by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

A. L. SINGLETON.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution to pay A. L. Singleton, an employé of the Senate, a sum equal to three months' salary, report the same back and ask for the passage of a substitute for the resolution. I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS). The substitute reported from the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to A. L. Singleton, late a fireman in the employ of the Senate, and who was dropped from the rolls on account of illness contracted in the discharge of his duty, a sum equal to three months' salary at the rate he was being paid when he was so dropped, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2470) providing for the establishment of a port of entry at Mount Desert Ferry, in the town of Hancock, in the State of Maine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 2471) to increase the pensions of widows and dependent relatives of deceased soldiers and sailors; also to grant pensions to invalid and dependent soldiers who served three months during the war of the rebellion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2472) for the relief of Van Vechten Tousey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SURVEY OF NICARAGUA CANAL ROUTE.

Mr. VEST introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 106) declaring the action of the Secretary of the Navy in sending an expedition to Nicaragua to be illegal; which was read the first time at length, as follows:

Whereas, in response to a resolution of inquiry on the part of the Senate, the Secretary of the Navy states in his official reply of date December 17, 1884, that orders have been issued by the Navy Department to Civil Engineer A. G. Menocal, Civil Engineer R. G. Peary, and Ensign Washington I. Chambers to visit Nicaragua in order to make a survey of the route for the proposed Nicaragua Canal, and that these orders have been issued in the exercise of the general powers of the Department under the President to issue such orders to all officers of the Navy as may be deemed for the public interest; and

Whereas the reply of the Secretary also states that the cost of the arrangements made and contemplated in addition to the pay and mileage of the naval officers is expected to be $1,000 as an outfit and about $1,000 a month during the stay of the party in Nicaragua:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That the power to send an expedition into the territory of Nicaragua for the purpose of surveying a route for the proposed Nicaragua Canal and to expend or to make arrangements involving the expenditure of public money for such purpose is not vested by law in the Navy Department, and that without consent or authority from Congress such action by the Department is illegal. That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to discontinue the arrangements for such expedition and not to enforce the orders made as to the same until definite and final action by Congress upon this resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let that go over a day. I wish to examine it.

Mr. VEST. I desire to give notice that I shall call up the resolution to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine object to the second reading to-day?

Mr. HALE. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution having been once read will lie on the table.

Mr. VEST. I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow. This expedition sails from New York on Saturday, and therefore I shall ask that the resolution be taken up and considered to-morrow morning.

CALENDAR OF HOUSE BILLS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Resolutions, concurrent and other, are now in order, under which, according to the custom of the Chair, the resolution is laid before the Senate which was submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the 16th instant.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That when the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions is next taken up for consideration under Rule VIII, measures from the House of Representatives shall first be considered in their order subject to said rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I see no necessity for adopting that rule at this stage of the session. There are only twenty-two cases on the Calendar of that class. At the close of the last session we took up and disposed of the House bills on the Calendar, nearly every one of them, to which there was no objection, and I think it would be better to let the resolution lie over a while.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri submit a motion to postpone?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the resolution be postponed until after the holiday recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the resolution be postponed until after the holiday recess, if there be one. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JULIET H. PALMER.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement showing a mistake in the action of the Senate in reference to certain bills at the last session, and to request that the mistake may be corrected. I read a statement which was prepared by the Chief Clerk of the Senate relative to the status of two bills, Senate bill 1287 and House bill 4085, both for the relief of Juliet H. Palmer, who is the widow of Surgeon-General Palmer:

The two bills are identical in terms. House bill 4085 passed the House of Representatives June 6, 1884. (See House Journal, p. 1399.) Read twice in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, June 9, 1884. (See Senate Journal, p. 741.)

Senate bill 1287 passed the Senate July 4, 1884 (see Senate Journal, p. 922), and has gone to the House of Representatives (see House Journal, p. 1680); and upon that bill there has been no action.

These bills are identical. The House passed its bill and sent it to the Senate, and it was referred to the Senate Committee on Pensions, which has taken no action upon it, having previously reported a like bill, which was passed by the Senate. Thus two bills identical in terms and provisions have been indorsed by both Houses.

It was supposed by myself, who had charge of the Senate bill, that this lady's pension was granted by the passage of the Senate bill in the House during the last session, but I received yesterday this note from a friend of hers:

The Senate bill 1287, identical with this House bill, was by mistake passed by the Senate on the motion of Senator BLAIR, July 4, 1884.

Referring to the page of the RECORD.

Other pensions in similar cases passed at the same time. The widows of Surgeon-General Barnes and Craven, United States Army, have been in receipt of their increased pensions, but Mrs. Palmer, by reason of the accidental error above noted, can not receive her increase until the Senate passes this House bill instead of the Senate bill. A similar correction was made July 7, 1884, on motion of Senator BLAIR, in the case of the widow of Admiral Sands. If this correction can be now passed this widow will receive a happy and needed Christmas gift.

I would ask of the Senate unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote of the Senate whereby Senate bill 1287 was passed July 4, in the last session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill indicated by him was passed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GARLAND. Would it not serve the purpose of the Senator simply to enter the motion to reconsider now, and let the matter be looked into?

Mr. BLAIR. I had a little desire that we might pass the bill before the holidays. It was a mistake; others like situated have been drawing their pensions since the last session, and I desire to have the correction made now.

Mr. GARLAND. It is more a matter of particularity. If the Senator has the record as he states there, I have no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I have it from the Chief Clerk of the Senate, so that there can be no mistake. I now ask that Senate bill 1287 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the parliamentary condition of the bill is such that the motion can not be entertained. The bill having been passed and sent to the House of Representatives at the last session, it is not now in the custody of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator if the passage of the House bill now before the Senate would not meet what he desires to accomplish?

Mr. BLAIR. That is precisely what I propose to ask as the next step, and it can be done now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The House bill on the same subject is now pending before the Committee on Pensions. The committee might be discharged and the bill passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4085) for the relief of Juliet H. Palmer. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay, out of the Navy pension fund, to Juliet H. Palmer, widow of the late Surg. Gen. James C. Palmer, United States Navy, $50 per month during her widowhood, in lieu of her present pension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senate bill in the possession of the House may be recalled; or would it be sufficient to give notice of the action of the Senate on the bill from the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it is not necessary to recall the bill.

STATUE TO GENERAL LA FAYETTE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 938, Senate bill 2422, which I think will only need to be read to secure the attention of the Senate, and its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2422) for the erection of a statue to the memory of General La Fayette.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, to insert as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives do appoint a joint committee of three Senators and three Representatives, with authority to contract for and erect a statue to the memory of General La Fayette and his compatriots; and said statue shall be placed in a suitable public reservation in the city of Washington, to be designated by said joint committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CONGER. This leaves a discretion to the committee to be appointed to select the place. I do not know whether it implies that they shall report to Congress and have the sanction of Congress upon that; but there is a square in this city which has long been called La Fayette Square, and I do not know but that there should be some limitation in the bill that the committee shall report to Congress, or have further approval on that point.

Mr. SHERMAN. The second section was put on by the Committee on the Library in accordance with the established precedent in regard to all the monuments in this city, to leave it to the commission of three Senators and three Representatives to select a site. That was done in regard to the Thomas statue; it was done in regard to the Marshall statue, and all the others. As a matter of course this commission, composed of members of both Houses, can probably be trusted with making the selection. I would not like to change the form.

Mr. CONGER. I only called attention to the fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the established precedent.

Mr. CONGER. I only called attention to the fact that a prominent square in this city was already named after La Fayette.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a preamble which the committee recommend the striking out of. The question is on that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, Mr. W. S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. J. D. LONG of Massachusetts managers at the conference on its part.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the message of the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. BECK.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

An act (S. 1309) to provide statuary and historical tablets for the Saratoga monument;

An act (S. 2402) authorizing the Secretary of State to procure duplicates of certain French and American medals;

Joint resolution (S. R. 98) extending the time fixed for the joint commission appointed under the sundry civil act approved July 7, 1884, to submit their report; and Joint resolution (S. R. 101) in relation to the ceremonies to be authorized upon the completion of the Washington Monument.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

INAUGURATION DAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

Mr. INGALLS. Having been otherwise occupied when the order of morning business was called, I ask the consent of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to make a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia at this time.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not object if it does not take any time.

Mr. INGALLS. From the Committee on the District of Columbia I report the bill (S. 2417) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia with an amendment; and as the bill is brief and unobjectionable, I will presume on the indulgence of the Senate to ask for its consideration now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. INGALLS. I will state that the object of the bill is to make the day of inauguration of President of the United States a legal holiday in the District of Columbia, and if the bill is to be acted upon it should be acted upon now. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as proposed to be amended by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none. It is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and will be read. [A pause.] The Chair calls the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the fact that the paper sent up by the chairman does not show what the whole of the original bill was. The Chair is, therefore, unable to put the question on agreeing to the amendment to the original bill. The Senator from Kansas might report the amendment as an original bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no power to do that, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the present state of the paper sent to the desk the Chair can not receive it.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the bill be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, at the close of the last session I submitted to the Senate a brief and hurried statement of my views upon the subject of the regulation of interstate commerce in connection with the bill now under consideration, which I had the honor of reporting from the Committee on Railroads. I take it for granted that the members of this Senate recognize the importance of this subject and fully appreciate the vast extent and far-reaching influence of the interests to be affected by this proposed legislation. The growth of the railroad system of the country within the time covered by our own recollection has been marvelous, until the total mileage in the United States to-day exceeds that of all Europe, with a population seven times greater than the United States. There is no commercial or business interest that is not affected in a greater or less degree by the manner in which the railroads comprising this vast system are conducted, while the returns received upon the immense amount of capital invested in these enterprises affect in an equally marked degree the business prosperity of the nation.

In undertaking to frame any legislation upon this subject we must constantly bear in mind the fact that the interests of the railroads and of their patrons and of the whole people are identical. In other words, we must remember that any legislation so radical or unjust in its provisions as to destroy the value of railway properties, or to prevent their successful management, would either be wholly inoperative or would result in a more serious depression of business than would be occasioned by the unrestrained continuance of the evils which the public now complain of. All will agree that it is safer not to go far enough than to go too far in inaugurating experimental legislation of this character.

But, while I desire and believe that we should proceed with the utmost care and caution in framing legislation upon a subject that so vitally affects the whole world of business transactions, I am convinced that the time has come when some action should be taken, and that we ought at least to take some preliminary steps toward reaching a practical solution of the complicated problems of railway management that have puzzled the ablest men of the nation for years.

It is no new thing to propose legislation upon this subject. In our own country more than twenty of the States have placed enactments upon their statute-books or provisions in their constitutions intended to regulate railway transportation within their own borders.

It could not be expected that these enactments would prove adequate to remedy the evils connected with the business of interstate commerce. The regulation of these evils must of necessity be left to Congress, so far as legislation can remedy them, but the efforts that have been made by the States within the past ten years demonstrate the popular demand for legislation upon this question. And it is certainly safe to assume that the legislation for the regulation of railroads enacted in so many States has become law only in response to the demand of a public sentiment sufficiently strong to enforce respect.

The existence of a popular sentiment in favor of action by Congress upon this question is too well known to require demonstration. It has been shown by the presentation in Congress during the last eight years of a large number of bills upon the subject, and by discussions that have made the general public familiar with the questions involved. For years past the question has been agitated in the public press, by the shippers and merchants and farmers at the meetings of the local and general organizations to which they belong, as well as by the stockholders and officers of the great railroad corporations. The constant agitation of the questions by those most directly interested has been of great advantage, and we are now prepared to legislate upon them without feeling that we are entering upon a field that is new and wholly unexplored. So far as these matters have assumed shape in this country, as indicated by the legislation of the different States, the experience and information acquired by the State commissions, and the conclusions reached in the public discussions already alluded to, it is clear that the drift of public sentiment and of all State legislation is substantially on the line marked out in the bill now under consideration. In this connection I wish to quote an extract from a letter received within a few days from Mr. Albert Fink, who is generally recognized as one of the leading authorities on these questions, in which he says, speaking of the bill now before us:

> The main feature of the bill is the establishment of a commission, and I believe there is a settled opinion, not only in the minds of the public, but also shared by the railroad companies, that it is desirable to have such a commission established.

The development of this "settled opinion" has been founded not only upon our own experience and observation, but also upon the experience of other countries in which the same difficulties have arisen as those which now confront us, and in which the same problems have been intelligently investigated and carefully considered for years. In England several thousand acts, it is said, were passed for the purpose of regulating in detail the management of railways and of remedying the evils from which the people of that country suffered, but all these attempts at regulation by cast-iron statutes proved unsatisfactory and failed to accomplish the results aimed at. Finally, as a result of the complaints made and of the agitation of the question, and in response to a popular demand similar to that which now comes to us, the British Parliament in 1873, after a thorough investigation, established a commission and conferred upon it the powers previously existing in the courts to enforce the regulations prescribed by statute in relation to the traffic on railways and canals. The result of the numerous legislative experiments at railway regulation in England was the establishment of a commission, and I am satisfied that this will be the final outcome of the consideration of this question by the American Congress.

The English commission was given power to hear and determine complaints, to make orders and issue writs of injunction, and in general to exercise the jurisdiction and authority previously existing in the courts to restrain railways from violating the law and to enforce obedience to its decisions.

The workings of this system are said to have been satisfactory, and the value of this tribunal is shown by the good results accomplished. And the comparatively small number of cases it has been called on to decide meets the objections made in some quarters that such a commission as is proposed in this bill would be swamped with complaints when it undertook to regulate interests of such vast extent as those affected by interstate commerce in the United States. During the first year of its organization the English commission decided six cases, in the second year seven, in the third nineteen, and in the fourth twenty-four. Under these decisions all complaints received were settled, and, in view of the similar experience of our own State commissions, there is good reason to believe that a national commission, such as is now proposed, would be able to successfully meet all demands made upon it, and that when the general principles of regulation had been determined the railroads would soon adjust themselves to the new conditions imposed upon them. In considering the propriety of passing the bill the main points to be determined are, first, whether any legislation upon the subject is necessary; second, whether Congress has the constitutional power to undertake the regulation of interstate commerce; and, third, what methods shall be adopted to secure the results desired. As to the first point, I believe that the necessity for some legislation in this direction has been impressed upon the members of this Senate by their observation and experience in such a manner that it will not be seriously questioned here. I have already alluded to the popular demand for such legislation, and want to repeat what I said last session in calling attention to this bill:

While the people generally are willing to acknowledge their indebtedness to railroads for what they have done in the development of the country in aid of commerce, it can not be denied that complaints have arisen against their management; complaints of oppressive charges and unjust discriminations against persons and places are heard from all parts of the country; rates are given to some persons which are denied others under the same circumstances; a greater sum is frequently charged for carrying the same quantity of freight a less than a greater distance. They have it in their power, if unrestrained, to enhance the prosperity of one portion of the country at the expense of another. They may so discriminate in their rates against a particular town or locality as to drive trade away from it to a more favored locality. They may, by giving low rates, encourage manufacturers at any given point, and by raising the rates break up the business and transfer the trade to some other point. Corporations have no souls and very short memories. A change of officers works a change of favorites. The mill that has been favored by one management, when the change comes must look elsewhere for its grist. The town that has been built up by the establishment of shops and factories suddenly finds the men employed in the shops transferred to some other town; the new railroad management turn their backs upon it, and the town is left to languish and die.

These, Mr. President, and others that might be mentioned are serious evils which call loudly for a remedy. Many of the States have provided against these evils by legislative enactments—and twenty-two of the States have passed laws for the appointment of railroad commissioners—and in providing in some way for the supervision and control of railroads, in some instances fixing rates, and in all cases, I believe, providing against unjust discrimination and extortion. In my own State the commissioners are authorized by law to establish maximum rates for every railroad within its borders. There have of course been some friction and disputes between the corporations and the commissioners. The law under which the commission acts has been contested in all the courts, until its final favorable adjudication in the Supreme Court of the United States. The roads in Illinois to-day are generally working in harmony with the commission, and the people are, I think, generally satisfied with the result attained. The practice of extortion and unjust discrimination has been in a large measure corrected, and the corporations have in no way been injured by complying with the law and the tariffs of rates given them by the commissioners.

I doubt not that the experience of the people in other States where supervision by commissions has been authorized has been equally satisfactory. But, Mr. President, State commissions have no control over interstate commerce. The commerce of this country which is carried on between the States can not under the Constitution be controlled by States or State boards. The transportation companies, whether railroad companies or otherwise, which may carry the products of the country from State to State, or from State to Territory, or from one side of this continent to the other, may only be controlled in their operation in such work by the National Government. Our imports, amounting to many millions of dollars in value, do not remain in the ports of New York and Boston and of other seaport cities; they are carried to the West and South; and so of manufactures. They reach out across the States, wherever a market may be found. The question therefore comes to us: "Shall we afford relief to the people and provide laws for their protection against oppression and unjust discrimination by these powerful transportation companies, or shall we ignore the people's demands?" The enormous power which combined capital gives to those who control it makes it aggressive, impudent, and dangerous.

The next consideration is as to the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, which is now, I believe, generally conceded. The Constitution invests Congress with power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States," and "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." These provisions have been judicially construed and passed upon by the highest court in the nation, and the authority of Congress to legislate in the premises is generally considered as settled. In the case of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad vs. Pennsylvania, decided in 1872, the United States Supreme Court says:

Beyond all question the transportation of freights, or of the subjects of commerce for the purposes of exchange or sale, is a constituent of commerce itself. This has never been doubted, and probably the transportation of articles of trade from one State to another was the prominent idea in the minds of the framers of the Constitution when to Congress was committed the power to regulate commerce among the several States. * * * It would be absurd to suppose that the transmission of the subjects of trade from the seller to the buyer, or from the place of production to market, was not contemplated, for without that there could be no consummated trade with foreign nations or among the States.

In the same case the court says:

To regulate commerce means to prescribe the rules by which commerce is to be governed.

Again, in construing the words "power to regulate," Chief-Justice Marshall says, in Gibbons vs. Ogden:

This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution.

And in the same case Mr. Justice Johnson argues that the Federal power to regulate commerce is the same power that previously existed in the States, and that the power of a sovereign State over commerce "is the power to limit and restrain it at pleasure." In fact, it has been established by repeated decisions of the United States Supreme Court that the power of Congress over interstate commerce extends to the land as well as to water, and that transportation by rail, being a constituent of interstate commerce itself, is under the exclusive control of Congress by virtue of the power to regulate commerce among the States. Many acts of Congress have been passed touching commerce upon water, such as the establishment of light-houses, buoys, beacons, and public piers in aid of commerce upon the rivers and coast of the country; but it is a somewhat notable fact that Congress, so far as I know, has never passed more than two acts the purpose of which was to regulate the conduct of railways carrying freights from one State to another. One of these acts, passed in July, 1866, at the instance of the railroads themselves, authorized railroad companies chartered by States to form continuous lines for the transportation of freights. The other, passed in October, 1873, provided that no railway in the United States over which live animals, such as cattle, sheep, or swine, were conveyed from one State to another should confine such animals longer than twenty-eight consecutive hours without unloading, &c.

In these two acts by the legislative department, the power over interstate commerce is declared in unequivocal terms. And, in the language of the report of the Senate Committee on Transportation to the Seaboard, made in 1873—

If Congress has the power to say under what circumstances roads chartered by State governments shall connect and form continuous lines and carry freight and passengers and receive compensation therefor; if Congress may prescribe rules fixing the times when and how long a train shall be stopped, under what circumstances the cars shall be unloaded, and authorize the United States court to inflict a penalty for the disobedience of such rules, it can hardly be doubted that the same power can regulate transportation in other particulars, including the tariff on freights and the manner of conducting the business of such roads.

If, then, it be admitted that the necessity for legislation exists, and that Congress has full power over the subject, the only practical question before us is as to which of the different methods proposed will prove most effective. In a matter of so much importance we can not reasonably expect to accomplish everything desired by a single enactment. The wide differences between the different propositions that are submitted to Congress on the subject indicate the difficulties attending a theoretical solution of the problem involved; but the practical difficulties that would be met with in attempting to apply any of these different theories to complicated business interests of vast extent can only be foreseen in a general way, and can not be guarded against by any inflexible regulations that the best wisdom of the nation can devise. And this is the strongest argument in favor of the creation of a commission acting under enactments sufficiently elastic to accommodate themselves to emergencies that can not be foreseen until they arise, and to the changing conditions of business, yet with sufficient authority to begin the good work of railway regulation, and with intelligence and ability enough to clear away the obstacles to effective legislation. This method of procedure must commend itself to the judgment of those who have considered the experience of England and of our own State Legislatures, and who have felt the popular pulse upon this question. I believe that the bill reported by the committee is better adapted than any other that has been presented to Congress to accomplish what is necessary in the direction indicated, because it contains the principles that have been tested and approved by experience, and because it is a crystallization of what investigation and experience have shown to be most valuable and most practicable.

There is one feature in this bill which, so far as I know, has not been contained in any other bill that has been presented to Congress, and that is the system of arbitration provided for in the fifth section, to which I desire to call special attention. Even among those who believe that a commission ought to be established some insist that they shall simply be charged with the work of collecting facts and reporting to Congress. Others think that the commission should be clothed with certain authority to examine books, business operations, &c., take testimony, and bring suit in behalf of complainants, &c. And there are perhaps many other views of the duty which should devolve upon a commission when created. For my own part I am satisfied that if a commission should be created it ought to be given authority to act as a kind of board of arbitration to hear and determine complaints, and in cases justifying it awarding damages. It is not in the interest of either the people or the transportation companies to be forced into court to settle difficulties that are liable to arise even in the honest transaction of business. I have seen something of the folly, and in some cases almost ruinous folly, of going into court to settle difficulties with railroad companies. The ordinary business man can not afford to do it, and the railroad companies do not desire it. A commission of intelligent and fair-minded men, possessing a knowledge of business both as agriculturists, shippers, merchants, and railroad operators, may be fully trusted with the duty of giving a fair and just judgment in cases growing out of interstate commerce. I am sure that giving to such a commission reasonable authority to dispose of controversies between transportation companies and men or corporations or associations dealing with them will prove one of the most valuable features of any bill we may pass on the subject. Men may say that such power ought not to be lodged in the hand of a commission; that they would abuse it. In answer, I say that a properly selected commission would be far above temptation to corruption, and of an order of talent equal to the highest judges of the land, and in point of integrity, ability, and information may safely be trusted to do right in all cases.

We can not afford at this late day simply to appoint a commission with authority to investigate and report to a future Congress. Let us give them immediate authority to act for the people so far as this can safely be done, and the experience they will gain by actual work in an attempt to regulate interstate commerce will enable them the better to know what further legislation, if any, will be needed. The people expect us to act and to act effectively in their behalf. They do not expect us to organize a raid upon the railroads, but they do expect us to put the provisions of the Constitution into force by the passage of a law to regulate commerce between the several States, while up to this time substantially nothing has been done touching the land commerce of the country since the Government was organized. It is a remarkable fact that, while the provision of the Constitution is plain and simple, "that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes," and with the auxiliary power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, yet there is no general law upon the statute-books, and never has been, save in the case of the two statutes passed in 1866 and 1873, which I have mentioned, proposing in any manner any regulation of land commerce among the States.

I do not deem it necessary to explain the provisions of the bill in detail at this time. Its main features are the sections defining and prohibiting extortion and unjust discrimination, which have been very carefully drawn and which, in my opinion, cover that ground very fully; and the system provided for the adjudication of complaints by arbitration, which renders recourse to the tedious processes of the courts unnecessary, except when it is considered to the advantage of either party in interest. And this section has been framed with the intention of making it to the interest of the railroad companies at every stage of the proceedings to conform to the findings of the commission and yield obedience to its requirements. In the hands of a commission such as ought to be appointed this system could not fail to facilitate the amicable and satisfactory adjustment of most of the difficulties now complained of. Objection will probably be made to this bill in some quarters because it does not go far enough, but if it should become law it will be found, I believe, that under its provisions the commission can accomplish all that it is safe to attempt in preliminary legislation of this character, and can, from its practical experience, recommend legislation that will be effective without being damaging to the business interests of the country.

Some may object to this bill because it does not attempt to specifically prohibit pooling and rebates, or because it does not provide for fixing rates. I do not consider these objections well founded. In the first place, it must become clear to those who carefully investigate this subject that the root of all the evils complained of to-day, the source of all the trouble in railway operations, is favoritism—unequal preferences allowed to favored persons or places, or, in other words, unjust discrimination. And it must become equally clear that the purpose of all remedial legislation on this subject should be not so much to secure lower rates, not so much to prevent the hotly discussed evils of what is known as the pooling system, not so much to prohibit the equally denounced practice of allowing rebates, as to prevent unjust discrimination in any way, shape, or manner, and to secure stability and uniformity in rates. Legislation is not needed to secure lower rates, perhaps, but it is needed to make unprofitable that system of railway management under which one shipper is made to flourish while his competitor is bankrupted, and one town is built up while its rival is ruined. All questions relating to pooling, rebates, &c., come under the general head of unjust discrimination, and I am satisfied that they can be effectively dealt with by the commission under the provisions of this bill.

As it now stands the bill proposes a harmonious system, complete in itself, and is carefully guarded in all matters of detail as to the appointment and organization of the commission, the employment of the necessary assistants, the expenditure of money, the collection of information, and the preparation of its annual report. It is given all the power needed to thoroughly investigate all the workings of transportation companies and all the problems connected with interstate commerce, and is specially required to recommend such legislation as may be found necessary. Its provisions are plain, and not obscured by unnecessary verbiage. If it should become law, it may not accomplish all that is expected by its friends, but it is surely a step in the right direction—a step that it is our duty to take, and a step that it is safe to take.

Mr. SLATER. I now offer the amendment of which I gave notice yesterday, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged alone or associated with others in the transportation of property by railroad from one State or Territory to or through one or more other States or Territories of the United States, or to or from any foreign country, directly or indirectly to charge to or receive from any person or persons any greater or less rate or amount of freight, compensation, or reward than is charged to or received from any other person or persons for like and contemporaneous service in the carrying, receiving, delivering, storing, or handling of the same. All charges for such services shall be reasonable. And all persons engaged as aforesaid shall furnish, without discrimination, the same facilities for the carriage, receiving, delivery, storage, and handling of all property of like character carried by him or them, and shall perform with equal expedition the same kind of services connected with the contemporaneous transportation thereof as aforesaid. No break, stoppage, or interruption, nor any contract, agreement, or understanding, shall be made to prevent the carriage of any property from being and being treated as one continuous carriage, in the meaning of this act, from the place of shipment to the place of destination, unless such stoppage, interruption, contract, arrangement, or understanding was made in good faith for some practical and necessary purpose, without any intent to avoid or interrupt such continuous carriage or to evade any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as aforesaid directly or indirectly to allow any rebate, drawback, or other advantage, in any form, upon shipments made or services rendered as aforesaid by him or them.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the carriage, receiving, storage, or handling of property as mentioned in the first section of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, by changes of schedule, carriage in different cars, or by any other means, with intent to prevent the carriage of such property from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination, whether carried on one or several railroads. And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons carrying property as aforesaid to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights, or to pool the freights, of different and competing railroads, by dividing between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion of them.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as provided in the first section of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation for a similar amount and kind of property, for carrying, receiving, storing, forwarding, or handling the same, for a shorter than for a longer distance on any one railroad; and the road of a corporation shall include all the road in use by such corporation, whether owned or operated by it under a contract, agreement, or lease by such corporation.

SEC. 5. That all persons engaged in carrying property as provided in the first section of this act shall adopt and keep posted up schedules which shall plainly state:

First. The different kinds and classes of property to be carried.

Second. The different places between which such property shall be carried.

Third. The rates of freight and prices of carriage between such places; and for all services connected with the receiving, delivery, loading, unloading, storing, or handling the same. And the accounts for such service shall show what part of the charges are for transportation, and what part are for loading, unloading, and other terminal facilities.

Such schedules may be changed from time to time as hereinafter provided. Copies of such schedules shall be printed in plain, large type, at least the size of ordinary pica, and shall be kept plainly posted for public inspection in at least two places in every depot where freights are received or delivered; and no such schedule shall be changed in any particular except by the substitution of another schedule containing the specifications above required, which substitute schedule shall plainly state the time when it shall go into effect, and copies of which, printed as aforesaid, shall be posted as above provided at least five days before the same shall go into effect; and the same shall remain in force until another schedule shall as aforesaid be substituted. And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in carrying property on railroads as aforesaid, after thirty days after the passage of this act, to charge or receive more or less compensation for the carriage, receiving, delivery, loading, unloading, handling, or storing of any of the property contemplated by the first section of this act than shall be specified in such schedule as may at the time be in force.

SEC. 6. That each and all of the provisions of this act shall apply to all property, and the receiving, delivery, loading, unloading, handling, storing, or carriage of the same, on one actually or substantially continuous carriage, or as part of such continuous carriage, as provided for in the first section of this act, and the compensation therefor, whether such property be carried wholly on one railroad or partly on several railroads, and whether such services are performed or compensation paid or received by or to one person alone or in connection with another or other persons.

SEC. 7. That each and every act, matter, or thing in this act declared to be unlawful is hereby prohibited; and in case any person or persons as defined in this act, engaged as aforesaid, shall do, suffer, or permit to be done any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or forbidden, or shall omit to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall be guilty of any violation of the provisions of this act, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay to the person or persons who may sustain damage thereby a sum equal to three times the amount of the damages so sustained, to be recovered by the person or persons so damaged by suit in any State or United States court of competent jurisdiction where the person or persons causing such damage can be found or may have an agent, office, or place of business; and if the court before which any such action is tried shall be of opinion that the violation of the law was willful, it shall make an allowance, by way of additional costs, to the party injured sufficient to cover all his counsel and attorney fees. Any action to be brought as aforesaid may be considered, and if so brought shall be regarded, as a subject of equity jurisdiction and discovery, and affirmative relief may be sought and obtained therein. In any such action so brought as a case of equitable cognizance as aforesaid, any director, officer, receiver, or trustee of any corporation or company aforesaid, or any receiver, trustee, or person aforesaid, or any agent of any such corporation or company, receiver, trustee, or person aforesaid, or of any of them, alone or with any other person or persons, party or parties, may and shall be compelled to attend, appear, and testify and give evidence; and no claim that any such testimony or evidence might or might not tend to criminate the person testifying or giving evidence shall be of any avail, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used as against such person on the trial of any indictment against him. The attendance and appearance of any of the persons who as aforesaid may be compelled to appear or testify, and the giving of the testimony or evidence by the same, respectively, and the production of books and papers thereby, may and shall be compelled the same as in the case of any other witness; and in case any deposition or evidence, or the production of any books or papers, may be desired or required for the purpose of applying for or sustaining any such action, the same, and the production of books and papers, may and shall be had, taken, and compelled by or before any United States commissioner, or in any manner provided or to be provided for as to the taking of other depositions or evidence, or the attendance of witnesses, or the production of other books or papers in or by chapter 17 of title 13 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. No action aforesaid shall be sustained unless brought within one year after the cause of action shall accrue, or within one year after the party complaining shall have come to a knowledge of his right of action. And as many causes of action as may accrue within the year may be joined in the same suit or complaint.

SEC. 8. That any director or officer of any corporation or company acting or engaged as aforesaid, or any receiver or trustee, lessee, or person acting or engaged as aforesaid, or any agent of any such corporation or company, receiver, trustee, or person aforesaid, or of one of them alone, or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, who shall willfully do, or cause or willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or forbidden, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or aid or abet therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $1,000.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall apply to the carriage, receiving, storage, handling, or forwarding of property wholly within one State, and not shipped from or destined to some foreign country or other State or Territory; nor shall it apply to property carried for the United States at lower rates of freight and charges than for the general public, or to the transportation of articles free or at reduced rates of freight for charitable purposes, or to or from public fairs and expositions for exhibition.

SEC. 10. That the words "person or persons" as used in this act, except where otherwise provided, shall be construed and held to mean person or persons, officer or officers, corporation or corporations, company or companies, receiver or receivers, trustee or trustees, lessee or lessees, agent or agents, or other person or persons acting or engaged in any of the matters and things mentioned in this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. SLATER].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks upon the bill and the substitute just presented.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Mississippi will yield the floor to me for a motion to adjourn, I will submit that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield for that purpose?

Mr. GEORGE. I do, sir.

Mr. CALL. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILSON. Before that motion is put, I desire to have the Senator from Florida yield to me in order that I may offer two or three amendments to the bill and have the amendments printed in the RECORD, so that Senators may see them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield for that purpose?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I have no desire to engage at present in the discussion of this very important subject, but I have two or three amendments to offer to the bill, and I send them to the desk that they may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After section 1 of the bill it is proposed to insert the following new sections:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to commerce between the States, and especially in the matter of the transportation thereof, so far as the same may be necessary to the establishment of a just system of regulations for the government of the same; and said commission, in the prosecution of its inquiries, is authorized to visit such sections of the United States as it may deem necessary to the most effective discharge of its duties.

SEC. 3. That said commission shall make to Congress a complete report of the results of its investigation, and the testimony taken in the course of the same, not later than the first Monday of December, 1885; and it shall accompany said report with a bill presenting a just and comprehensive code for the regulation of the transportation of commerce among the States, which said bill shall embrace provisions for establishing a system of both maximum and minimum charges for transportation, and for the preservation of free competition within the limits so fixed; for the prohibition of discriminations of any kind whatever either in favor of or against cities, towns, or other localities, whether the same be competing or non-competing points, and for applying the same principle to transportation for individuals, firms, associations, or corporations in all matters relating to commerce among the States; for the preservation and enforcement of the right of shippers to select the lines and parts of lines over which their shipments shall pass, to the end that said commerce among the States may avail itself of the all-rail or part-rail and part-water routes of the country; for the prevention of such pooling arrangements and agreements to refrain from just competition as may tend to impose unreasonable burdens upon said commerce among the States; and for the protection of said commerce against unjust exactions based on a class of securities commonly denominated "watered stocks;" and said commission in conducting said investigation and in the preparation of said bill shall be guided by such rules of action as will be fair, just, and equitable toward all of the interests involved, whether the same be private, public, or corporate, connected with the subject of commerce among the States; and said commission shall cause 2,000 copies of said report, testimony, and bill to be printed by the Public Printer for the use of Congress by the date hereinbefore fixed.

Mr. WILSON. I offer that as an amendment to the bill reported by the committee. Of course it would not be in order for me to offer another amendment now to a different part of the bill; but in order that my purpose may be entirely understood and be before the Senate, I ask that another amendment which will be necessary to perfect the bill as I desire to have it if my first amendment should be adopted may also be read, and I will offer that should the one which has just been read be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa gives notice of an amendment which he asks may be read. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 2 of the bill as reported by the committee and to insert as section 4:

SEC. 4. That in addition to the foregoing duties and powers, and until Congress shall otherwise by law provide, the said commission shall have supervision over all matters pertaining to the regulation of commerce among the several States and Territories, and the methods of operation of all transportation companies engaged in interstate commerce; and it is hereby made the duty of said commission to enforce the provisions of this act by all lawful means within its power.

Mr. WILSON. It is my desire that these amendments as read may be printed in the RECORD, in order that my purpose may appear consecutively. I should like very well, inasmuch as we shall not for some time possibly have direct action on them, that they may be also printed in the usual form for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendments will be printed. Of course they will be printed in the RECORD, having been read.

EIGHTH NEW YORK HEAVY ARTILLERY.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment, that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a joint resolution reported by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. CALL. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let the Chief Clerk read the joint resolution No. 92.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution (S. R. 92) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of War to deliver to the Eighth New York Heavy Artillery Association the regimental colors which belonged to said artillery, and which are now in the custody of the Secretary of War; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF A PETITION.

Mr. HAWLEY. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I wish to bring before the Senate a small matter of business.

Mr. CALL. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. A few days ago I presented the petition of Arnold A. Rand and Albert Ordway, of Washington, D. C., praying the United States to buy a collection of photographic negatives owned by them, illustrating the war of the rebellion, and it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I omitted to ask that it be printed. I have the assent of a majority of the Printing Committee to ask that the usual number thereof be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. CALL. I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 18, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will be directed to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture, now correctly engrossed, which was withdrawn from the Senate by order of the House.

There being no objection, the return of the bill to the Senate was ordered.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS IN KANSAS.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands, on the 4th of April last I reported a bill (H. R. 6416) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads in the State of Kansas. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. It ought to have been referred to the House Calendar. I ask that the correction be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the reference made was an improper one, and if there be no objection the necessary correction will be made. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be placed on the House Calendar.

Mr. ANDERSON. As of the same date.

The SPEAKER. It will take its proper place on the House Calendar.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The House, as the regular order, resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and to regulate such commerce. The pending question is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by that gentleman was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAGAN. If the House shall vote down the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, will not that bring the amendment before the House for reconsideration?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted was made, and then a motion was made to lay that motion on the table. If the motion to lay on the table is not agreed to, the next question will be: Shall the vote be reconsidered?

The question being taken on the motion to lay on the table, there were—ayes 87, noes 77.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 53 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 140, nays 108, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—140.

Adams, G. E.	Funston,	Libbey,	Rowell,
Anderson,	Goff,	Long,	Russell,
Atkinson,	Greenleaf,	Lovering,	Ryan,
Bagley,	Guenther,	Lowry,	Seney,
Barr,	Hanback,	Lyman,	Shively,
Beach,	Harmer,	McComas,	Skinner, C. R.
Bisbee,	Hatch, H. H.	McCormick,	Smalls,
Boutelle,	Haynes,	Millard,	Smith, A. H.
Brainerd,	Henderson, T. J.	Milliken,	Smith, H. Y.
Breitung,	Hepburn,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Brewer, F. B.	Hewitt, A. S.	Morrill,	Springer,
Brewer, J. H.	Hill,	Morse,	Stephenson,
Brown, W. W.	Hiscock,	Murray,	Stevens,
Browne, T. M.	Hitt,	Nelson,	Stewart, J. W.
Brumm,	Hoblitzell,	Nicholls,	Stone,
Burleigh,	Holman,	Nutting,	Strait,
Campbell, J. E.	Holmes,	O'Hara,	Taylor, E. B.
Campbell, J. M.	Horr,	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, J. D.
Cannon,	Houk,	Parker,	Thomas,
Chace,	Houseman,	Payne,	Van Alstyne,
Chalmers,	Howey,	Payson,	Wadsworth,
Culbertson, W. W.	Hunt,	Perkins,	Wait,
Cullen,	James,	Peters,	Wakefield,
Cutcheon,	Jeffords,	Pettibone,	Wallace,
Davis, G. R.	Johnson,	Phelps,	Ward,
Davis, R. T.	Jones, B. W.	Poland,	Washburn,
Deuster,	Jordan,	Post,	Weaver,
Dingley,	Kean,	Potter,	White, Milo
Eldredge,	Keifer,	Price,	Whiting,
Evans,	Kellogg,	Ranney,	Wilkins,
Everhart,	Ketcham,	Ray, G. W.	Wilson, James
Ferrell,	Lacey,	Reed,	Winans, John
Findlay,	Lamb,	Rice,	Wood,
Follett,	Lawrence,	Robinson, J. S.	Worthington,
Foran,	Le Fevre,	Rockwell,	Yaple.

NAYS—108.

Alexander,	Culberson, D. B.	Lanham,	Singleton,
Ballentine,	Curtin,	Lewis,	Skinner, T. G.
Barksdale,	Dargan,	Lore,	Snyder,
Blackburn,	Davidson,	McMillin,	Stewart, Charles
Blanchard,	Davis, L. H.	Matson,	Stockslager,
Blount,	Dibble,	Miller, J. F.	Storm,
Bratton,	Dibrell,	Mills,	Sumner, C. A.
Breckinridge,	Dunn,	Money,	Talbott,
Broadhead,	Eaton,	Morrison,	Taylor, J. M.
Buchanan,	Ellis,	Moulton,	Thompson,
Buckner,	Ermentrout,	Muldrow,	Throckmorton,
Budd,	Forney,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Burnes,	Fyan,	Neece,	Townshend,
Cabell,	Geddes,	Oates,	Tucker,
Caldwell,	Gibson,	O'Ferrall,	Tully,
Campbell, Felix	Glascock,	Patton,	Turner, H. G.
Candler,	Green,	Pierce,	Turner, Oscar
Cassidy,	Halsell,	Peel,	Van Eaton,
Clardy,	Hammond,	Pryor,	Warner, Richard
Clay,	Hardeman,	Randall,	Wellborn,
Clements,	Hatch, W. H.	Reagan,	Wemple,
Cobb,	Hemphill,	Reese,	Williams,
Cosgrove,	Henley,	Riggs,	Willis,
Covington,	Herbert,	Robertson,	Wilson, W. L.
Cox, S. S.	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, J. H.	Wise, G. D.
Cox, W. R.	Jones, J. K.	Scales,	Wolford,
Crisp,	Kleiner,	Shelley,	Young.

NOT VOTING—75.

Adams, J. J.	Dowd,	Hutchins,	Rogers, W. F.
Aiken,	Dunham,	Jones, J. T.	Rosecrans,
Arnot,	Elliott,	Kelley,	Seymour,
Barbour,	Ellwood,	King,	Shaw,
Bayne,	English,	Laird,	Slocum,
Belford,	Fiedler,	McAdoo,	Spriggs,
Belmont,	Finerty,	McCoid,	Steele,
Bennett,	Garrison,	Maybury,	Struble,
Bingham,	George,	Miller, S. H.	Sumner, D. H.
Bland,	Graves,	Morgan,	Valentine,
Bowen,	Hancock,	Muller,	Vance,
Boyle,	Hardy,	Mutchler,	Warner, A. J.
Carleton,	Hart,	Ochiltree,	Weller,
Collins,	Henderson, D. B.	O'Neill, J. J.	White, J. D.
Connolly,	Hewitt, G. W.	Paige,	Winans, E. B.
Converse,	Holton,	Pusey,	Wise, J. S.
Cook,	Hooper,	Rankin,	Woodward,
Dockery,	Hopkins,	Ray, Ossian	York.
Dorsheimer,	Hurd,	Robinson, W. E.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont (before the result of the vote was announced). Mr. Speaker, I came into the Hall from a committee-room during the vote just taken and was told that I was paired with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY]; so that I did not respond when my name was called on the second roll-call. I now find that I am not paired, and therefore ask to record my vote.

There being no objection, Mr STEWART, of Vermont, was permitted to vote, and voted "ay."

Mr. KELLOGG. I understood I was paired, but am now informed that I am not paired. I ask the privilege of voting.

There being no objection, Mr. KELLOGG was allowed to vote, and voted "ay."

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. MCCOID, until December 21.

The following were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. HOOPER.

Mr. KING with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. BOWEN.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, with Mr. YORK.

The following were announced as paired on the interstate-commerce bill:

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. HART.

Mr. HILL with Mr. CHALMERS.

Mr. RANKIN with Mr. OCHILTREE, on the interstate-commerce bill. Mr. OCHILTREE would vote for and Mr. RANKIN against.

The following were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. GRAVES with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. RAY, of New Hampshire.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. KELLEY.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and to regulate such commerce.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "color" in the amendment last adopted the following:

"And that furnishing separate accommodations, with equal facilities and equal comforts, at the same charges, shall not be considered a discrimination."

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARKSDALE. On that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is simply establishing a rule of evidence.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The gentleman from Mississippi demands the previous question.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask that this amendment be read in connection with the amendments already adopted on the same subject, so that we may understand how the whole provision will read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the preceding part of the section as it stands, together with the amendment just offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

And any person or persons having purchased a ticket to be conveyed from one State to another, or paid the required fare, shall receive the same treatment and be afforded equal facilities and accommodations as are furnished all other persons holding tickets of the same class without discrimination. But nothing in this act shall be construed to deny to railroads the right to provide separate accommodations for passengers as they may deem best for the public comfort or safety, or to relate to transportation relating to points wholly within the limits of one State: Provided, That no discrimination is made on account of race or color; and that furnishing separate accommodations, with equal facilities and equal comforts, at the same charges, shall not be considered a discrimination.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 112, noes 81.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. HORR demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 132, nays 124, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—132.

Aiken,	Cabell,	Covington,	Follett,
Alexander,	Caldwell,	Cox, S. S.	Forney,
Bagley,	Campbell, Felix	Cox, W. R.	Fyan,
Ballentine,	Campbell, J. E.	Crisp,	Geddes,
Barksdale,	Candler,	Culberson, D. B.	Gibson,
Bennett,	Carlisle,	Curtin,	Glascock,
Blanchard,	Cassidy,	Dargan,	Graves,
Blount,	Chalmers,	Davidson,	Green,
Bratton,	Clardy,	Davis, L. H.	Greenleaf,
Breckinridge,	Clay,	Deuster,	Halsell,
Broadhead,	Clements,	Dibble,	Hammond,
Buchanan,	Cobb,	Dibrell,	Hardeman,
Buckner,	Converse,	Dunn,	Hatch, W. H.
Budd,	Cook,	Eaton,	Hemphill,
Burnes,	Cosgrove,	Ellis,	Henley,

Herbert,	Money,	Rogers, J. H.	Tully,
Hewitt, A. S.	Morrison,	Rogers, W. F.	Turner, H. G.
Holman,	Moulton,	Rosecrans,	Turner, Oscar
Jones, J. H.	Muldrow,	Seymour,	Van Eaton,
Jones, J. K.	Murphy,	Shelley,	Wallace,
Jordan,	Mutchler,	Singleton,	Warner, A. J.
Kleiner,	Neece,	Skinner, T. G.	Warner, Richard
Lanham,	Nicholls,	Snyder,	Wellborn,
Lewis,	Oates,	Stewart, Charles	Wemple,
Lore,	O'Ferrall,	Storm,	Wilkins,
Lovering,	Patton,	Sumner, C. A.	Williams,
Lowry	Pierce,	Talbott,	Willis,
McAdoo,	Peel,	Taylor, J. M.	Wilson, W. L.
McMillin,	Pryor,	Thompson,	Winans, John
Matson,	Randall,	Throckmorton,	Wise, G. D.
Miller, J. F.	Reagan,	Tillman,	Wolford,
Mills,	Reese,	Townshend,	Wood,
Mitchell,	Robertson,	Tucker,	Young.

NAYS—124.

Adams, G. E.	Funston,	McComas,	Russell,
Anderson,	Goff,	McCormick,	Ryan,
Atkinson,	Guenther,	Millard,	Seney,
Barr,	Hanback,	Milliken,	Shively,
Beach,	Harmer,	Morrill,	Skinner, C. R.
Bingham,	Hatch, H. H.	Morse,	Smalls,
Bisbee,	Haynes,	Murray,	Smith, A. H.
Boutelle,	Henderson, D. B.	Nelson,	Smith, H. Y.
Brainerd,	Henderson, T. J.	Nutting,	Spooner,
Breitung,	Hepburn,	O'Hara,	Spriggs,
Brewer, F. B.	Hitt,	O'Neill, Charles	Stephenson,
Brewer, J. H.	Hoblitzell,	O'Neill, J. J.	Stephens,
Brown, W. W.	Holmes,	Parker,	Stewart, J. W.
Browne, T. M.	Horr,	Payne,	Stone,
Brumm,	Houk,	Payson,	Strait,
Burleigh,	Howey,	Perkins,	Struble,
Campbell, J. M.	Hunt,	Peters,	Taylor, E. B.
Cannon,	Jeffords,	Pettibone,	Taylor, J. D.
Chace,	Johnson,	Phelps,	Thomas,
Culbertson, W. W.	Jones, B. W.	Poland,	Wadsworth,
Cullen,	Kean,	Post,	Wait,
Cutcheon,	Keifer,	Potter,	Wakefield,
Davis, G. R.	Kellogg,	Price,	Ward,
Davis, R. T.	Ketcham,	Ranney,	Washburn,
Dingley,	Lacey,	Ray, Ossian	Weaver,
Eldredge,	Lamb,	Reed,	White, J. D.
Evans,	Lawrence,	Rice,	White, Milo
Everhart,	Le Fevre,	Riggs,	Whiting,
Ferrell,	Libbey,	Robinson, J. S.	Wilson, James
Findlay,	Long,	Rockwell,	Worthington,
Foran,	Lyman,	Rowell,	Yaple.

NOT VOTING—68.

Adams, J. J.	Elliott,	Houseman,	Ray, G. W.
Arnot,	Ellwood,	Hurd,	Robinson, W. E.
Barbour,	English,	Hutchins,	Scales,
Bayne,	Ermentrout,	James,	Shaw,
Belford,	Fiedler,	Jones, J. T.	Slocum,
Belmont,	Finerty,	Kelley,	Springer,
Blackburn,	Garrison,	King,	Steele,
Bland,	George,	Laird,	Stockslager,
Bowen,	Hancock,	McCold,	Sumner, D. H.
Boyle,	Hardy,	Maybury,	Valentine,
Carleton,	Hart,	Miller, S. H.	Van Alstyne,
Collins,	Hewitt, G. W.	Morgan,	Vance,
Connolly,	Hill,	Muller,	Weller,
Dockery,	Hiscock,	Ochiltree,	Winans, E. B.
Dorsheimer,	Holton,	Paige,	Wise, J. S.
Dowd,	Hooper,	Pusey,	Woodward,
Dunham,	Hopkins,	Rankin,	York.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. HISCOCK with Mr. BLACKBURN, on this vote. If present, Mr. BLACKBURN would vote "ay" and Mr. HISCOCK would vote "no."

Mr. LAIRD with Mr. CONNOLLY, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above reported.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] in charge of the bill pending before the House to yield for a moment to the unanimous wish of the Committee on Appropriations to take from the Speaker's table the temporary naval appropriation bill, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. My desire is to make a motion in connection with that bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill on the Speaker's table is the annual naval appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill referred to is the bill passed at this session by the House. The Chair is right, as both bills are upon the Speaker's table. I only ask that the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service be taken up for present consideration.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 17, 1884.

Resolved, That this bill pass with amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, in this connection I desire to present for the information of the House and country generally some figures showing the difference between the two Houses on this bill:

The bill providing for current expenses of the Navy, January 1 to June 30, 1885, as passed the House, appropriates	$6,734,717 11
That bill as amended by the Senate gives for the same purposes	7,204,358 83
Being an increase of	469,641 72
The Senate on the same bill also gives for increase of the Navy	$4,700,000 00
Total increase over House bill	5,169,641 72
The bill as passed the House last session gave for current expenses (one-half)	6,318,521 33
That bill as amended by the Senate gave for current expenses (one-half)	7,126,001 33
The bill just passed the Senate is in excess as follows (not including increase of Navy, $4,700,000):
Over same bill as it passed the House	$469,641 72
Over the bill as passed the House last session	885,837 50
Over the House bill as amended by the Senate last session	78,357 50

I make no comment, but simply present these figures and move the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and accede to the request of the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints, as managers of said conference on the part of the House, Mr. RANDALL, Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. LONG.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE BILL.

The SPEAKER. The House now resumes consideration of the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. HORR rose.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to call the previous question on the first section of the bill.

Mr. HORR. That can not be done under the agreement.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to be heard a moment on that question.

Mr. HORR. Have I the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to be heard for a moment in reference to the order which required this bill to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole can rise to enable the House to close debate. We are now in the House, and can close debate on this section. The right to call the previous question on the whole bill or various parts of the bill is clear; but I will read the rule:

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection.

The call for the previous question on the bill embraces of course the right to call the previous question on any part of it. The reason of the rule is to enable the House to reach a conclusion at some time. If it be true the previous question can not be called on the sections of this bill, then it becomes necessary to abandon it, because it might be impracticable to secure its passage, as we all know this section will be amended until the 4th of March next, in order to defeat the bill itself. And there is no way to prevent it—that is, if it be true we can not call the previous question.

Suppose under the rule a bill comes back to the House with an order like this, subject to debate and amendment, and no member chooses to debate it; is the bill lost? Can the previous question not be called?

The object, it seems to me, the reason of the rule, is to enable the House to control its proceedings; reasonable privilege for amendment and debate is allowed in order to enable the House to come to a conclusion. But if the view of the Speaker be right, then the House can never, in a case like this, control its own proceedings and business.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I think the point which is raised by the gentleman from Texas is to some extent novel. I do not remember any decision which covers the present situation. I should like, if the Speaker pleases, to say a word or two on the general subject. This is a proceeding by unanimous consent—just exactly what it was in this special instance I shall not undertake to discuss, but in a general way it is an agreement that this measure should be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Now, the expression "as in the Committee of the Whole" must have some meaning, and it seems to me plain the meaning is, the House shall have all the rights and privileges which belong to individual members under discussion in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. What are those rights? First, the right to debate under the five-minute rule until the House shall have limited debate under that rule; second, the right to make amendments until every member of the House has ceased to desire to amend the bill and to show that desire by proposing amendments.

Now, so far as the right of the House to cut off debate as a general question, for I am not speaking about this particular case or what the particular agreement was here, but in a general way, I should be inclined to think the House had the right in some way or other to cut off debate. Whether it should be done by a motion for the previous question or be done by direct appeal to the House on a direct motion to close debate in such and such a time might be a question for the Chair, and might easily be decided either way; but the right to cut off the privilege of every member to make amendment can not be done under this arrangement, in my judgment, because that would not be a consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The gentleman from Texas undertakes to point his argument and enforce it by appealing to the inconvenience that would result, but that inconvenience is precisely the same that must always result from the consideration of a question in the Committee of the Whole. And if any fault is to be found with the situation it must be with the situation which he himself has made, and the argument from inconvenience can not be urged by anybody who has himself consented to the inconvenience.

It seems to me that is a fair statement of the matter outside of this particular instance, for I do not happen to remember the terms of the unanimous consent except in a general way, that the bill was to be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Maine, before he takes his seat, if he would say in what respect I have brought about this condition of things?

Mr. REED. The gentleman was one of those who unanimously consented to the bill being considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and being in charge of the bill, if the onus is stronger upon one than upon another, it must be upon the one having the management of the bill who suggested the arrangement.

Mr. HERBERT. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, the question resolves itself into this: Does this House, by undertaking to consider this bill under the agreement in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, give up its power as a House or not? That is the question.

The gentleman from Maine speaks of the inconvenience of the agreement which had been made. As I understand it, the agreement was made for the convenience of considering the matter in the House and allowing amendment in the House, but it does not necessarily follow at all that the House has thereby given up its power to close debate whenever it wishes to do so. Ordinarily this same body considers a bill of this character by first resolving itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering, amending, and perfecting the measure. Then this same body resolves itself back into the House for the purpose of closing debate.

Now, I contend that the House does not surrender its power as a House because it has been agreed that the bill to be considered is to be considered as in Committee of the Whole. It has the power both of the committee and of the House. In other words, the House, for the sake of convenience in the exercise of the powers that it has in the committee, proceeds in the manner that this bill has been proceeded with to consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, while at the same time it may exercise its power as a House and close debate.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow the Chair to suggest a question? If this bill were now being considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the committee should rise and ask the House to close debate, could the House under any rule or practice which has ever prevailed prevent amendments as long as any gentleman saw proper to offer them on the floor? The House might stop debate, it is true, but not the right to offer amendments.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not think it would prevent amendments, but it certainly would prevent debate; and the motion may be made now in the House for the purpose of preventing future debate on any amendment that may be offered. But if I am right in the theory stated, the House does not lose its right as a House because it has taken on the additional privilege of considering, while it is a House, a bill subject to the rules governing the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that this is a very clear question. We are here to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Now, suppose we were discussing some bill in Committee of the Whole, there is nothing clearer, there is no practice of this House more undisputed and uniform than that it is entirely competent to cut off debate, but that you can not cut off the right of a member or any member of the House to offer amendments.

The present situation may be inconvenient. It may be that we need to escape from the force of this rule at this time; but the truth as to what the rule is, it seems to me, is easily ascertained; and, while I sympathize with my friend from Texas in charge of this bill, I can not ask the Speaker to make a ruling that would deprive a member of his rights on this floor.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not asking a ruling on that question. I ask the previous question with whatever consequences grow out of it upon this section.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to be heard on that proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman to claim the right to move the previous question upon this section and cut off all debate or amendment, and in that event that the right under the rule to offer amendment should be cut off, and I think it was so understood by the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I so understood it here.

Mr. REAGAN. I repeat, I have simply asked for the previous question on this section with whatever parliamentary consequences may grow out of it.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I endeavored to make this point of order because I think it is very important to the consideration not only of this section of this bill but to all of the legislation that may be had on this floor. There can be no doubt about the situation of the bill. On the 1st of March, 1884, this bill was made a special order. That was subsequently modified to provide that the bill should be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. That was the original arrangement, that stands, as I understand it, up to the present time, so that the status of the bill until within a few days past was fixed and the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole.

But the order of the House goes even a step further. On the 11th day of this month the gentleman from Texas in charge of this bill undertook to make an arrangement so as to enable the House to consider his substitute, if it should be the wish of the House and it preferred that to the report of the Committee on Commerce, and that is important to be considered in determining the question now before us. On the day named the gentleman from Texas, addressing the Chair, said:

Mr. REAGAN. Now I wish to ask the members of the committee and others interested whether we can have an understanding as to the closing of this general debate. To-morrow the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY], a member of the committee, wants thirty minutes. I wish then to close debate by calling the previous question on the two amendments which have been suggested. The result will be to give us one of the bills, which then can be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. If the substitute is adopted, that will be under the five-minute rule for amendment; and if the committee's bill is sustained, that will be under the five-minute rule for amendment. What I wish is to get some understanding when we shall get to the five-minute debate and to the disposal of this matter at an early day.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] said:

That will not preclude any one from offering amendments. Now, the committee, when it presented its bill through the chairman, had an understanding it should be open to amendment in the House.

Then the following proceedings took place:

The SPEAKER. According to the rule and practice of the House the bill reported by the committee is first to be perfected by amendment and then the substitute before the vote is taken between the two. But of course there can be an understanding on the part of the House that a test vote shall be taken between the two opposing propositions, and that the one sustained by the vote of the House shall be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. REAGAN. It was from my knowledge that such was the practice of the House I have ventured to make the suggestion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not know that it is necessary, but I wish to say that at some stage of the proceedings, if I can get the floor, I desire to make the motion to recommit the bill so that it may be improved.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to recommit the bill so that it can go back to the committee and be brought again into the House improved in many provisions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be deprived of his right to recommit the bill.

Then the gentleman from Kansas on my left [Mr. PETERS] said:

I wish to ask whether, after the previous question is ordered, any amendments could be offered to the bill other than those which had been presented prior to the demand for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas announced his intention to move the previous question simply upon the two amendments he has offered, leaving the bill thereafter open to amendments.

Mr. PETERS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It might as well be stated, so that the House will not misunderstand it, that when this bill was authorized to be reported from the committee full opportunities were to be given to members of the committee to offer amendments in the shape of substitutes or otherwise.

Then I said:

I understand the gentleman from Texas proposes to move the previous question upon his substitute and another amendment which he has offered.

Mr. REAGAN. Upon the two amendments which I have offered, to call the previous question upon them, and for the purpose of determining which of the two bills the House prefers, in order that it may go on without unnecessary delay and amend the one which may be selected, instead of two.

Mr. KEIFER. But does not the Speaker state a difficulty that may grow out of this arrangement—that is, that we might be forced to take the substitute?

Mr. REAGAN. I propose that the substitute itself shall be open to amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Then that had better be clearly understood, and that we are simply voting as a matter of preference between the bill and the substitute; and after that is done leave it so that the one which is selected shall be considered in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. REAGAN. That is my suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

To which I replied, as follows:

I do not object, then, to that.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that will be considered as understood.

And so this House understood the arrangement at that time.

Now, the gentleman from Texas, as I understand, in his remarks, first upon the point of order, suggested that he desired the previous question upon the whole section.

I am quite certain that in the ordinary consideration of a bill before the House the previous question may be ordered upon the whole section or the whole bill or any proposition in a bill. But the gentleman now says that he only wants the House to entertain the previous question, leaving the question to be determined afterward as to the effect of it.

But in the face of this understanding, made on his own suggestion, in the face of the unanimous understanding of the House, it will not do to adopt the previous question upon a section and then to say that the previous question is to have its usual and ordinary effect, as determined by Rule XVII, which is to bring the House to an immediate vote upon the pending proposition. So that we must now look the matter in the face. If we have the previous question it is not offered for the purpose merely of cutting off debate, but it will go to the effect of bringing the House to a direct and immediate vote upon the pending proposition; for such is the rule. But I claim it would be in violation of the unanimous understanding of the House to adopt the previous question and give it the effect either of cutting off debate or of cutting off amendments.

It is perfectly clear, as stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and others, that you can never cut off amendments when you are considering a bill in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. You may cut off debate—not while you are in committee, not there; but you may have the committee rise and by order of the House direct that debate shall terminate upon any proposition in the committee. That will cut off debate entirely; but amendments under the rule go on indefinitely. I refer to paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII, well known to the Speaker. So that we now find ourselves here with a bill in the House but being considered as in Committee of the Whole; by the original arrangement we have given preference to this bill over everything else, even over the morning hour; everything else in the House except appropriation and revenue bills. Then we have a subsequent arrangement to enable the gentleman to get the substitute considered and which requires unanimous consent to make. We have a subsequent arrangement which leaves this bill open to amendment and debate. If we had not so understood it, some of us at least would have objected to this.

But aside from all that, considering that we are passing upon this bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the previous question should not be entertained so as to cut off amendment and debate. It is true that the previous question has been entertained to cut off debate upon an amendment after it has been proposed here; but the proposition now of the gentleman is by wholesale to cut it off entirely on a section.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman can go that far after having induced the House to consent unanimously to go to the consideration of this bill as in Committee of the Whole with the understanding it shall be open to amendment and debate; if the gentleman can go that far, he has but one thing further to do, that is to move the previous question upon the entire bill and prevent debate and amendment upon any part of it. So that we would be deluded and drawn into a great trap here that would cut off the right and the power of the members of this House to offer any amendments at all. That would be in violation of the practice in committee. It would be in direct violation of the statement of the gentleman when this unanimous consent was obtained to take this bill up in this way. If it can be done at all upon a section it can be done upon the whole bill; and it will not do to say to the Chair that he must entertain this motion for the previous question and then look out for the consequences afterward. The consequences we can see in advance.

Mr. REAGAN. While I am not so familiar, perhaps, with the rules as some other gentlemen may be, I wish to say that my understanding is that when a bill comes before the House subject to debate and amendments, it means such debate and such amendments as the House sees proper to allow. It does not mean a day, a week, a month, or a year. But it means such amendments as the House may allow.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] makes the complaint that I, by this motion, proposed to violate the agreement by which the House agreed to close general debate and order the previous question on the two amendments that were then pending. The gentleman is aggrieved, after we have spent one day and more than an hour of another day amending and debating one section of the bill, because I, under these circumstances, seek to cut off further debate and amendment on that section. And he charges that in doing so I want to violate an agreement. That is all there is in his argument. The gentleman discusses and recites what has passed in reference to this bill. We are here in the House engaged in the consideration of the bill. We have surrendered none of our rights under the rules or provisions of the House by coming into the House to consider this bill. We only expedite its action and place ourselves where we can make a record of the votes of members on the various amendments. That is all. When we debate in Committee of the Whole, as a uniform practice the committee rises for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate. That is under the sixth division of Rule XXIII.

> The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five-minute debate has begun—

It does not say after it has lasted an hour, a day, or a week, but after it has begun—

> upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendment only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

That closing of debate is upon a different motion from the one I make. If the Speaker has doubts upon the motion I have made I am willing to make a motion under this rule to close debate.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. REAGAN. But I want to do the one thing or the other to place the House in a condition to take action. I say this alternatively, because it seems to me the House can not dare, consistently with the interests of the public, to surrender jurisdiction over its proceedings and allow a few members to detain it indefinitely without calling the previous question. The power to call the previous question over the whole bill or any series of motions in relation to the bill or any paragraph or section in the bill, if it has any meaning, is that it may be done for the purpose of closing debate; that it may be done by the House keeping control of its own business, and that it will not thereby place it in the power of a faction that may wish to delay the action and thwart the will of a majority by mere factious amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the former practices of the House when considering appropriation bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule must throw some light on this question. The object, of course, of considering a measure in the House, instead of in Committee of the Whole, is first to make a record, and secondly for the purpose of enabling the majority to control the disposition of the pending measure and each successive question that might arise. The exercise of these two powers—that of making a record and that of controlling the measure by the use of the previous question and closing debate—is the chief advantage of considering bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The important question which in my view springs up here is as to the real intention of the House when it consented to this mode of considering the pending bill, and I find the exact meaning, so far as it can be gathered from the RECORD, expressed on page 195 when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], in order to make the purpose definite, said:

> Then that had better be clearly understood, and that we are simply voting as a matter of preference between the bill and the substitute; and after that is done leave it so that the one which is selected shall be considered in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Now, clearly the object, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio, who, I see, gives me his attention, was that this bill should be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule. I see the gentleman agrees that this was the statement made and intended to be made by him, and to this the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] agreed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that being the purpose, I think it will be found the ruling generally has been when appropriation bills have in former years been considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, that debate could not be cut off in the first instance. Debate must be allowed in the House upon the propositions submitted and until debate is closed; but debate is liable to be closed in the House when so considering a bill as in the ordinary case where the Committee of the Whole rises for the purpose of closing debate in the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. When the gentleman speaks of closing debate, does he mean on the paragraph or upon the whole bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. On the paragraph. To the extent I have stated the rule I mention I think has been often applied where bills have been considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Under the five-minute rule, I think that if the precedents should be examined it will be found that where a bill is pending, as this is, in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, debate on each successive proposition, for and against, must be allowed; and the House may then close the debate. But this has no application to the power of the House to cut off amendment by the previous question. I feel quite confident that an examination of the precedents will sustain the view I have expressed. I think it clear that the House can close debate on each section or amendments thereto after the five minutes' debate has occurred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] refers to the practice of the House in the consideration of appropriation bills in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is the gentleman able to cite for the benefit of the Chair any ruling made upon such occasions?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to do so at this moment. I have not had time to look up the precedents.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not been able to find any such ruling.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able now to point to any particular case, though I am quite confident that precedents of the kind I have indicated can be found.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I would call attention especially to paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII. Under this provision, as will be noticed, when we are actually in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union considering a bill debate can not be cut off upon any amendment offered until debate has proceeded upon that amendment. It is very clear that when we are considering a measure under the five-minute rule in Committee of the Whole debate must have gone on for some time before the committee can rise and debate be cut off by a motion in the House. So that if in this case the previous question is to be considered as taking the place of the motion to limit debate, it is not in order when we reach a section of the bill to cut off discussion until debate has proceeded upon some pending amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. The rule speaks of debate having "begun," not upon an amendment but upon a proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. But when we are considering a measure in Committee of the Whole no vote is taken until somebody offers an amendment, and then the committee can not rise for the purpose of cutting off debate on that amendment until debate has proceeded.

Mr. REAGAN. Debate has been had here. There is no proposition to cut off debate before debate has actually proceeded.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had better read the paragraph of the rules to which I have referred. It is very plain and definite in its terms:

The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments—

Not on the bill, nor a section, but—upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

So, Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman proposes now to use the previous question for the purpose of terminating not only debate but amendments upon a pending section, his proposition can not be entertained (if we are to follow the analogies of the consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union) until there is pending an amendment upon which debate has begun.

But this whole difficulty can be gotten rid of very easily. Let the gentleman proceed according to the usual forms of terminating debate when amendments are presented, and not undertake to sweep over the whole field and cut off amendments and debate. If this section is subject to such a motion as the gentleman proposes the whole bill is subject to the same motion. I do not think the Chair is now going to limit us in this way and hold that the previous question if ordered shall have any other than its usual operation, that is to bring the House to a vote immediately upon the pending proposition.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, when this question was raised by the gentleman from Texas, I had been recognized by the Chair and was on the floor. Now, as to the point of order which has been debated, it has grown less clear to me the more I have listened to the discussion. I do not propose to try to decide that question, but I desire the Speaker to recollect that I have possession of the floor and am entitled to my right under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not overlook the gentleman's rights.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana has referred to page 195 where the gentleman from Texas clearly makes the agreement that we shall have the right to offer amendments to this bill. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio he went further and said the bill should be considered as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Now I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas for a moment whether he proposes to cut off debate at any time on any pending amendment before the House. At this time there is no amendment, although I have one to offer at the proper time. I tried to offer it yesterday but did not get the opportunity. Now, if that amendment shall be before the House and that amendment shall be under debate, does the gentleman from Texas propose to cut off all debate? Does the gentleman, who has perhaps consumed more time in the discussion of this question than all the other members upon the floor, intend to move to cut off perfectly legitimate debate on that pending amendment? Does he propose not even to allow the member offering it to engage in its discussion? Does he propose to refuse to let the member presenting a proposition explain his amendment under the five-minute rule? It seems to me any such proceeding would be most unkind. I ask the gentleman from Texas to refer to the RECORD, page 195, and to reread the agreement which he entered into.

Mr. REAGAN. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. If I get the floor, Mr. Speaker, I now give notice that I shall move an amendment to this section.

Mr. REAGAN. It certainly never was intended that more than a day and a half should be taken up in the amendment of one section of this bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. As I understand it, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] has been recognized to move an amendment. If the gentleman from Michigan does not wish to hold the floor I will take it and offer my amendment. Then the gentleman can raise his question at the expiration of the five minutes, which under the rule I am entitled to in debating any proposition which I may submit. At present there is no amendment before the House. The gentleman from Texas can not cut off debate on an amendment to the section when no amendment is pending. Under the rule it can only be done when an amendment is before the committee, and just now, as I have already said, there is no amendment pending. [Cries of "Decision!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes not only the difficulty of this question under the rules of the House, and under the order made in this particular case, but also the importance of its correct decision as constituting, perhaps, a precedent to be followed hereafter; for, of course, whatever is decided here, so far as it may be based entirely on the rules of the House, will apply to other bills as well as to this. The order of the House made last March was that this bill should be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If the bill were actually being considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it is conceded on all sides that the House would still have power, under an express rule, to close debate not only upon a pending amendment but upon the whole section or paragraph under consideration. Therefore the question presents itself at once whether the House when considering a bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has less power to close debate than if it were actually in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The most the Chair can do is to assimilate the proceedings of the committee in the House as nearly as possible to the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

It has always been held when the House is considering a proposition as in Committee of the Whole it must be read by section or paragraph, as the case may be, but at the same time it has been held that the previous question may be ordered on a pending question, that the yeas and nays may be called, which can not, of course, be done in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that a motion to recommit or reconsider may be made, or a motion to lay on the table, which are not proper motions to be made in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. And it has always been the practice of the House, and in fact has been ruled in the House repeatedly, that debate could not be closed otherwise than by the previous question.

Now the Chair feels somewhat embarrassed by what transpired a few days ago in reference to this matter, and he has some difficulty in determining whether that amounted to an agreement or understanding on both sides of the House that there should be unlimited debate and unlimited opportunity for amendment, or whether it simply meant the House should proceed in regard to this bill in the usual way bills are considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There is another difficulty about entertaining a motion for the previous question on a section of the bill. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read the seventeenth rule, as follows:

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee; and a motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

The SPEAKER. Now, it will be observed that the rules of the House prescribe exactly what the effect of the previous question shall be, that is, that it shall bring the House to a direct vote upon the main or pending question, which presupposes that there is a question pending. The gentleman from Texas demands the previous question, not upon any pending motion or question, but upon the section under consideration.

Suppose the House shall order the previous question upon it; what vote is to be taken after that is done? It must be apparent that there is no vote to be taken on the section itself, nor is there anything upon which the previous question can operate, its only effect being to cut off debate and amendment; and the Chair, therefore, is of the opinion that when considering a bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, a motion for the previous question can not be entertained unless there be some question actually pending before the House upon which the vote should be taken after the previous question is ordered. If there was an amendment pending, that of course would be a question upon which the vote would be taken. So the Chair thinks that the gentleman's motion is premature at all events.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the Chair permit me to make a suggestion?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The question upon which the gentleman from Texas may move the previous question is to limit debate.

The SPEAKER. But can debate be limited in the House except by the previous question itself?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But you can limit debate by a motion to limit debate, upon which motion the previous question is to operate.

The SPEAKER. It has been decided that there can be no motion to limit debate in the House except by the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair does not understand my proposition. I have not made my point perhaps clear. Suppose, for instance, the case where the Committee of the Whole rises in the consideration of a bill and comes in the House with a motion to limit debate. That is done by a motion to limit debate, upon which motion the previous question is asked to prevent debate upon that motion itself.

Now, suppose you desire to limit debate on a section of a bill, but not exclude the right of a member or of members to offer additional amendments; that is the only way you can do it, by moving to limit debate upon the section and by demanding the previous question upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman will see a distinction; can you make a motion to limit debate upon a proposition pending in the House itself, and not in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? Is not the only way that can be done by ordering the previous question?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes; but the previous question is asked for now to prevent further debate.

The SPEAKER. But there is no vote to be taken upon the section on which the previous question would operate.

Mr. REAGAN. Upon the suggestion of the Speaker with reference to closing debate in the House by the previous question and its parallel case, the operation of the order to close debate in Committee of the Whole, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that by the terms of the agreement we are acting in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but suppose the House should order the previous question, as now demanded by the gentleman from Texas, upon what would it operate or upon what would the House be called to vote directly after the previous question is ordered? There is no question pending now before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. Suppose a motion should be made to strike out the section, and the gentleman from Texas should move the previous question upon that motion, what would be the effect or the situation that the House would be placed in if the motion to strike out should be voted down? Would the section be subject to further amendment or debate?

The SPEAKER. That is the very question the Chair is considering, whether the effect of the previous question would not be fully exhausted as soon as a vote had been taken upon the amendment, there being nothing else to vote upon. Suppose there was an amendment pending to the section, and the gentleman from Texas should move the previous question upon the amendment and the section, and the House should order the previous question; has not the previous question exhausted itself as soon as the vote is taken upon the amendment, that being the only vote the House can take?

Mr. REAGAN. But when we pass from a section of a bill, acting upon it in the committee, do we not imply that that section is passed?

The SPEAKER. That may be by implication; but there is no vote taken by the House on the section separately; and if a vote were taken it would have no effect. It would not pass the section. It would not make it a law, or have any legal effect whatever.

The Chair desires, however, to say that if upon further examination of the practice and proceedings of the House he finds that he is mistaken in his present opinion he will certainly rule otherwise upon this question. This decision is made without having had an opportunity of examining as thoroughly as the Chair would like the question presented.

Mr. REAGAN. This question, Mr. Speaker, is such a grave one and so far reaching in its results upon the future legislation of the House that I think it should be determined by a vote of the House upon it, and if there be no method of preventing unlimited debate under such circumstances, I should like to know it by the vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will gladly entertain the appeal of the gentleman from Texas, and submit it to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT addressed the Chair.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to allow me to make a suggestion.

Mr. KEIFER. If there is any great object to be attained by further debate I shall not insist upon the motion at this time. Reserving, however, the right to make the motion, I will hear the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. My object is simply to inquire of the Chair whether it would entertain a motion, such as may be entertained in Committee of the Whole, that we may rise to limit debate. Whether or not by analogy the Chair could not also entertain the motion to limit debate upon a section when acting in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It has been decided more than once that such a motion could not be made with reference to a proposition actually pending in the House; that the only way debate can be closed and the House brought to a direct vote upon a proposition is to move the previous question.

Now, the Chair has intimated his opinion, but is not inclined to decide now what effect the previous question would have if it could be ordered at all on the section. The Chair has simply declined to entertain a demand for the previous question upon the section of the bill when there is no question pending in regard to that section at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not understand there has been any decision made by the Chair from which an appeal can be taken. If I understand the ruling of the Chair it is a negative ruling, not an affirmative one; and I do not see there is anything from which an appeal can be taken in this case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided it was not in order to demand the previous question upon a section of the bill when there was no question pending before the House with regard to that section; no amendment pending; no proposition to lay it on the table or postpone it or any other parliamentary proposition pending.

Mr. KEIFER. I insist on my motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Would it be in order to move now to agree to the first section as amended?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer to decide that question when it arises. The Chair understands and appreciates the difficulty under which the House may find itself with regard to these bills unless some practice can be adopted which will enable it to terminate debate and amendment. But that is not the question addressed to the Chair. The Chair must administer the rules of the House as he finds them.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If it be now in order I would make the motion I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. Certainly that motion would not be in order now, while an appeal is pending.

Mr. KEIFER. I insist on the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. REAGAN. I will withdraw the appeal. And if I am in order I will move to limit debate on this section to five minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order against that motion.

The SPEAKER. It has been decided very frequently in the House that a motion to limit debate on a proposition in the House is not in order, and that it can only be done by ordering the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. And does the Chair, then, decide that the House can neither limit debate nor order the previous question on this section?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided that. The Chair will state again precisely what it decides. The decision of the Chair is that it was not in order to demand the previous question upon the section when there was no question in relation to the section then pending before the House; and the Chair caused a part of the rule to be read which prescribes exactly what the effect shall be when the previous question is ordered. The very first effect of the previous question when ordered is to bring the House to a vote upon a pending proposition. Now there is no proposition pending.

Mr. REAGAN. Do I then understand the Chair that the House can in no way exercise control on this question?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is demanded on any question that is pending before the House, the Chair will, of course, entertain the demand.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to move to adopt this section as section 1 of this bill? If that is in order I make that motion.

Mr. HORR. That certainly is not in order now, while I am on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see what effect that motion would have if it were adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. The effect would be to adopt that section as a part of the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is undoubtedly a part of the bill now.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If we were in Committee of the Whole now would it not be in order to move to agree to the section as amended? If it be in order, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that motion is not in order.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HERBERT. The motion was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] when last on his feet to limit debate on the pending section. Did the Speaker decide the question as to that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker said that he knew of no rule of the House which authorized a motion to limit debate in the House. Nor does he know of any practice which authorizes that motion. If there has been such a practice the Chair will certainly entertain the motion.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to appeal from that decision of the Chair simply for the purpose of presenting one point to the consideration of the House and of the Speaker; and it is this——

Mr. KEIFER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has the floor.

Mr. HERBERT. The point I make is this: That motion is in order if the House in its present condition has the powers both of the House and of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Unless it has surrendered one power or the other, that motion is in order; because when we are in committee we may come back into the House for the purpose of asking the House to limit debate in the committee on a section.

The SPEAKER. That is because the House has adopted an express rule upon that subject, which applies only when a bill is being considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HERBERT. But, Mr. Speaker, the very question here is whether we have not in our present condition still the power of the House and the power of the committee. That rule applies to the House when in committee. The House has now the power of a Committee of the Whole and also power as a House. If that be true, then the House can limit the debate on the section. It certainly has the power to limit debate on the section unless it has lost its power as a House. If it has not lost its power as a House it has the power to limit debate.

It seems to me that in analogy to the rule of law that when there is an apparent conflict between two statutes you must endeavor to reconcile them, so here you must reconcile the situation by giving effect, so far as possible, to all the powers that the House has as such and all the powers that the Committee of the Whole House has as such, when they are not in irreconcilable conflict. There is no irreconcilable conflict here between the power of this House as a House and the power of this House as a Committee of the Whole, none whatever, and by adopting the construction for which I contend you can give effect at once to our powers in both capacities.

To recapitulate briefly: we have the power as a Committee of the Whole to rise and go into the House; being in the House we have the power to limit debate on the section; then, having limited debate, we have the power to go back into committee. Thus the whole question is settled. Where is there any conflict between those two powers? If this House is sitting as a Committee of the Whole and is still the House of Representatives, as a House it certainly has that power.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If that be not so, we have less power in the House than we would have in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HERBERT. That is true. We never thought that in this matter we were giving up our power as a House. We have both the power of the House and the power of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggested a moment ago that the question was whether the House now had less power to control the debate when considering this bill in the House than it would have had if it had proceeded with the consideration of the bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The difficulty in this case arises from the fact that when the House is considering a measure as a House, the only way to stop debate, so far as the rules provide, is by ordering the previous question; whereas when the House is considering a proposition in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union there is another way provided by the rules themselves for stopping debate, and that is by a motion to rise and go into the House, and there, by the action of the House, limit or close debate in the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. The very terms of the agreement in this case are that we shall consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HERBERT. If we are a House, and if we are acting as a committee, then both sets of rules must logically apply to our proceedings, unless we have given up one power or the other.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And the power to order the previous question is not the same as the power to limit debate on a section.

Mr. KEIFER. If the appeal is entertained I desire to move to lay it on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very glad to hear suggestions from any member on this question, because it is a matter of importance, affecting not only this bill but all other measures which may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. It is somewhat singular that there are no precedents; that the House should have transacted business in this way for so many years without there having been any ruling upon this question.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has not fully considered the fact that the right to debate is unlimited unless there is some specific rule enabling us to limit it; that the presumption in any parliamentary body is that debate shall be unlimited unless specific ground can be found for limiting it. And, as the Speaker has pointed out, it can not be done here, because the only way of closing debate is by moving the previous question, and in the present status of affairs there is nothing upon which the previous question can operate. That seems to be a demonstration.

Mr. HERBERT. I beg the gentleman from Maine to pardon me, but there is a specific rule under which it can be done.

Mr. REED. Which one?

Mr. HERBERT. The rule by which the House can limit debate on the section being considered in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REED. But that arises from the control the House has over the Committee of the Whole. Now, while this question is being considered as in the Committee of the Whole, it is not being made by the Committee of the Whole, which is the distinction the gentleman has overlooked.

Mr. HERBERT. Pardon me, right there. He says the House has control over the Committee of the Whole. Yes, it has; and the House always has control over itself, whether it be acting as a committee or a House. [Applause.] How can you escape that conclusion?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. There is no escape from it.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. Mr. Speaker, the confusion of this question seems to arise in the construction of the sixth section of Rule XXIII, which rule applies to the work of this House in the Committee of the Whole. Now, that section says that the House may by a vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph or at its election upon the pending amendments only. That is one provision of the rule, and the object of that provision is very evident. In the Committee of the Whole we have no right to call the previous question, and therefore there must be some means for disposing of a question in debate. This question now being considered in Committee of the Whole as in the House leaves the consideration of the bill not only subject to the power of the House to close debate, but leaves it also under the operation of that other provision of the rule which follows:

But this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

How are you to reach the question of closing debate? Rule XVII in the first paragraph is as follows:

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection.

That is simply a declaration of the power of the previous question under the parliamentary law of the country as we understand it in our practice. The effect of that, if simply a motion for the previous question is made, is in effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote on the question pending, but the next paragraph declares what are the limits of the rule on that power or motion for the previous question:

The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection.

Now, I submit there is an opportunity for the Chair to construe that rule which would give the House in the consideration of the present bill the benefit of cutting off all debate on the pending section by treating it as a paragraph and still reserving the right to the House under the operation of the other paragraph so as not to preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

The SPEAKER. That would be a ruling directly in opposition to the rule which the gentleman has read cutting off debate and bringing the House to a direct vote on the question or questions under consideration, which of course cuts off all amendment.

Mr. HOBLITZELL. As we are considering this proposition in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, the whole of Rule XXVI is in operation, and I submit there is a provision in Rule XVII whereby it is within the power of a majority under a call for the previous question to cut off these additional amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

It also announced approval of joint resolution (H. Res. 300) to pay to the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1884, on the 20th day of said month.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The House resumed the consideration of the interstate commerce bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the whole question is just this: Has the House the same power when considering a bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole that it has when it is considering a bill in the Committee of the Whole, or has it not the same power? If it has the same power then it may limit debate by ordering the previous question, or directly, as in the case of the Committee of the Whole. The question is, has it the same power or has it not? It seems to me under the rule it has, and we can not claim the House has less power over the question when considering it in the House than it has when considering it in the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt the House ought to have the power, but the Chair can not determine that it actually possesses it in view of the rules it has adopted and the peculiar circumstances under which the bill is being considered. The rules of the House do not contemplate or recognize such a proceeding as the consideration of a measure "in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union." Such a proceeding is not provided for at all.

Mr. WILSON. Let the House decide the question.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair proposes to do, and the Chair hopes that order will be observed upon the floor. The Chair desires to get the judgment of the House, because in the absence of precedents and rules applicable to this proceeding he thinks when so important a matter is to be settled it ought to be settled by the judgment of the House itself. If it is a matter upon which there is no rule, and it is now proposed to institute a new rule or establish a precedent, it is more appropriate for the House to do it than for the Chair to undertake to do it.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the position before the House, Mr. Speaker, to be just this, and if I am wrong I wish to be corrected: The gentleman from Texas withdrew his appeal from the decision of the Chair on his demand for the previous question. Subsequently he submitted a motion to limit debate to five minutes on the entire section, and that was held to be out of order, and from that decision the gentleman from Alabama proposes to take an appeal to the House. If that is the status of the proposition I wish to be heard for one minute on it.

As I understand the proposition now it is on the appeal of the gentleman from Alabama from the decision of the Chair on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to limit debate on the first section of the bill.

Mr. DUNN. And all amendments.

Mr. KEIFER. And all amendments, if he chooses to put it that way. Now, that, it seems to me, ought to take no time, because, if we were possessed of the power that is given to the House when a measure is being considered in Committee of the Whole, there never was a time when such a motion could be entertained, a bill or measure being in the same situation that this is now in. Even if you choose to reason out for some purpose of convenience or by simulation to see whether the House may not do with this bill something it can not do with a bill when actually in Committee of the Whole, you can find no case where such a motion would be in order under the rule.

It is only when there is something pending that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may rise and go into the House and limit debate upon that particular amendment to a particular paragraph or to a section. There is now nothing pending, and there never was an occasion when the House undertook to say in advance of a pending proposition that debate should be limited, unless there was a proposition pending at the time, one at least on which the House was called to vote. And it is fair to say, in support of the ruling which has just been made, that this section, as I am informed by some gentleman near me, was not read entirely through. I do not know about that. I am not sure of the accuracy of the statement, but that seems to be the impression here. If, however, it be true, the gentleman undertakes to limit debate upon a part of the bill that was never read.

Mr. REAGAN. I will say to the gentleman that it was read from beginning to end.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not contended otherwise. I merely made the statement that was whispered around me.

Mr. SPRINGER. I know that it was read.

Mr. KEIFER. But whether it was read or not is quite an immaterial matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, by looking at the sixth paragraph of Rule XXIII it will be found that there is no case where a motion to limit debate can be made unless there is a pending amendment upon which debate has first begun. There is no amendment pending here. Then it is sufficient to say that it is clearly out of order, upon every hypothesis in the world, to undertake to move the previous question in the present status of the bill on this section.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Suppose an amendment were pending, does the gentleman admit then that the motion to limit debate would be in order?

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir; but it is not worth while to multiply hypothetical questions or to make supposititious cases when we are dealing with an appeal from the decision of the Chair as to whether or not a certain motion is in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. My purpose was merely to get at the gentleman's understanding of the question.

Mr. KEIFER. My understanding is that debate can only be limited by the House by the interposition of the previous question, and that can only be in order when there is something before the House upon which the previous question is invoked and upon which it can operate.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to place myself in the position of taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair in a matter of this kind, especially when I understand the Chair to intimate, as it did a moment ago, that it is a question proper to be submitted to the House. I therefore withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair and request that the Chair will submit to the House for its judgment the question which I send to the desk in writing.

The SPEAKER. Is it a question of order?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir; it is a question on which, as I understand, the Chair desires the judgment of the House, and I ask that it be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The paper will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Is it in order when a bill is under consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule to move to limit debate upon a pending section, and on that motion demand the previous question, such order to have the same effect as if the bill were in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. REED. I make the point of order that that is not admissible.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moved to limit debate, and the Chair decided the question against the right of the gentleman to make that motion, whereupon the appeal was taken. The gentleman then withdrew the appeal, and asked the Chair to submit the question of order to the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that it is a mere abstraction, and can not amount to anything.

The SPEAKER. It involves at least one practical question, and one that is now before the House. The gentleman had a motion pending to limit debate. He now asks the Chair to submit this question of order growing out of that motion to the House.

Mr. REED. But if the gentleman from Alabama submits a motion to close debate, then I make the point of order that the gentleman from Michigan has the floor, and that the gentleman from Alabama can not make such a motion while the gentleman from Michigan has the floor, to propose an amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not understand that he has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Michigan in the first instance; and if the Chair had been satisfied that he could put the demand for the previous question to the House, he would have ruled that it included the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan. After the Chair had recognized the gentleman to submit an amendment the gentleman from Texas was also recognized, the Chair supposing that his motion related to some question of order. The Chair therefore thinks the gentleman from Michigan should be allowed to offer his amendment, no matter what may be the decision of the House upon the questions of order that have been presented.

Mr. REED. Now I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan can send up his amendment, after which the Chair will entertain the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from Michigan desires to keep the floor.

Mr. HORR. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the floor for five minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Michigan having offered his amendment, can he be taken off his feet?

The SPEAKER. There is no purpose that the Chair knows of to take the gentleman off his feet.

Mr. HORR. I wish that amendment to come in directly at the end of the amendment adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE], the one last voted on.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That such separation shall not be made on the basis of race or color.

Mr. GIBSON. I raise the point of order that that is the substance of other propositions which have been passed upon in this discussion.

Mr. KEIFER. It applies to a different proposition.

The SPEAKER. It is not an objection to an amendment that it is substantially the same as something that is already in the bill. It might be an objection to an amendment that it was inconsistent with something already incorporated in the bill by a vote of the House, but the Chair thinks the amendment is in order, as the House might put substantially the same proposition in the bill a dozen times if it thought proper to do so.

Mr. GIBSON. But, as I understand, the House has amended a precisely similar proposition by declaring it shall not be a discrimination to provide separate cars for white persons and black persons; and that was adopted as an amendment to a provision almost identical with the one now offered.

The SPEAKER. But, as the Chair has stated, the House might put the same provision a dozen times in the bill if it desired to do so. That is a matter for the House to determine, not for the Chair.

Mr. HORR. I offer this amendment for the purpose of putting the bill in such shape that there may be no mistake about it; but more especially for the purpose of enabling my Democratic friends upon the other side of the House to relieve themselves from all future embarrassment upon this subject. During the recent campaign that party took the position in its periodicals and speeches that it was pre-eminently the party which sought to benefit and elevate the colored people of the country. They even went so far as to placard our country with pictures of a large negro being led upward toward the sky by the leading candidate of their party; and they had a person pointing upward as the two men made their advance in the direction of the heavens.

Now to my astonishment, in the very first legislation where the Democrats of this House have a chance to emphasize their new position in reference to the colored race they have jumped the track. [Laughter.] I do not wonder at it, because it is novel legislation to you gentlemen. You do not take to it kindly simply because you are not used to it. [Laughter.]

I have been working, Mr. Speaker, for thirty years in good faith earnestly to benefit all the people of the United States, and especially those that were downtrodden and oppressed. And when I found that the entire Democratic party had changed front and was to join me in this great work my heart was filled with joy. [Laughter.] And now think of my disappointment when sitting here to see that the very first opportunity they have had to do anything which will wipe out this race distinction and tend to give every man an even chance with his head and his hands to work for himself, instead of adopting such measures with cheerful countenances they sit here and look like men that are going to a funeral. [Laughter.] Why this despondency? Why this feeling that takes possession of you gentlemen in reference to this great question upon which you claim to have taken such advanced ground? You are certainly the best friends of these people, are you not? You all meant what you said, did you not?

I offer this amendment so that you can have an opportunity to show to the country that each and every one of you really did mean what you said; and I take it for granted you will all eagerly vote for the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service, agreed to the conference asked for by the House, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. LOGAN, and Mr. BECK conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4085) for the relief of Juliet H. Palmer.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 1661) for the relief of George C. Tanner, United States consul at Liege, Belgium;

A bill (S. 1793) to amend section 4434 of title 52 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning commerce and navigation and the regulation of steam-vessels; and

A bill (S. 2422) for the erection of a statue to the memory of General La Fayette.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The House resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and to regulate such commerce.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] having sent up his amendment, which is now pending, I rise to ask the Chair to submit to the House for its judgment the question sent up a few moments ago by myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Alabama to make a motion to close debate on the section.

Mr. HERBERT. I make that motion—to close debate on the pending amendment and the section.

The SPEAKER. Against that the gentleman from Ohio makes a question of order.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will that cut off any further amendments?

Mr. KEIFER. Let us understand what is the question presented.

The SPEAKER. This is not an abstract question, because the gentleman from Alabama makes a motion which presents a question of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the proposition be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HORR. Read the whole amendment with that addition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks to have the question read as now presented to the House—not the amendment; this is another question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HERBERT having moved to close debate on the pending section and amendment, submitted the following as a question of order: Is it in order when a bill is under consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule to move to limit debate on a pending section, and on that motion demand the previous question, such order to have the same effect as if the bill were in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, this is in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry addressed to the Chair. The Chair can undoubtedly entertain this question, if he desires to do so, under the practice which has grown up for years in the history of this House. As a matter of information, both to the person propounding the question and to the House, the Chair may answer such questions. But this is not a question which can go to the House on an appeal; it can not be submitted to the House for decision, because it is a mere inquiry; it binds nobody; it is a mere matter of information. The House can not be called to vote upon any questions except such as come before it in practical legislation.

This question, Mr. Speaker, is not in order now, because it does not apply to the present status of the bill and amendments before the House. Moreover, it is an inquiry about a proposition which has been passed upon and disposed of by the ruling of the Chair. The gentleman took an appeal, which he subsequently withdrew. We must deal with this question as we have it. If the gentleman will submit a motion applying to the pending amendment and to the section, and then the question comes up, it may be that he will reach his purpose. But I submit it is not in order to put an abstract question, and ask the Chair to pass upon it, or submit it to the House, or allow an appeal. It is an abstract question unless it applies to a real measure pending before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] was on the floor a few moments ago he claimed there was nothing pending at all, and that therefore this motion could not be allowed even under the rule in Committee of the Whole. Now he claims that the Chair has already ruled upon this question embraced in the proposition of my friend from Alabama.

Mr. KEIFER. Is there a pending question?

Mr. BLOUNT. There is—the proposition made by the gentleman from Alabama to limit debate on this section.

Mr. KEIFER. Made when?

Mr. BLOUNT. Made just before submitting his question to the Chair. Therefore this becomes a practical question, and the Chair may submit it to the House. The present incumbent of the chair, and previous Speakers, including the gentleman from Ohio, have submitted questions of this sort to the House; and if the Chair is in doubt (and the Chair has intimated already that the question is not free from doubt) I trust the House may be allowed to vote upon this question. It seems to me an important question; and I concur very earnestly with the gentleman from Alabama in the view that he has taken upon it. The rule as embraced in paragraph 6 of Rule XXIII is in the following language:

The House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

Now, it is clearly a very important part of the power of the House, when a bill is being considered in Committee of the Whole, to limit debate; and the proposition now is that this House shall do just that thing. We need not refer to any other rule. It seems to me the mind of the House must be brought to this conclusion—that the proceeding in the House now must be what it is in Committee of the Whole; and when you come to ascertain what may be done in Committee of the Whole in the consideration of bills, one of our powers is to close debate. That is what we are asked to do now, and I trust the Chair will submit this proposition to the House and allow us to pass upon it, especially in view of the doubt already expressed by the Chair.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to ascertain whether, since the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, a motion has been made to limit debate.

Mr. HERBERT. It has.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I submit my point of order. The proposition as sent up by the gentleman from Alabama is, I think, clearly out of order.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I do not think this House, on account of a difficulty of a temporary nature in which it finds itself, ought to permit itself to violate the rules of parliamentary law in order to accomplish a temporary purpose. The presumption of parliamentary law is not in favor of closing debate. On the contrary, the presumption is in favor of unlimited debate, and debate can not be closed unless there is some positive rule of the House giving the majority that control over the right of the individual member which enables the House to shut his mouth. That is the rule of parliamentary law. Now the Speaker has ruled and is sustained by logic that can not be refuted that there is no rule of the House which enables us to limit debate except the rule for the previous question, and the rule for the previous question is not applicable to the present situation. Under those circumstances and after that ruling the gentleman from Alabama proposes the House without any rule shall limit debate and cut off the right of the individual member—a right which belongs to him as a member of this House to continue debate fully as he shall see fit.

In addition to that the gentleman from Alabama asks this House to perpetrate the further anomaly that while that is pending he shall make a parliamentary inquiry of the House. What is that going to lead to? Every time the gentleman proposes a measure of doubtful propriety he can shift it from the Speaker, who is responsible in the eyes of the country, to the House, and experience shows that responsibility being largely shared is not very heavy on the individual member.

Now I admit the desirability, as a matter of relief for the Speaker, the House should pass upon this matter; but this can not be the way to do it. If the Speaker chooses to submit a question and has a right to do it under the rules, then the House should act on it. But here are two propositions pending at one time. The first is the proposition to close debate, and the second is that the House shall answer a parliamentary inquiry. It seems to me under parliamentary law that situation of things is utterly anomalous, utterly unparliamentary, utterly unprecedented.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Maine assumes this point of order as submitted to the House is anomalous. Now it is the duty of the Chair when a question of order is raised to decide that question, or in his discretion to submit it to the House. The request of the gentleman from Alabama is that the Speaker shall submit the point of order to the House. It is clearly addressed to his discretion. The Chair may submit it to the House or he may decide the point of order himself. The proposition of the gentleman from Alabama does not propose to deprive the Speaker of his right to decide the point of order if he chooses so to do, but in view of the complicated character of the question the Speaker is requested to submit the question to the House. Such submission has frequently taken place in the House.

Mr. REED. I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman except for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion such as we want to get at, and that is what is just, proper, and fair in this matter. I submit that if the gentleman from Alabama has not made a suggestion to the Speaker, he should submit the question whether the motion is in order to the House, but that he shall submit a certain written statement of it to the House, and that can not possibly be pending while the point of order is pending against this motion. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to that.

Mr. SPRINGER. While it might be an abstraction in other cases, in this case it is the very one which is desired to be submitted to the House; and that is what should be the rule of the House on this question, and what should be the decision of the Speaker. We are now acting in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute debate. What is the five-minute debate? The rule on that subject has been read by the gentleman from Georgia. That is the rule in the Committee of the Whole, and when we are acting in the House as in Committee of the Whole I understand we are under the rules of the committee which have been taken into the House. That is, Mr. Speaker, that when we are transacting business in the House as in Committee of the Whole we are transacting that business under the rules of the Committee of the Whole which are applicable to it. If the rules of the committee are not applicable to the House, and the House rules are not applicable to the House as in committee, then we have no rules and we have fallen between the committee and the House.

But, sir, I submit it is not true that there are no rules to govern us, and that we must be under one set of rules—either the rules of the Committee of the Whole or the rules of the House. The rules of the committee are not applicable to such questions if we are in the House, as in the House we have the right under the rules of the House to move the previous question, closing debate, and on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The great difficulty in the mind of the Chair arises from the fact that heretofore the House has not been governed entirely by the rules which prevail in the Committee of the Whole, nor entirely by the rules which prevail in the House, but partly by one and partly by the other. For instance, it is not in order in Committee of the Whole to move to lay on the table, or to demand the previous question, or to call for the yeas and nays, or to postpone, or to reconsider, while those motions are all in order in the House when it is considering a bill as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. And, again, general debate can be closed in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, not by the previous question, but by a mere motion and order of the House, while in the House itself this can be done only by ordering the previous question. In the House the rule allows each member to speak for one hour, while in the committee, after general debate has been closed, each speech is limited to five minutes. The consideration of a bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is an anomalous proceeding, not provided for by the rules, and the Chair therefore has nothing to guide him except the practice and precedent, and the question now presented appears never to have arisen before.

The difficulty in the mind of the Chair arises mainly from the fact that there is no settled practice on the part of the House which authorizes him to take either the one or the other set of rules as an entirety, or which prescribes what particular part of each set of rules he shall enforce.

Mr. SPRINGER. We are considering this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Now, I concede that the rules of the House are all in force, only we have a further order, that it is to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. In Committee of the Whole we are entitled to close debate upon a paragraph or upon a pending section, in order that the business of the House may be facilitated.

The gentleman from Maine says the object of the rules is to allow unlimited debate. That, Mr. Speaker, I deny.

Mr. REED. I did not say that, but that the principles of parliamentary law are in favor of unlimited debate; and that it is a repeal of parliamentary law, and a sacrifice of every member's individual right, to have this provision of the rule relating to the previous question. I said that it was a rule in derogation of the common right of every member of this House in that respect.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the previous question has been always enforced in this country in legislative bodies.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; not in all.

Mr. SPRINGER. It never has been denied in any legislative body in the United States.

Mr. REED. The gentleman is mistaken in that. It is enacted only by virtue of the consent of the legislative body.

Mr. SPRINGER. It cuts off by the will of the majority at any time all debate and brings the body to a direct vote upon the amendment or proposition pending; and I have seen it resorted to many times to my own inconvenience and discomfiture.

Mr. REED. How many times have you seen it enforced in the Senate?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Senate has not the previous question. I spoke of legislative practice generally, in which it is of almost universal application. It is absolutely essential to the transaction of business in large bodies.

Mr. REED. That is where it has been adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. In the House of Representatives we have this provision for the previous question, which gives the right to a majority of the members to close debate at any time by the will of the majority expressed in the manner provided by the rules. In large bodies of this kind, in the absence of the power to limit debate, there would never be a time when the conclusion of a bill could be reached, because if all the members present chose to address themselves to its provisions they would have a perfect right to do so, and there would be no limit to the discussion. If, therefore, the opinion that prevails, as expressed by gentlemen upon the other side, be a correct one, we could never reach the conclusion of any measure of legislation; and that case has never been better illustrated than during the consideration of the first paragraph of this bill. Gentlemen upon the other side have been offering amendments ad libitum, and apparently there will never come a time when the bill can be completed. They desire to talk it to death, and amend it until it has no significance whatever.

This House has shown by the vote recently taken, and by several votes upon this bill, an emphatic desire that it should become a law. I understand from the votes that have heretofore been taken upon it that it is the will of the majority of the House to enact it into a law. It is, however, claimed that the mere fact of considering it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole has surrendered the right of the majority who favor the bill to close debate upon it; that the right to offer amendments is unrestricted, and that there is under the rules no way to bring the House to a direct vote upon the proposition which is the passage of the bill. Now we can not accomplish this in any other way except by entertaining the point of order of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I shall not weary the House or detain it but a very few moments longer with this discussion.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] uttered one sentiment in which I heartily concur. He said that no party ought, in finding itself in a dilemma, to adopt any rule in violation of the rules. I repeat, I most heartily concur in that sentiment. But the gentleman from Maine is the last person upon this floor to utter that sentiment. We all recollect that in the last Congress he was the author of a rule, which took the name of the "Reed rule," that extricated his party from the dilemma in which it had placed itself on the tariff bill—a rule that nobody ever dared to attempt to justify on principle, not even the gentleman from Maine himself.

But this is not a parallel case to the "dilemma" suggested by the gentleman from Maine. What we contend for here is that we have the power to pass this bill according to the rules. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that in that book of rules there is a mode pointed out, by which in just such cases as this debate can be limited, if we are proceeding in the ordinary way as in Committee of the Whole. In Committee of the Whole the committee can rise at any time, go into the House, and limit debate, and under the order of the House as made to that effect can again resolve itself into the committee and proceed with the consideration of the measure before it without further discussion. If, then, the power exists in the House and in the committee acting together to cut off debate, why is it that the same power does not exist when this body as a House, having all the powers of the House and all the powers of the Committee of the Whole combined, is acting upon it?

This body has all the powers that the Committee of the Whole has, with the additional powers that the House itself retains when acting as a House.

The argument of the gentleman from Maine is that because we are acting in committee we have lost our power as a House, but because we have still got the power of the House we have no power as a committee. An absolute reductio ad absurdum.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, a word only in reply to the gentleman from Alabama, and I do not make the reply because his allusion was personal to me, but simply because it enforces my argument already made. The gentleman says truly that I was one of those who assisted—he gives me an undue prominence—that I was one of those who assisted to change the rules of this House in order to facilitate the passage of the tariff act. He could also have added that I was one of those who assisted to change the rules of the House for the purpose of carrying through the election cases, and of both of those achievements I permit myself to be proud.

Now I want to say to him that the analogy would have been perfect and his reproach would have been deserved if instead of proposing to change the rules of the House regularly and properly I had got up here and urged my side to violate the rules of the House as established by a decision of the Speaker, from which the gentleman has seen fit to withdraw his appeal, and to call upon them to establish by construction a new rule for this House which does not exist at present. I say to the gentleman that I should be in perfect sympathy with him as to the establishment of such a new rule. In point of fact I agreed with him that the House might have that right until I heard the decision of the Speaker, the logic of which satisfied my mind that it was a case which had not been provided for. In point of fact the House sitting as Committee of the Whole is a matter which is not contemplated by our rules at all; and it has led to such results that it is very desirable that there should be a rule of the House enabling the House to limit debate.

But I want again to say to this House that the natural right of every member is to discuss all questions, and that only under the rule power of the House can any man's right to discuss questions be limited. We are here to discuss questions, and the limitations of discussion must be by positive rules of the House—not by arguments about temporary inconveniences, but by arguments with regard to inconveniences which cover not only this bill but all bills in like case.

I therefore urge upon the House not to regard this thing as a partisan matter or as a matter connected with railroads, but as a purely parliamentary question, and that we shall not allow ourselves to be betrayed into making a decision which is justified neither by reason, logic, precedent, nor common sense.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not desire to continue the debate, but only to state the real status of the question. I understand that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT]—in the confusion I did not hear him distinctly—after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] was discussed, renewed a motion to limit debate on the pending amendment and section. Is that right?

The SPEAKER. The motion was to close debate on the pending amendment and the section.

Mr. KEIFER. To close debate on the pending amendment and the section. I made the point of order as soon as I ascertained that was the situation. At the same time the gentleman from Alabama submits an interrogatory to the Chair, with the request that that shall be submitted to the House, which is to have the effect of determining the point of order against his motion.

Now I think the orderly way, the proper way under all parliamentary usage, is for the Chair to pass upon the question as to whether the motion is in order, and then if the decision be against the gentleman, let the gentleman take his appeal and see whether the House is willing to sustain the Chair or not. It has been stated by some gentleman that it is in accordance with the custom of the present Speaker and of others who have preceded him to submit such interrogations to the House. I wish to say that in eight years I have never known any such case here. If there has been any I have not known it.

I have known the Speaker, and I recognize it as always his right, rather than to decide a question which appropriately comes up to submit it to the House; but not an abstract inquiry made before the real question comes up to be disposed of. The Chair can always take the judgment of the House rather than give his own decision. That is always a matter of discretion. But here is an interrogatory which the Chair is asked as a matter of practice to submit to the House, the decision of which is to govern the Chair and control it in determining the real question before the House. As suggested by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], it is only another mode of amending our rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] moves to close debate on the pending amendment and on the section of the bill under consideration. Against that motion the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] makes a point of order. The Chair would have no hesitation in deciding or giving his own opinion on this question of order, but, as has been already stated, it is a very important question. It is one on which the House has established no practice, as far as the Chair can ascertain, and any decision made by the Chair would, of course, be subject on appeal to the revision of the House. Under these circumstances the Chair feels it is peculiarly appropriate to submit the question in the first instance to the House itself; and the Chair does, therefore, submit the question to the House in accordance with the request of the gentleman from Alabama, and in accordance with his own judgment as to what is proper.

Mr. REED. The question submitted, then, is as to whether that motion is in order. It is not the question as written out by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if the House decides debate can be closed by a motion when it is considering a measure as in Committee of the Whole, the Chair thinks the consequences would follow such action as follow in cases where the House by its order closes debate in the committee.

Mr. REED. But does the Chair desire to establish the precedent of a member sending up a question in that form to be submitted to the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama does not submit the question to the House, and the Chair does not recognize the right of a member on the floor to submit a question of order to the House except by an appeal. The Chair submits this question to the House; that is, the question of order now pending.

Mr. REED. If the Chair submits merely the point of order, that is all right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to close debate on the pending amendment and the section of the bill under consideration; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] makes the point of order that this can not be done. The Chair now submits the question to the House, whether it is in order to make a motion to close debate on a pending amendment and on the section under consideration when the House is considering the bill as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LONG. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONG. In case that point should be decided in the affirmative——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would entertain further amendments.

Mr. LONG. In case that question should be decided in the affirmative, will further amendments to the section, to be determined without debate, be cut off?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just said that he would entertain further amendments, but without debate; in other words, he would give this motion precisely the same effect which it would have if made and carried when the bill was actually under consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not wish to dispute the discretion of the Chair to submit this proposition, but I want to understand the form of the motion—whether it is that the point of order shall be sustained. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] If gentlemen propose to make a decision by the House overruling the Chair, I want to understand how they propose to do it.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama is in order and shall be entertained and put to the House. [After putting the question.] The Chair is unable, by the viva voce vote, to determine the result.

Mr. HORR and Mr. KEIFER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

A MEMBER. Let the motion be read.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing to be read. The Chair will again state the question. The gentleman from Alabama moves to close debate upon the pending amendment and the section under consideration. The gentleman from Ohio makes a point of order against that motion; and the question which the Chair submits to the House is whether the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama is in order. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 150, nays 88, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—150.

Aiken,	Dibrell,	Lovering,	Stevens,
Alexander,	Dunn,	Lowry,	Stewart, Charles
Anderson,	Eaton,	Lyman,	Stockslager,
Atkinson,	Elliott,	McMillin,	Stone,
Barksdale,	English,	Matson,	Storm,
Beach,	Ermentrout,	Miller, J. F.	Struble,
Bennett,	Findlay,	Mills,	Talbott,
Blackburn,	Follett,	Mitchell,	Taylor, J. M.
Blanchard,	Foran,	Morrison,	Thompson,
Blount,	Forney,	Moulton,	Throckmorton,
Boyle,	Fyan,	Murphy,	Tillman,
Bratton,	Geddes,	Murray,	Townshend,
Breckinridge,	Gibson,	Neece,	Tucker,
Buchanan,	Glascock,	Nelson,	Tully,
Buckner,	Green,	Nicholls,	Turner, H. G.
Burnes,	Greenleaf,	Oates,	Turner, Oscar
Cabell,	Halsell,	O'Ferrall,	Van Alstyne,
Caldwell,	Hammond,	O'Neill, J. J.	Van Eaton,
Campbell, Felix	Hardy,	Patton,	Wallace,
Campbell, J. E.	Henley,	Peel,	Ward,
Candler,	Herbert,	Pierce,	Warner, A. J.
Carleton,	Hewitt, A. S.	Post,	Warner, Richard
Clardy,	Hill,	Price,	Weaver,
Clay,	Holman,	Pryor,	Wellborn,
Clements,	Hunt,	Pusey,	Wemple,
Cobb,	Jeffords,	Reagan,	Wilkins,
Collins,	Jones, B. W.	Reese,	Williams,
Cook,	Jones, J. H.	Riggs,	Willis,
Covington,	Jones, J. K.	Robertson,	Wilson, James
Cox, S. S.	Jordan,	Rogers, J. H.	Wilson, W. L.
Cox, W. R.	Kleiner,	Rogers, W. F.	Winans, E. B.
Crisp,	Lamb,	Seney,	Winans, John
Curtin,	Lanham,	Shelley,	Wolford,
Dargan,	Lawrence,	Shively,	Wood,
Davidson,	Le Fevre,	Singleton,	Worthington,
Davis, L. H.	Lewis,	Snyder,	Yaple.
Deuster,	Long,	Spriggs,
Dibble,	Lore,	Springer,

NAYS—88.

Adams, G. E.	Burleigh,	Funston,	Holmes,
Barr,	Campbell, J. M.	George,	Horr,
Bingham,	Cannon,	Goff,	Houk,
Bisbee,	Chace,	Guenther,	Howey,
Boutelle,	Chalmers,	Hanback,	Johnson,
Brainerd,	Culbertson, W. W.	Harmer,	Kean,
Breitung,	Cullen,	Hart,	Keifer,
Brewer, F. B.	Cutcheon,	Haynes,	Kellogg,
Brewer, J. H.	Davis, G. R.	Henderson, D. B.	Lacey,
Brown, W. W.	Davis, R. T.	Henderson, T. J.	Laird,
Browne, T. M.	Evans,	Hepburn,	Libbey,
Brumm,	Everhart,	Hiscock,	McComas,
Budd,	Ferrell,	Hitt,	Morrill.

O'Hara,	Poland,	Rowell,	Stewart, J. W.
O'Neill, Charles	Potter,	Russell,	Strait,
Parker,	Ranney,	Ryan,	Taylor, E. B.
Payne,	Ray, G. W.	Skinner, C. R.	Taylor, J. D.
Payson,	Ray, Ossian	Smalls,	Thomas,
Perkins,	Reed,	Smith, A. H.	Wadsworth,
Peters,	Rice,	Smith, H. Y.	Wait,
Pettibone.	Robinson, J. S.	Spooner,	Wakefield,
Phelps,	Rockwell,	Stephenson,	White, Milo.

NOT VOTING—85.

Adams, J. J.	Ellis,	Ketcham,	Scales,
Arnot,	Ellwood,	King,	Seymour,
Bagley,	Fiedler,	McAdoo,	Shaw,
Ballentine,	Finerty,	McCoid,	Skinner, T. G.
Barbour,	Garrison,	McCormick,	Slocum,
Bayne,	Graves,	Maybury,	Steele,
Belford,	Hancock,	Millard,	Sumner, C. A.
Belmont,	Hardeman,	Miller, S. H.	Sumner, D. H.
Bland,	Hatch, H. H.	Milliken,	Valentine,
Bowen,	Hatch, W. H.	Money,	Vance,
Broadhead,	Hemphill,	Morgan,	Washburn,
Cassidy,	Hewitt, G. W.	Morse,	Weller,
Connolly,	Hoblitzell,	Muldrow,	White, J. D.
Converse,	Holton,	Muller,	Whiting,
Cosgrove,	Hooper,	Mutchler,	Wise, G. D.
Culberson, D. B.	Hopkins,	Nutting,	Wise, J. S.
Dingley,	Houseman,	Ochiltree,	Woodward,
Dockery,	Hurd,	Paige,	York,
Dorsheimer,	Hutchins,	Randall.	Young.
Dowd,	James,	Rankin,
Dunham,	Jones, J. T.	Robinson, W. E.
Eldredge,	Kelley,	Rosecrans,

So the House decided that the motion made by Mr. HERBERT was in order.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. MILLARD with Mr. MULDROW, on all political questions, for this day.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, with Mr. HATCH, of Michigan, until further notice, on the pending bill, except the question of its final passage.

The following were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. DOWD with Mr. JAMES.

Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. MILLIKEN.

The following were announced as paired on all questions for the remainder of this day:

Mr. FUNSTON with Mr. BURNES.

Mr. WOODWARD with Mr. ELLIS.

The following were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. VANCE with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. SCALES with Mr. WASHBURN.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. FINERTY.

Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, with Mr. MCCORMICK.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] to close debate on the pending amendment and the section under consideration.

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR], which will be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HORR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 114, nays 121, not voting 89; as follows:

YEAS—114.

Adams, G. E.	Everhart,	Long,	Ryan,
Adams, J. J.	George,	McComas,	Seney,
Anderson,	Goff,	Milliken,	Seymour,
Atkinson,	Guenther,	Morrill,	Shively,
Bagley,	Hanback,	Morse,	Smalls,
Barr,	Harmer,	Murray,	Smith, A. H.
Beach,	Haynes,	Nelson,	Smith, H. Y.
Bingham,	Henderson, D. B.	Nutting,	Spooner,
Bisbee,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Hara,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Hepburn,	O'Neill, Charles	Stevens,
Brainerd,	Hiscock,	Parker,	Stewart, J. W.
Breitung,	Hitt,	Payne,	Stone,
Brewer, F. B.	Holmes,	Payson,	Strait,
Brown, W. W.	Horr,	Perkins,	Struble,
Browne, T. M.	Houk,	Peters,	Taylor, J. D.
Brumm,	Houseman,	Pettibone,	Thomas,
Burleigh,	Howey,	Phelps,	Van Alstyne,
Campbell, Felix	Jeffords,	Poland,	Wadsworth,
Campbell, J. M.	Johnson,	Post,	Wait,
Cannon,	Jordan,	Potter,	Wakefield,
Chace,	Kean,	Price,	Ward,
Culbertson, W. W.	Keifer,	Ranney,	Weaver,
Cullen,	Kellogg,	Ray, Ossian	White, J. D.
Cutcheon,	Ketcham,	Reed,	White, Milo
Davis, G. R.	Lacey,	Rice,	Wilson, James
Davis, R. T.	Laird,	Robinson, J. S.	Wood,
Dingley,	Lamb,	Rockwell,	Yaple.
English,	Lawrence,	Rowell,
Evans,	Libbey,	Russell,

NAYS—121.

Aiken,	Bratton,	Campbell, J. E.	Clements,
Alexander,	Breckinridge,	Candler,	Cobb,
Barksdale,	Broadhead,	Carleton,	Cook,
Bennett,	Buchanan,	Carlisle,	Cosgrove,
Blackburn,	Buckner,	Cassidy,	Covington,
Blanchard,	Cabell,	Clardy,	Cox, S. S.
Blount,	Caldwell,	Clay,	Cox, W. R.
Crisp,	Herbert,	Nicholls,	Thompson,
Culberson, D. B.	Hewitt, A. S.	Oates,	Throckmorton,
Curtin,	Hill,	O'Ferrall,	Tillman,
Dargan,	Hoblitzell,	Patton,	Townshend,
Davidson.	Holman,	Pierce,	Tucker,
Davis, L. H.	Hurd,	Peel,	Tully,
Deuster,	Jones, J. H.	Pryor,	Turner, H. G.
Dibrell,	Jones, J. K.	Randall,	Turner, Oscar
Dunn,	Kleiner,	Reagan,	Van Eaton,
Eaton,	Lanham,	Reese,	Wallace,
Ermentrout,	Le Fevre,	Riggs,	Warner, A. J.
Ferrell,	Lewis,	Robertson,	Warner, Richard
Forney,	Lowry,	Rogers, J. H.	Wellborn,
Fyan,	Lyman,	Rogers, W. F.	Wemple,
Geddes,	McAdoo,	Shelley,	Wilkins,
Gibson,	McMillin,	Singleton,	Williams,
Glascock,	Matson,	Snyder,	Willis,
Green,	Miller, J. F.	Springer,	Wilson, W. L.
Greenleaf,	Mills,	Stewart, Charles	Winans, John
Halsell,	Money,	Stockslager,	Wise, G. D.
Hancock,	Morrison,	Storm,	Wolford.
Hardeman,	Moulton,	Sumner, C. A.
Hemphill,	Mutchler,	Talbott,
Henley,	Neece,	Taylor, J. M.

NOT VOTING—89.

Arnot,	Ellis,	Jones, J. T.	Scales,
Ballentine,	Ellwood,	Kelley,	Shaw,
Barbour,	Fiedler,	King,	Skinner, C. R.
Bayne,	Findlay,	Lore,	Skinner, T. G.
Beach,	Finerty,	Lovering,	Slocum,
Belmont,	Follett,	McCoid,	Spriggs,
Bland,	Foran,	McCormick,	Steele,
Bowen,	Funston,	Maybury,	Sumner, D. H.
Boyle,	Garrison,	Millard,	Taylor, E. B.
Brewer, J. H.	Graves,	Miller, S. H.	Valentine,
Budd,	Hammond,	Mitchell,	Vance,
Burnes,	Hardy,	Morgan,	Washburn,
Chalmers,	Hart,	Muldrow,	Weller,
Collins,	Hatch, H. H.	Muller,	Whiting,
Connolly,	Hatch, W. H.	Murphy,	Winans, E. B.
Converse,	Hewitt, G. W.	Ochiltree.	Wise, J. S.
Dibble,	Holton,	O'Neill, J. J.	Woodward,
Dockery,	Hooper,	Paige,	Worthington,
Dorsheimer,	Hopkins,	Pusey,	York,
Dowd,	Hunt,	Rankin,	Young.
Dunham,	Hutchins,	Ray, G. W.
Eldredge,	James,	Robinson, W. E.
Elliott,	Jones, B. W.	Rosecrans,

So the amendment was rejected.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. DOWD with Mr. BOWEN, until further notice.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, on all political questions, for the balance of this day. On Mr. HORR's amendment Mr. HAMMOND would vote "no" and Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR "ay."

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That any railroad company or its officers, permitting the use of free passes or tickets at other than published reduced rates over its road or any of its branches by any person not a paid employé of said company, shall be required to furnish a similar free pass or ticket at same reduced rate between the same points or any intermediate points to any and all persons who shall apply for the same at any of the regular railroad ticket offices within ten days from the date that the aforesaid pass or ticket at reduced rate may be used.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. It is to prevent discrimination whether by long haul or short haul.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 40.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Count the other side.

The other side was counted; and there were—noes 146.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Tellers on the yeas and nays. [Cries of "No!"] If this is an honest bill it will not hurt it in this way to prevent discrimination.

Tellers were not ordered and the yeas and nays were not ordered—one-fifth not having voted in the affirmative.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BUDD. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the words "3 cents per mile for the distance to be traveled by said person" the following:

"On railroads of the first grade; nor more than 4 cents per mile upon railroads of the second grade; nor more than 5 cents per mile upon railroads of the third grade; nor more than 6 cents upon railroads of the fourth grade, all as herein classified and graded. And for the purposes hereof all railroads on which the net earnings on the entire road, including the amounts allowed for services rendered to the United States, after deducting all expenditures, including repairs, and the furnishing, running, and managing of said road, shall exceed 10 per cent. upon its cost shall be railroads of the first grade; and all railroads on which such net earnings, so as aforesaid calculated, shall exceed 8 per cent. but not 10 per cent., shall be of the second grade; and all railroads on which such net earnings, so as aforesaid calculated, shall exceed 5 per cent. but not 8 per cent., shall be of the third grade; and all other railroads shall be of the fourth grade.

Mr. BUDD. I ask that that be read in its proper connection; and, pending that, so the House may see the effect of the amendment, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BUDD demanded the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BUDD. I ask that it be read in its proper connection.
The SPEAKER. That can be done by unanimous consent.
Mr. BUDD. I ask unanimous consent.
Objection was made.
The amendment was rejected.
Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, moved the following amendment:

Insert in line 19, after the word "aforesaid:"
"Unavoidable accidents and detention excepted."

The amendment was disagreed to.
Mr. HENLEY moved the following amendment:

Amend by adding to the end of section 1 the following:
"Any person purchasing a ticket entitling such person to transportation from one State or Territory to another shall be entitled to such transportation at any time after purchasing such ticket within one year; that is to say, such ticket shall entitle the holder thereof for one year to unlimited 'stopover' privileges."

Mr. HENLEY. The object of that amendment is——
The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]
The amendment was rejected.
The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as aforesaid directly or indirectly to allow any rebate, drawback, or other advantage, in any form, upon shipments made or services rendered as aforesaid by him or them.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last word. Here we have a bill before this Congress reported by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] as a substitute for the bill of the committee. That substitute took the place of the original bill before the House by the action of the House. In that step, on the pledge of the gentleman from Texas that we should be allowed to amend this bill, we took his substitute as the basis on which to build up a bill. Now he comes into the House and not only interrupts every gentleman who has sought to speak upon this bill, but has spoken himself longer than any other member and more than any other five members on this floor, and yet when we are about to offer amendments and explain them he rises in the House and proposes to shut off all debate and all amendments.

A few moments ago I offered an amendment. Now, if the gentleman has studied this bill as thoroughly as he tells us he has, he must admit that if his bill is to guard against discriminations in regard to freight, and if it is to be entitled to respectable consideration or is to have any weight, the very gist of it is to be found in the amendment I have offered. For instance, let me ask the gentleman what is to prohibit a railroad company from giving to a shipper in free passes the difference between the amount that he pays and that charged to another shipper, and therefore discriminate between shippers when they should pay and apparently pay precisely the same rate of freight or the same amount of money between the same places? I ask what is to prevent them from discriminating by free passes? And that discrimination is not confined to shippers alone, but the judges of every State know what it is to have free passes. The members of the Legislatures of every State know what it is to have free passes. The members of Congress know what it is to be supplied with them.

Why, in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads Dr. Norvin Green testified that the gigantic monopoly of the Western Union Telegraph Company in giving check-books to favored persons was but following the example set by railroad companies, which were in the habit of giving free passes to members of Congress because members of Congress were not well paid.

It may be instructive to those interested in the question of free passes, as bearing on the subject of discrimination, about which so much has been said during the discussion of this bill, to give some extracts from the testimony of Dr. Norvin Green, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, before the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, April 8 and April 11, 1884. I quote from page 28 of the printed testimony, as follows:

Mr. WHITE. In view of the fact that a man in Florida has to pay $1 for a night message of ten words to his family in Iowa, can it be defended as a purely business proposition that telegraph franks are given to members of Congress? And I want to renew my question as to how many franks have been given to Members and Senators of the present Congress, to leading newspaper men, to judges on the bench, and to State and national officials; and if those franks are given, what do you expect to receive in return?
Mr. GREEN. I answered the latter branch of the question to the subcommittee of Senator BLAIR'S Committee on Education and Labor in this way: The telegraph company would be considered niggardly and narrow if it did not follow the example of other corporations in its courtesies to public men.
Mr. WHITE. You mean by that the giving of railroad passes, which my friend spoke of awhile ago.
Mr. GREEN. The railroad companies have conspicuously set the example. We issue a limited number for family and social messages. We realize that public men are poorly paid.

And again from page 29, as follows:

Mr. WHITE. Are there as many as fifty Members and Senators in the present Congress that have them?
Mr. GREEN. I do not think I ought to answer that question, because that paves the way to another, and the next question would be, "Who are they. Give their names."
Mr. WHITE. I think we ought to have it.
Mr. GREEN. Get your resolution of the House demanding it.
Mr. WARD. I move that it be considered as the sense of the committee that we would all like to have franks, but we do not like to ask for them. [Great laughter.]
Mr. WHITE. I hope that question will be put, and a yea and nay vote be taken on it. [Renewed laughter.]

And again from page 50 to 52:

Mr. WHITE. I will ask you now if it is not customary for the Western Union Telegraph Company to give stamps and passes to post-office officials?
Mr. GREEN. No more than any other officials.
Mr. WHITE. If I mistake not, it is also customary to give to almost any State or Federal officer that applies for them, stamps and passes. Is not that a fact?
Mr. GREEN. Well, I can not answer that question categorically. I will only say that we do give a great many to State and Federal officers, but to say that they prove of any benefit to us is a question I could not answer.
Mr. ROGERS. I do not suppose you give passes to policemen and constables?
Mr. GREEN. No, sir.
Mr. WHITE. I believe you have stated heretofore that you give passes to members of Congress that ask for them, in order to enable them to correspond by telegraph with their families?
Mr. GREEN. Yes.
Mr. WHITE. I will ask you whether that is a business proposition, and what is the consideration expected?
Mr. GREEN. There is no business proposition, and there is no consideration.
Mr. WHITE. Is it not as important that a man in Florida should correspond with his family in Iowa as a member of Congress in Washington or a judge on the bench or a member of the Legislature should correspond with his family?
Mr. GREEN. All public men, since I was a boy, have been the recipients of public courtesies by all public institutions everywhere. They are dined and wined, and are furnished the choicest rooms at hotels, taken on excursions by railroads, and furnished telegraph passes as a sort of public acknowledgment or indebtedness for their public services. Everybody knows that public men do not make any great amount of money.
Mr. WHITE. Would you put it on the same basis that Mr. Huntington did Mr. Gould's distribution of passes when competing with rivals in railroad matters?
Mr. GREEN. I will repeat what I said when that question was put before, that if we ever derived a particle of advantage by reason of members of Congress or members of Legislatures having our franks in their pockets, we never saw it. I do not believe we have ever derived a particle of benefit from the issuance of passes.
Mr. JONES. There is a saying that a man in trying to stand straight leans a little backward.
Mr. GREEN. Yes; I think that that sometimes applies to some.

I have been informed that the free-check-books business of the Western Union Telegraph Company amounts to one-seventh of the entire business of that gigantic monopoly.

Does not every one know that that is an unjust discrimination in favor of the rich, the influential, and the powerful for which the common people who use the telegraph wires in the pursuit of their daily avocations must in the end pay for?

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the free-check book amounts to so much in so simple a business as the telegraph business, to what extent as an agency for discrimination may not free passes be used in the more complex business of railroad transportation of passengers and freights. Sir, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] has told us over and over again that the essence of his bill is to prevent discrimination between shippers, and he has dwelt long and loud upon "rebates" and upon charging more "for a short than for a long haul." But he seems unable to perceive that free passes are the most objectionable form of discrimination, and may be substituted for rebates to destroy the efficacy of his bill, the very gist of which bill lies in my amendment—an amendment, as this House knows, which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] did not dare to rise in his place and vote for; but, on the contrary, under the whip and spur of his party he has helped to convert his bill, which was professedly one to prevent discrimination between shippers of freight, into a bill which directly authorizes railroad companies to discriminate between passengers "on account of race and color," and that, too, in violation of the pledges of your party before the country during the last campaign, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, contrary to justice, and contrary to the advanced public sentiment of the nineteenth century.

The bill as it now stands is a bill based upon prejudice and hate, characteristic of a party that is unworthy of the trust and confidence of the American people. Taken in connection with the following quotations from the national Democratic platform adopted in Chicago July 10, 1884, this bill is a fit commentary upon the hypocrisy, heartlessness, and fraudulent intent of the Democratic party:

Asserting the equality of all men before the law, we hold that it is the duty of the Government in its dealings with the people to mete out equal and exact justice to all citizens, of whatever nativity, race, color, or persuasion, religious or political.
We believe in a free ballot and a fair count, and we recall to the memory of the people the noble struggle of the Democrats in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth Congresses, by which a reluctant Republican opposition was compelled to assent to legislation making everywhere illegal the presence of troops at the polls, as the conclusive proof that a Democratic administration will preserve liberty with order.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to close debate on this amendment and on the section in five minutes.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to offer an amendment.
The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending. The gentleman from Texas moves to limit debate upon the pending amendment and section to five minutes.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the House will vote that down in pursuance of the agreement had in the Committee on Commerce.
The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I think under the agreement in committee and in the House we have the right to offer amendments under the five-minute rule, and I hope that agreement will not be broken.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask a vote on the pending motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 118, noyes 58.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand the motion of the gentleman from Texas covers the amendments that may be offered to the section?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to limit debate upon the amendment and the section.

Mr. HISCOCK. That would cover all amendments that may be offered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered—50 members voting in favor thereof.

Mr. WAIT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn, the Chair desires to lay before the House a message from the President of the United States and certain executive communications.

RANK OF COMMODORES IN THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the following resolution adopted by the House on the 10th instant—

"Resolved, That the President be requested to furnish this House, as early as convenient, with the necessary information showing the authority of law for which certain commodores of the Navy have been given the rank of acting rear-admirals when, as is alleged, no vacancy existed to justify such action"—

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, containing the information called for by the resolution.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 16, 1884.

CONSULAR REPORTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, containing reports of consuls of the United States in relation to the state of labor in Europe; which was referred to the Committee on Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting a list of persons employed and a statement of the expenditures and means adapted for the suppression of contagious and infectious diseases among domestic animals; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILLARD, indefinitely.

To Mr. DOCKERY, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. HOPKINS, for the remainder of this day and to-morrow.

To Mr. STEVENS, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. CHALMERS, indefinitely, on account of important business.

FEES AND CHARGES OF MARSHALS, ETC.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw the views of the minority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice upon the subject of fees and charges of United States marshals and other court officials, with authority to present them hereafter.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, and to Mr. BUDD to extend their remarks, made this day, in the RECORD.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen have intimated a desire to introduce bills for reference, and, if there be no objection, the Chair will recognize them now for that purpose.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

JOHN BUSH AND MARTIN GRIGSBY.

Mr. ROBERTSON introduced a bill (H. R. 7766) for the relief of John Bush and Martin Grigsby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID L. BRAINARD AND OTHERS.

Mr. LE FEVRE introduced a bill (H. R. 7767) for the relief of David L. Brainard and others, non-commissioned officers and privates of the Greely expedition; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANK OF BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

Mr. ROWELL introduced a bill (H. R. 7768) to authorize the National Bank of Bloomington, Ill., to change its name to "The First National Bank of Bloomington, Ill.;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. BEACH. I ask unanimous consent to present for reference and printing in the RECORD a memorial.

The SPEAKER. Consent was given merely for the introduction of bills for reference.

Mr. BEACH. This is a very brief memorial, and it is signed by representatives of some twenty States. It is a memorial of the national conference of State boards of health in favor of the bill to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States and to establish a national board of health.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this memorial be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The memorial was referred to the Select Committee on the Public Health. It is as follows:

Memorial relative to national board of health.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists would respectfully represent that for the prevention of the introduction into this country of Asiatic cholera and other diseases dangerous to the public health and their spread from one State into another there is needed thorough organization of health boards, local, State, and national, and such a system of prompt notification from foreign ports and between such boards as shall cause all health authorities throughout this country to act in harmony for the prevention and restriction of such diseases.

Recognizing, therefore, the continued necessity for a national board of health to discharge those functions in health matters which belong to the General Government, and which can not be done by the individual States, the accompanying bill is respectfully presented by the national conference of State boards of health for the consideration of Congress.

At this meeting of the conference States, municipalities, and quarantine stations were represented as follows:

Connecticut: Dr. C. A. Lindsley, State board of health of Connecticut.

Georgia: Dr. J. T. McFarland, health officer of Savannah, Ga.

Illinois: Dr. J. H. Rauch, State board of health of Illinois.

Indiana: Dr. E. S. Elder, State board of health of Indiana.

Kentucky: Drs. J. N. McCormack and W. L. Breyfogle, State board of health of Kentucky.

Louisiana: Drs. S. S. Herrick and S. R. Oliphant, State board of Louisiana.

Maryland: Dr. C. W. Chancellor, State board of health of Maryland; Dr. James A. Stewart, health officer of Baltimore, Md.

Massachusetts: Drs. H. P. Walcott and S. W. Abbott, State board of health of Massachusetts; Dr. S. H. Durgan, health officer of Boston; Dr. A. F. Holt, health officer of Cambridge.

Michigan: Dr. H. B. Baker, State board of health of Michigan.

Minnesota: Dr. C. N. Hewitt, State board of health of Minnesota.

North Carolina: Dr. T. F. Wood, State board of health of North Carolina.

Ohio: Mr. C. W. Rowland, health officer of Cincinnati, Ohio; Dr. A. H. Iddings, health officer of Dayton, Ohio.

Pennsylvania: Mr. Crosby Gray, health officer of Pittsburgh, Pa.; Dr. E. W. Germer, health officer of Erie, Pa.

South Carolina: Dr. J. Ford Prioleau, State board of health of South Carolina; Dr. H. B. Horlbeck, health officer of Charleston, S. C.

Tennessee: Drs. G. B. Thornton and J. B. Thornton, State board of health of Tennessee; Dr. Charles Mitchell, health officer of Nashville, Tenn.

Texas: Dr. William Penny, health officer of Galveston, Tex.

Virginia: Dr. J. G. Cabell, health officer of Richmond, Va.

West Virginia: Drs. J. E. Reeves and T. A. Harris, State board of health of West Virginia.

Wisconsin: Dr. J. T. Reese, State board of health of Wisconsin.

Dr. Smith Townshend, health officer of the District of Columbia.

Canada: Dr. C. W. Covernton, Dominion of Canada and the provincial board of health of Ontario; Dr. F. Montizambert, health officer of Quebec; Dr. William Canniff, health officer of Montreal.

Respectfully submitted.

H. P. WALCOTT,	E. S. ELDER,
W. M. SMITH,	J. C. HEARNE,
J. H. RAUCH,	J. T. REESE,
H. B. BAKER,	I. A. WATSON,
S. S. HERRICK,	J. E. REEVES,
ERASTUS BROOKS,	H. B. HORLBECK,
C. W. CHANCELLOR,	C. A. LINDSLEY,
T. W. WOOD,	J. N. McCORMACK,
G. B. THORNTON,

Committee.

REPORTS ON LABOR IN EUROPE.

Mr. HITT. On behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I submit the resolution which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the letter of the Secretary of State dated December 12, 1884, and the accompanying reports of United States consuls on labor in Europe be printed, and that —— additional copies be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, —— copies for the use of the Senate, and for the use of the Department of State 5,000 copies, and 10,000 copies of the Secretary's letter.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

JOSEPH R. DODDS.

Mr. WEAVER introduced a bill (H. R. 7769) granting a pension to Joseph R. Dodds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANNA ELLA CARROLL.

Mr. LOVERING introduced a bill (H. R. 7770) for the relief of Anna Ella Carroll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. MCADOO introduced a bill (H. R. 7771) to increase the efficiency of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. ENGLISH introduced a bill (H. R. 7772) to amend the pension laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on Payment of Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. AYERS.

Mr. NUTTING introduced a bill (H. R. 7773) granting a pension to William E. Ayers, Company E, Twenty-fourth New York Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. M. GRIGSBY.

Mr. THROCKMORTON introduced a bill (H. R. 7774) for the relief of J. M. Grigsby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LOSS OF UNITED STATES STEAMER ASHUELOT.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 7775) for the compensation of certain officers of the Navy for losses of their property by the loss of the United States steamer Ashuelot; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANK OF WINONA.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, introduced a bill (H. R. 7776) to change the name of the National Bank of Winona; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM CHRISTIE.

Mr. BURLEIGH introduced a bill (H. R. 7777) granting a pension to William Christie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EXHIBITION IN LONDON IN 1886.

Mr. CURTIN introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 302) providing for the representation of the United States at the proposed exhibition in London in 1886, and making appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY LOST IN MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (H. R. 7778) to extend the time for filing certain claims for compensation for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PIERRE AND SOUTHEASTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. KLEINER introduced a bill (H. R. 7779) to grant a right of way to the Pierre and Southeastern Railroad Company across the old Winnebago Indian reservation in Dakota Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

OVERTON L. DEMMITT.

Mr. KLEINER also introduced a bill (H. R. 7780) for the relief of Overton L. Demmitt; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID RICHEY.

Mr. DEUSTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7781) to increase the pension of David Richey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN BENSON.

Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7782) granting a pension to John Benson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the Secretary of War be requested to ascertain which and how many, if any, of the navigable streams within the jurisdiction of the United States have been and are now improved by lock and dam, or either, or by other improvement, either by States or by corporations, in pursuance of State authority, and upon which streams and for the use of which improvements toll is now charged, and whether the said improvements can be purchased by the United States, and the probable cost of each of said improvements, together with the probable benefit to navigation and commerce of such purchase, if such purchase were made with the view of making the navigation of such streams free; and that he report to the next Congress.

PATRICK V. DOLAN.

Mr. GIBSON also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment to Patrick V. Dolan, in one of the general appropriation bills, the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from June 6, 1884, to June 30, 1885.

CHARLES A. M'DANIEL.

Mr. MURRAY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7783) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Charles A. McDaniel the sum of $2,959.55; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PORTSMOUTH, VA.

Mr. LIBBEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 7784) for the erection of a public building at Portsmouth, Va.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED IMPEACHMENT OF LOT WRIGHT.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 2d day of December, 1884, authorizing investigation into the conduct of Lot Wright, United States marshal for the southern district of Ohio, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"The Clerk of the House, upon the order of the chairman of said subcommittee, shall advance to him, in amounts not exceeding $1,000 at a time, such sums as may be required to meet the expenses of said subcommittee; said amounts to be promptly accounted for by proper vouchers, duly certified by the chairman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn, the gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to report a resolution from the Committee on Naval Affairs for present consideration. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The call for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WAIT that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of the Louisiana Educational Society, for the passage of the Blair educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. BRAINERD: Petition of John E. Larkins and others, relative to pension claim of said Larkins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Erie, Pa., relative to the Spanish treaty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. S. S. COX: Memorial of the Phœnix National Bank of the city of New York—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. G. R. DAVIS: Resolutions of the Chicago Medical Society, relative to the National Board of Health—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DUNN: Papers relating to the claim of the heirs of Alexander G. Clements, deceased; also, papers relating to the claim of Benjamin F. Wallace; also, papers relating to the claim of Pleasant H. Thompson—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FINDLAY: Petition of George W. Alexander, to refund to him the proceeds of sale of certain property sold under the confiscation act, &c.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. FOLLETT: Petition of steamboat owners and others interested in the navigation of the Ohio River, protesting against the passage of Senate bill 2374, "To authorize the lighting of the navigable rivers of the United States by electricity—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolutions of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati, Ohio, in favor of the Lowell bankruptcy bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. G. W. HEWITT: Papers relating to the claim of William T. Hamner; also, papers relating to the claim of Thomas L. Shamblin—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. B. W. JONES: Papers relating to the bill for the relief of George F. West—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY: Protest of the Pennsylvania Suffrage Association against the admission of Dakota as a State, &c.—to the Committee on Territories.

By Mr. PRICE: Papers relating to the claim of Jacob and Elizabeth Sener; also, papers relating to the claim of William H. Rogers—severally to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. J. H. ROGERS: Papers relating to the claim of Dr. J. H. T. Main—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ROWELL: Petition of the National Bank of Bloomington, Ill., to change its name to First National Bank of Bloomington—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RYAN: Petition of Western Miami Indians, praying that certain money taken from their tribal fund be returned—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STOCKSLAGER: Papers relating to the claim of Ferdinand Hercher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. YOUNG: Papers relating to the claim of Mary E. Geary; also papers relating to the claim of Elizabeth P. Dyer—severally to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. ANDERSON: Of 62 citizens of Edmonds, of citizens of Ottawa County, and of 55 citizens of Bennington, Ottawa County, Kansas.

By Mr. BARR: Of citizens of Millersburg and of Dauphin County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BEACH: Of citizens of Wurtsborough and of Bridgeville, Sullivan County, New York.

By Mr. F. B. BREWER: Of citizens of Cattaraugus County, New York.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Of 42 citizens and soldiers of Potter County, Pennsylvania, and of citizens and soldiers of Lycoming County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BUCKNER: Of citizens of Frankford, Mo.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Of citizens of Washington County, New York.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Of citizens of Somerset County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. CULLEN: Of H. A. Crawford and 39 others, of Gardner, Ill.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Of 63 citizens of Mears, and of 63 citizens of Muskegon, Mich.

By Mr. DIBRELL: Of citizens of McMinn County, Tennessee.

By Mr. EATON: Of Frederick Bissell and others, of East Hartford, and of Leander N. Tucker, of Naubuc, Conn.

By Mr. EVANS: Of Jacob C. Arn and others, of Bucks County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. FUNSTON: Of citizens of Olathe, Kans.

By Mr. FYAN: Of citizens of the thirteenth district of Missouri, and of Jasper County, Missouri.

By Mr. GUENTHER: Of citizens of Plainfield, Wis.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Of citizens of the counties of Bremer and Butler; of 64 citizens of Dubuque County; and of 242 citizens of Chickasaw County, Iowa.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Of George L. Young and 100 others, citizens of Decatur County, and of J. A. Roy and 100 others, citizens of Leon, Decatur County, Iowa.

By Mr. HITT: Of 63 citizens of Galena, and of 45 citizens of Warren, Ill.

By Mr. HOUSEMAN: Of E. M. Fitch and 64 others, of Allegan County, and of William E. Estes and many others, of Grandville, Kent County, Michigan.

By Mr. LAMB: Of citizens of Parke County, and of Terre Haute, Ind.

By Mr. LYMAN: Of citizens of Newton, Mass.

By Mr. McCORMICK: Of citizens of Gallia County, Ohio.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Of Charles Wilson and others, of Togus, Me.

By Mr. MOULTON: Of 500 veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic.

By Mr. PATTON: Of citizens of Indiana County, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. PAYNE: Of S. C. Wheeler and 90 others, of Erie County, Ohio.

By Mr. PERKINS: Of Charles E. Simons and others.

By Mr. PRYOR: Of John B. Caffey and others.

By Mr. RANNEY: Of James M. Freeman and others.

By Mr. RYAN: Of 211 citizens of Kansas, of 108 citizens of Shawnee County, and of 129 citizens of Kansas.

By Mr. SENEY: Of Loyd A. Cook and 60 others, citizens of Seneca County, Ohio.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Of citizens of Lincoln, Ill.

By Mr. STEVENS: Of citizens of Niagara County, New York.

By Mr. STRUBLE: Of J. M. Cochran and 38 others, of Manson; of L. M. Lyon and 71 citizens of Glidden, and of Samuel Adams and 111 citizens of Wall Lake, Iowa.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Of 62 citizens of Atwater, of citizens of Trumbull, and of 121 citizens of Lake County, Ohio.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Of 29 citizens of Houston County, Minnesota.

By Mr. WILKINS: Of L. L. Wiles and 60 others, citizens of Muskingum County, Ohio.

By Mr. E. B. WINANS: Of Gideon Durfee and 60 others, citizens of Clinton County, and of W. H. J. Martin and 57 others, citizens of Genesee County, Michigan.

By Mr. JOHN WINANS: Of Ezra Goodrich and 176 others, citizens of Wisconsin.

By Mr. YAPLE: Of R. M. Flack and 61 others, citizens of Constantine, Mich.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1884.

Prayer by Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from W. W. Corcoran, chairman of the Joint Commission for the Completion of the Washington Monument, transmitting the annual report of that body; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1457) to establish a department of agriculture was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a matter that will facilitate business between the two Houses at this stage in relation to enrolled bills. I find some difficulty in delivering enrolled bills to the committee of the House, which is a joint committee, in consequence of the fact that neither of the clerks of the committees can go upon the floor of the other body. I have obtained from the Speaker permission that the clerk of the Senate committee may come on the floor of the House, and I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate authorize the clerk of the House committee to come on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, asks unanimous consent that the clerk of the House Committee on Enrolled Bills be entitled to the privileges of the floor of the Senate for the purpose of communicating with the Committee on Enrolled Bills here. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the New York Produce Exchange, favoring some action, either adverse or favorable, on the Spanish reciprocity treaty, so called; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Bar Association of Spokane, Adams, Lincoln, and Douglas Counties, Washington Territory, on the subject of the administration of justice and the arrangement of counties and districts in that Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LAPHAM presented a petition of Isaac L. Rock, late private of Company I, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for the enactment of a law extending the time for filing claims for arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Oshkosh, Wis., and a memorial of cigar-makers of Eau Claire, Wis., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of Alpheus Hardy and other merchants of Boston and New York, remonstrating against some plans for the distribution of the Geneva award which are contained in various pending bills. It states very briefly, compactly, and clearly the points, and I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of cigar-makers of Sandusky, Ohio, and a memorial of Cigar-Makers' Union 137, of Massillon, Ohio, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty with Spain; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions adopted at a meeting of steamboat owners and others interested in navigation, held at the office of the Southern Transportation Line in Cincinnati, December 11, 1884, in which they remonstrate against the passage of the bill to authorize the lighting of the navigable rivers of the United States with electricity, whereby one O. W. Child and his associates are to be granted extraordinary authority and privileges injurious to the navigation of the Western rivers. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also present the petition of Mary E. Gordon, praying for the passage of a bill replacing the name of her brother, Samuel F. Gordon, late private Company G, Sixteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of John Bird, late private Company I, Fifty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, who says that he is denied arrears of pension because he made application for his pension after the date of limitation had expired, and he prays Congress to remove this unjust discrimination against him. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I present the petition of sundry citizens of the United States resident in Kansas, praying for legislation to enable certain administrative officers to remain in office so long as their duties shall be satisfactorily and efficiently performed. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I present a petition of the officers of the Music Teachers' National Association, in behalf of that organization, signed by a large number of well-known professional musicians and by the principal publishers of music in the United States, praying for the passage of an international copyright law. As the petition is very brief, I move that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable members of the Senate in Congress assembled:

Believing that the promotion of musical-art creation in America would materially benefit us as a nation, and would enable us to command the respect of other nations, and that such art creation has not developed proportionately with the other arts on account of very serious impediments, one of the most important of which is the want of an international copyright law whereby our own art creations are placed at a marked disadvantage before those of foreign nations through the permission of reprints of foreign musical works: Therefore,

We, members of the Music Teachers' National Association, in convention assembled, at Cleveland, Ohio, this 3d day of July, A. D. 1884, and all others whose names are hereunto subscribed, do most respectfully and earnestly petition you, the honorable members of the Senate in Congress assembled, that you will take active measures toward the speedy establishment of an international copyright law, and to this end pray that you will favor the passage of the so-called Dorsheimer bill, or any similar bill, whereby the creative interests of the art of music in America will receive the encouragement so much needed at the present time.

Mr. LOGAN. I present resolutions of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, in the nature of a petition, in favor of the appointment of a board of railroad commissioners. I suppose it should go to the committee which considered the interstate-commerce bill; but inasmuch as that bill has been reported and is now before the Senate, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN presented two petitions of officers of the Army, praying for the passage of a bill to facilitate promotions throughout the Army by retiring from active service, upon their own application, officers of the Army who served in the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of ex-soldiers of Jackson County, Illinois, praying that ex-Union soldiers be given the preference in the settlement of the Oklahoma lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers, praying for the purchase by Congress of the portrait of the late Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas, owned by Miss C. L. Ransom; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the petition of Mrs. E. D. Jones, widow of E. D. Jones, late private Company K, Fourth Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers; and the petition of Russell Cook, late private Company B, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying for an extension of the time of filing arrears of pension claims; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON presented a memorial of cigar manufacturers of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocity treaty with Spain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to; and the bills were indefinitely postponed:

A bill (S. 2077) granting a pension to M. A. Jones; and

A bill (S. 1869) granting a pension to Kate C. McDougal, widow of the late Commander Charles J. McDougal.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 5735) granting a pension to Margaret Daily;

A bill (H. R. 4094) granting a pension to Henry Alden;

A bill (H. R. 2440) granting a pension to Usebus Sweet;

A bill (H. R. 3177) granting a pension to Charles F. Paris; and

A bill (H. R. 452) granting a pension to Frederick Corfe.

Mr. COLQUITT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1796) granting a pension to James P. Roe, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2258) granting a pension to Martha Bates, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAWES. On the 15th instant there were presented to the Senate by the President pro tempore some papers from the Interior Department, consisting of the draught of a bill granting a right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railway Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation in the Territory of Dakota, and some accompanying documents, which contained the negotiations between the Interior Department and the Indians. They were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, accompanied by a memorandum upon them that the papers were not ordered to be printed. If there was such a vote as that I ask to have it reconsidered, because it is highly important that the papers should be printed.

I report back the papers, and I should like to have them printed, with the accompanying bill, as a public document, for the transactions between the Interior Department and the Indians out of which the agreement grows should be a public document and printed, so that everybody may see that it is a fair transaction. If there was any such vote as that the papers should not be printed, I should like to have it reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of the Senate on the occasion of the presentation of the papers was that the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be printed, and the letter with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. There was no order to print the papers.

Mr. DAWES. The memorandum is that they were ordered not to be printed. I report back the bill, and ask that it be printed and recommitted to the committee; and I ask that the accompanying documents may be printed as a public document to accompany the bill.

The bill (S. 2473) granting a right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railroad Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation, in the Territory of Dakota, was read twice by its title, and, on motion of Mr. DAWES, recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the accompanying papers be printed for the use of the Senate. If there be no objection, that order will be entered.

INAUGURATION DAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

Mr. INGALLS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2417) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, to report it with an amendment.

This is the bill that I reported yesterday, and upon which I asked the action of the Senate. The Chair was correct in calling attention to the incompleteness of the report. It has now been rectified, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate to act upon the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to hear it read first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "to," in line 5, as follows:

Include, after the words "Christmas Day," the words "and each 4th day of March of every year on which shall occur the inauguration of the President of the United States."

And to insert:

Read as follows:

"SEC. 993. The following days, namely: The 1st day of January, commonly called New Year's Day; the 4th day of July; the 25th day of December, commonly called Christmas Day, and each 4th day of March every year on which shall occur the commencement of the term of the President of the United States, and when said date occurs on Sunday, then the succeeding day, and any day appointed or recommended by the President of the United States as a day of public fast or thanksgiving, shall be holidays within the District, and shall, for all purposes of presenting for payment or acceptance, for the maturity and protest, and giving notice of the dishonor of bills of exchange, bank-checks, and promissory notes, or other negotiable or commercial paper, be treated and considered as is the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, and all notes, drafts, checks, or other commercial or negotiable paper falling due or maturing on either of said holidays shall be deemed as having matured on the day previous."

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2474) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College at said place for educational purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2475) to authorize the building of a shell road from Baton Rouge, La., to the national cemetery near said city; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALKER introduced a bill (S. 2476) for the relief of James Clifford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 2477) for the erection of a public building at Stillwater, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2478) to remove the charge of desertion against John Dienst, late of the Twenty-first Ohio Battery; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] and the Military Committee generally to the provisions of this bill to remove the charge of desertion from a soldier named Dienst, and to the fact that accompanying the bill is a letter from the Adjutant-General, in which the case is rejected for the reasons there stated, as not coming within the provisions of the law passed at the last session of Congress, and yet, as I think, stating a very plain case requiring Congress to act for the relief of this most excellent soldier, but who was unfortunate enough to have outstripped many of us and to have enlisted in two regiments in place of one. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2479) to repeal section 4419 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 2480) for the relief of George Storrs; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EDWARD L. KEYES.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of a vote passed at the last session by which a bill adversely reported was indefinitely postponed. I will state to the Senate the reasons for asking a reconsideration.

On the 22d of April the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] reported adversely from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 1798) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes, and it was indefinitely postponed. The adverse report, as I understand, was made because there were no papers in the possession of the committee to support the bill. The reason why there were no papers, I am informed, was because the papers had been in the custody of the late Senator Carpenter and were mislaid, and those interested in the matter were unable to find the papers until after the report was made. Mr. Carpenter's late partner in business has been able since then to find the papers upon which the bill was based, and it is the desire of the friends of Mr. Keyes to have the vote reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the committee and those papers submitted. That is the ground upon which I ask a reconsideration.

I do not know the merits of the bill or what is contained in the papers. I have reason to believe and feel that the claim of Mr. Keyes is a meritorious claim. The Senator from New Jersey does not object to having the bill recommitted and the papers which have since been found with Mr. Carpenter's papers submitted to the committee. Of course it can not be done except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate taken at the last session indefinitely postponing the bill (S. 1798) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

RIGHTS IN LAND GRANTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VHI, commencing at Order of Business 338, being the bill (S. 1445) to provide for the settlement of the rights of States and of the corporations and persons interested in any grant of lands in aid of railroads and canals which shall be declared forfeited by act of Congress.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a proposed general law providing a remedy in the courts at the suit of the United States in all cases where railroad land grants have been forfeited by act of Congress. The subject is not yet prepared for the consideration of the Senate. There is pending in this body a report of the conferees of the two Houses upon a bill which involves the whole principle of this measure, and which I have not as yet had the opportunity to present in such a way as I think would be appropriate. I will ask the further indulgence of the Senate that this bill may be passed over informally until that report shall be acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SHOSHONES, BANNOCKS, AND SHEEPEATERS.

The bill (S. 1008) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations, in Idaho, May 14, 1880, for the sale of a portion of their lands in said Territory, and for other purposes, and make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same, was announced as next in order; and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, to add:

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect only when the President of the United States shall have had presented to him satisfactory evidence that the agreement herein set forth has been accepted in conformity with the eleventh article of the treaty of July 3, 1868, with the Shoshones and Bannocks, and he shall have made proclamation thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] who reported the bill give some explanation of this bill and state what changes it makes in regard to our present relations with those tribes.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have read the amendment which the Senate has adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment just adopted will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. This agreement was made, as appears upon the face of the bill, several years ago, and the Interior Department have been for some time very anxious to have it ratified. There has been no opposition from any quarter, and it has only been for lack of opportunity to bring it before either House that it has not been acted on.

These tribes of Indians are small, but scattered over a large area of reservation. It has been the desire of the Interior Department to gather them all upon one reservation and to throw open to settlement a portion of the reservation of no use to them. They made this agreement after long negotiation, and the terms of the agreement itself are set forth in the bill.

By the terms of the agreement the Indians are to take land in severalty, and to hold it under the United States for twenty-five years, and when they have their land in severalty in the quantities specified in the bill the rest of the land is to be thrown open to settlement, and the Indians in consideration of it are to have the annuity for twenty years specified in the agreement.

It is said by those who negotiated it that the Indians, supposing when they had signed the agreement with the agent of the United States that was the end of it and a completion of the agreement, have gone into possession under the agreement, and are carrying out their part of it, and are at a loss to know why they do not receive this money. They can not understand (and that is the case with a great many of the Indians) that the agreements they make must be ratified by Congress and appropriations must be made. They have an impression when they make an agreement with the United States that the Government is prepared to pay over the money and the agreement is completed. Unless this money is paid there is danger of an outbreak there. It is the opinion of the Interior Department, and especially of the agent sent out to make the agreement, that it is for the best interests of all the Indians, and that it will bring into market a large tract of country which would otherwise be held as a reservation unappropriated and left for cattle-men to have the entire advantage of.

It is an agreement to which I can see no objection, and I think it ought to be ratified. I have the papers here upon which it was founded. The message of the President communicating the whole transaction is in Senate Executive Document No. 19, and the bill itself was drawn in the Interior Department. The Committee on Indian Affairs investigated it to the extent that they were satisfied that these parties acted in good faith. Whether their judgment as to the amount of land to be disposed of is a correct one or not the Committee on Indian Affairs have been obliged to trust to the agents of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PETER DELLA TERRE.

The bill (S. 294) for the relief of Frank Della Terre and Susan Della Terre, heirs of Peter Della Terre, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The consideration of this bill undoubtedly will involve a good deal of debate. I do not think it can be properly considered under the five-minute rule. I object to, it in order that it may take its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill being objected to goes over.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The bill (S. 1235) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education was announced as next in order.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Kansas to allow the bill to go over informally without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SOUTHERN MAIL CONTRACTORS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 13) to reappropriate and apply the amount appropriated by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1877, to pay certain Southern mail contractors was announced as next in order.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the Senator from Kansas consent that that may go over informally without losing its place?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the joint resolution be passed over retaining its place on the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to its going over now, but when it does come up it will be necessary to consider it under Rule IX, or not to have the five-minute rule applied to the consideration of it, I think. Perhaps the sooner it is passed over to take its place under Rule IX the earlier it will be on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Michigan to object to the bill retaining its place under Rule VIII.

Mr. CONGER. I make the suggestion. I have no choice in regard to it.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to state to the Senator from Michigan that it is my purpose when we do take it up to have it considered regardless of the five-minute rule. I think when the Senator from Michigan looks at the amended resolution as it comes from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads he will have no further objection to it. I believe it has been amended to meet the objection he and the Senator from Ohio had to the original resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to its keeping its place, but it can not be considered properly under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution being passed over, retaining its place?

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. If there be no objection the Senator from Texas will proceed.

Mr. MAXEY. I was going to make a remark because I reported the resolution from the Post-Office Committee. The resolution as reported is in exact accordance with the resolution as it passed at a former session of the Senate, with one additional amendment in the interest of the Government, not in the interest of the claimants, to require the production of certain proofs. It is in the interest of the Government and not of the claimants, and the entire resolution is drawn with the view of meeting the views of the Senate as expressed at a former session. That will appear whenever the matter comes up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the resolution being passed over, retaining its place on the Calender under Rule VIII? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PETER TARGARONA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 902) for the relief of Peter Targarona, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to have some explanation of that.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is a report from the Committee on Claims in this case which gives a very full account of the whole subject, a reference to which will show the circumstances.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator state briefly the points?

Mr. CONGER. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MANDERSON March 14, 1884:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Peter Targarona, having considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

This claim has been before Congress since the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress. In the House of Representatives it has been frequently considered by the Committee on Claims, and favorable reports have been made by it at the second session of the Forty-fifth, second session of the Forty-sixth, and the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress.

Favorable report was also made by the Senate Committee of Claims of the Forty-seventh Congress at its first session. This report is so full and sets forth so clearly the claim and rights of the claimant that your committee adopt said report as its own:

"Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. 522:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Peter Targarona, having considered the same, respectfully submit the following report:

"The committee find the following facts:

"That the claimant, Peter Targarona, in July, 1865, was the owner of the steamboat Capitol, her tackle, apparel, and furniture.

"That Targarona was then an unnaturalized resident in the city of New Orleans and State of Louisiana, and a native of Spain.

"That on July 3, 1865, Rufus Waples, as attorney of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, on behalf of the United States, and Charles Black, sr., informant, filed a libel of information in the circuit court of the United States for the sixth judicial circuit and eastern district of Louisiana against the steamboat Capitol, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, in a case of seizure and forfeiture, under the act of Congress approved August 6, 1861, entitled 'An act to confiscate property used for insurrectionary purposes.'

"That Cuthbert Bullett, as United States marshal, acting under the authority of an admiralty warrant issued from said circuit court on said libel of information, seized and took into possession the said steamboat Capitol, her tackle, apparel, and furniture.

"That the same were duly claimed by said Targarona, who applied to said court to release said steamer, &c., to him on bond.

"That, on motion, the court ordered an appraisement of the steamer Capitol, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, which was done, and reported to the court at $8,000.

"That on the order of the said court Targarona gave bond and security, conditioned as the law directs, and resumed possession and control of his said steamboat, &c.

"That afterward the steamboat, while running on the Red River, in the service of her said owner, was sunk by accident, and became a total loss.

"That on the trial of the libel suit judgment of condemnation and forfeiture was rendered by said court on the 10th day of January, 1866, against said steamboat, her tackle, apparel, and furniture.

"That the claimant, not being able to deliver said steamboat, on account of her loss, judgment was rendered by said court on said release bond against Targarona and his sureties for $8,000.

"That, on motion, said court granted Targarona an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, on his executing bond with sureties in the sum of $12,000 conditioned to prosecute the appeal and satisfy whatever judgment might be rendered against them if they were cast in the appeal.

"That said suspension appeal was granted on the 2d day of February, 1866, and notice thereof served by the United States marshal on the district attorney February 8, 1866.

"That on the application of the district attorney an execution of fieri facias was issued from said court the 7th day of February, 1866, against said Targarona and his sureties on said release bond for $8,000 and $357.85 costs of the libel suit; that said execution was levied by said marshal on the steamboat Live Oak as the property of said Targarona; that under order of the said circuit court the steamboat Live Oak, her tackle, apparel, and furniture were appraised on June 14, 1866, at $18,000; that the appraisers appointed by said circuit court found that the steamer Live Oak cost said Targarona $25,000, and that he expended for repairs $15,000; that under said execution said marshal sold said steamer Live Oak, &c., at public outcry, on 22d day of May, 1866, for cash, at the sum of $8,300, and paid the same into said circuit court in current funds of the United States on the 25th day of May, 1866; that at the December term, 1867, of said circuit court judgment was rendered in favor of divers persons as intervenors and libellants in said case against said proceeds of said steamer Live Oak for the amounts by them claimed, respectively, and which is established in the following classification, &c.:

"That the several sums due by said Targarona to said several intervenors for wages as employés on said steamer Live Oak, and for material and supplies furnished him, amounted in the aggregate to $6,729.15, which said circuit court ordered to be paid said intervenors out of the proceeds of the sale of said steamer Live Oak; and the balance of said proceeds, amounting to $1,570.85, the said circuit court applied to the payment of the costs and charges incurred in said libel proceedings, and for which the United States became liable on the reversal by the Supreme Court of the United States of the judgment of said circuit court, condemning said steamboat Capitol as aforesaid and the dismissal of said libel of information of said circuit court; that at the December term, 1868, of the Supreme Court of the United States the said suspension appeal cause came on to be heard before the said Supreme Court, when it was ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said decree of said circuit court in said libel proceedings against said steamboat Capitol be, and the same is hereby, reversed, and that said cause be remanded to said court with directions to dismiss the libel of information. The judgment reversing and dismissing said decree and information is dated March 22, 1869. The proof accompanying the petition of claimant to Congress for relief greatly preponderates to show that the steamer Live Oak, her tackle, apparel, and furniture, were worth more than double the amount of $18,000, at which they were appraised under the order and direction of the circuit court.

"When the appeal to the Supreme Court in the confiscation case came on to be heard, the only question considered and passed on by the court was, on the motion of Mr. Evarts, Attorney-General, that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause remanded with instructions to dismiss the libel of information. In rendering the opinion on the motion of Mr. Evarts, which was resisted by the informer, the court say (7 Wallace, Rep. 454):

"'Although the name of the informer is mentioned in the libel of information, still it is nevertheless true that the suit was instituted by the district attorney in the name and for the benefit of the United States. Control of the suit, therefore, while it was pending in the circuit court, belonged to the district attorney under the general superintendence and direction of the Attorney-General, and he might, if he had seen fit, have discontinued it at any stage of the proceedings prior to the appeal. Such control on the part of the district attorney ceases whenever such a suit, civil or criminal, is transferred to this court by writ of error, appeal, or certificate of division of opinion, as the thirty-fifth section of the judiciary act also provides that it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to prosecute and conduct all suits in the Supreme Court in which the United States shall be concerned.'

"It is clear, then, that after granting the appeal, and the execution of the appeal bond, all further proceedings in the circuit court to execute its decree of condemnation of the steamer Capitol were suspended until the final decision of the Supreme Court. The issuance of the execution of fieri facias from the circuit court was wholly unauthorized, and in contempt of the supreme order of the circuit court. The district attorney ordered the clerk to issue the execution after the suspension order of appeal was granted, and after the execution of the suspensive bond, of which order and giving of the bond he had written notice the day after said execution was issued. The clerk knew of the suspension order and the execution of the appeal bond, and so did the United States marshal; and the district attorney, clerk, and marshal well knew that the seizure and advertisement and sale of the steamer Live Oak were in violation of the order of the circuit court suspending all further proceedings in said libel of information. It is equally certain that the claimant Targarona was also fully informed that the issuance of the execution and the seizure and sale of his steamboat were wholly unauthorized, and that all he was required to do to arrest the proceedings which terminated in the sale of his steamboat was to apply to the judge of the said circuit court to supersede and quash said execution.

"It is remarkable that with full knowledge of the suspensive order of the circuit court, and of the pendency of his appeal, the claimant should have made no effort whatever to protect himself against the open defiance of the order of the circuit court by the district attorney, clerk, and marshal, when his remedy was plain and adequate, and if unknown to him must have been familiar to his attorney, who was present with him in the same city where his rights were openly disregarded.

"There is another equally remarkable feature in the proceedings on the libel of information.

"The Supreme Court say in the opinion (supra) that 'judgment in the circuit court is for the complainants or for the United States; and if for the latter, and the claimants do not remove the cause into this court for revision, it then becomes the duty of the circuit court to render the decree for distribution.'

"Notwithstanding the cause was removed to the Supreme Court for revision, while it was pending there on a suspensive appeal the circuit court, Judge Wood presiding, entertained jurisdiction of the petitions and libels of information against the proceeds of the sale of the steamer Live Oak, and condemned the proceeds to the payment of all the costs in his court and rendered judgment of distribution of the balance among the intervening creditors of Targarona.

"It may be that the intervenors proceeded by petition or otherwise to enforce their prior lien on the Live Oak or the proceeds of its sale to satisfy their claims for wages, supplies, and material furnished Targarona. And it may not have been brought to the attention of the circut court that a suspensive appeal had been taken prior to the sale of the Live Oak and the payment of the proceeds into court. As Targarona must have had notice of the proceedings by the intervenors to ascertain the amount of his indebtedness to them and to obtain judgment of condemnation of the proceeds of the sale of the Live Oak to their claims, the failure of Targarona to bring to the notice of the court the illegality of the sale of his steamboat may estop him from setting up the illegality of the sale as a foundation for his claim against the Government.

"There is no evidence of any attempt by Targarona to enforce any remedy he had against the clerk or marshal. Nor is there any proof that Targarona attended the sale of his steamboat to notify bidders of the illegality of the sale, which he could have done, and entitled himself to bring suit against any purchaser of his steamboat to recover the boat itself or its value.

"Targarona made no effort to reimburse himself for his alleged losses out of the United States except by his petition to Congress, filed January 31, 1876.

"Several questions of law arise on the facts found by the committee.

"1. Were the acts of the clerk and marshal in issuing the execution of fieri facias, and the sale under it by the marshal of the steamer Live Oak, void or voidable? and, if either, can the United States be held responsible in justice and equity for the losses resulting from the illegal and unauthorized acts of its agents? If voidable only, and done under color of authority, ought the United States to reimburse those who suffer from such acts when it is manifest that the injury could have been prevented by the use of ordinary diligence in resorting to plain, adequate, legal remedies.

"2. Was Targarona compelled by law to resort to his legal remedies against the wrongful acts of the clerk and marshal in issuing the execution and selling the steamer Live Oak?

"3. The libel of information being wrongful, and the United States being bound by the acts of the district attorney in filing such libel of information and in ordering the admiralty warrant under which the Capitol was seized and taken possession of by the marshal, ought the United States to be heard to require of the injured party that he should have protected himself against the wrong in selling his other steamboat by resorting to his legal remedies?

"4. Has the original actor in a wrongful judicial proceeding the right to escape liability by charging the sufferer with contributory negligence?

"5. If the United States are liable for anything, to what extent? Does the liability go beyond the amount of the costs and charges paid out of the proceeds of the sale of the Live Oak, and for which costs and charges the United States became liable when the judgment of the circuit court was reversed and the libel of information ordered to be dismissed?

"The Supreme Court in the opinion (supra) say:

"'Under the rules of the common law it must be conceded that the prosecuting party may relinquish his suit at any stage of it, and withdraw from court at his option, and without other liability to his adversary than the payment of taxable costs which have accrued up to the time when he withdraws his suit. Precisely the same rule prevails (say the court) in the admiralty courts, and consequently the libelant has the right at any stage of the cause to discontinue the same, and the only penalty to which he can legally be subjected, in the absence of any statutory regulation, except, perhaps, in prize cases, is the payment of the costs of the proceedings.'

"To the extent that the proceeds of the sale of the Live Oak were applied to the payment of the honest debts of Targarona, the United States, in any event, should not be held responsible. But the balance of the proceeds of said sale have gone to the payment of costs and charges for which the United States were liable on the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court, and the dismissal of the libel or information, and as to that amount ($1,570.85) the claimant should be reimbursed, unless he has lost his right by failing to make timely application to Congress for relief. As to all the other questions presented your committee express no opinion. And after due consideration of all the facts and the character of the legal questions in the case, your committee feel constrained to report back Senate bill No. 522 with a recommendation that it pass."

Your committee, coinciding with the views expressed above, report back a substitute for bill S. 902, and recommend that said substitute pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. CONGER. Let the substitute be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the claim of Peter Targarona for loss and damages alleged to have been sustained by him through the seizure and sale of the steamboat Live Oak, be, and the same hereby is, referred to the Court of Claims, with power to hear and determine the same upon the merits thereof; and any defense, set-off, or counterclaim may be pleaded by the United States as defendents, as in cases within the general jurisdiction of the court, and either party shall have the same right of appeal as in such cases; and the testimony of the claimant or of any party in interest may be admitted in evidence: Provided, That the liability of the United States shall be the same as if the acts done by the officers of the Government in the premises had been done by the agents of a public corporation.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the report which has been read fits an entirely different bill from the one before the Senate now. It is a report to allow this man $1,570, I think the amount is, and the bill is to refer him to the Court of Claims for $25,000. I object to the further consideration of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over.

JULIA A. NUTT.

The bill (S. 1851) for the relief of Julia A. Nutt, widow and executrix of Haller Nutt, deceased, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] desires to be heard on this bill, as it has been partly provided for in some other subject-matter of legislation. He left that word with the Secretary at the desk.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was in his seat a moment ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the bill will go over informally.

Mr. HOAR. Let the reading of the bill proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Mississippi desires to be heard in the matter it had better go over informally until he comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been informed that the Senator from Mississippi left word with the Secretary that he desired to be heard upon this bill. The Senator is now in his seat.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the Senator from Massachusetts state what he has to say.

Mr. HOAR. I will make a brief statement to the Senate in regard to this bill, if the Senate please.

This claimant presented a claim for a very considerable sum, several hundred thousand dollars, and it was referred to me by the Committee on Claims. I gave a very careful and anxious examination to the matter and made a report allowing a small portion of the amount claimed, I think perhaps $30,000 or $40,000; I do not recollect the sum, but it was a very much smaller sum than was claimed. Then after my report the claimant thought I had omitted some considerations which ought to have been weighed in his favor and desired a hearing, and on a hearing I became satisfied that there were some equitable considerations which had not had their full weight, and so reported to the committee, and the committee agreed to allow the claimant a larger sum, I think about $80,000, if I recollect aright. The Senator from Mississippi will correct me if I state the sum wrong.

Mr. GEORGE. About $80,000.

Mr. HOAR. That bill (and this present bill is the same) being pending, allowing $80,000, the Southern claims bill, the general large omnibus bill, was reported to the Senate, and this claim was put upon it in the Senate as an amendment, and it went to the House and the House struck it out. Then there was a committee of conference, of which I was not a member, and that committee of conference agreed on $30,000.

If that was intended by those conferees as a complete satisfaction of the claimant's claim, the House in the first place denying that anything was due, it seems to me the bill ought not to be pressed further for any sum. If, however, as the claimant informs me he thinks was the fact, the committee of conference intended to make this payment without prejudice to his further claim, though I never knew of such a thing being done before, then the bill ought to be amended by striking out what he has received and be considered by the Senate for the balance. I have no knowledge myself about what governed the committee of conference. The chairman of the Committee on Claims, who was a member of it, will be able to state that, and I shall be governed in my vote by his statement.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in response to the inquiry made by the Senator from Massachusetts in reference to the action of the conference committee, I will state that I was a member of that committee. I do not know what other members of the committee considered with reference to the sum that was finally agreed upon, but I know what my own action was, and also what I considered as the result of the action of the committee.

I regarded the claim as reported by the Senator from Massachusetts, after a very careful examination, as just to the full amount reported by him. The parties were in necessitous circumstances. The House had stricken out the whole item in the bill which had been sent to them by the Senate, and my action was governed solely by the hope to get a part of a claim which I regarded as just, which the Committee on Claims regarded as just, and which the Senate by unanimous consent pronounced to be just. That was my reason for my action in the matter. What others may have thought I do not know. I am sure of one thing, however, Mr. President, that there was no express agreement made by the committee as a committee that this small sum which was accepted should be considered as a settlement and satisfaction of the whole claim.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I was a member of the conference committee on this bill referred to. I suppose it is proper to state that a majority of the House conferees were very strongly opposed to allowing any part of the claim. The Nutt claim, as has been stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, was put upon the general bill for the payment of claims allowed by the Department during the preceding year. There were in that bill probably a thousand claims, some of them very small, and, so far as the committee was aware, all meritorious. Unless the bill were passed at the last session those parties would be kept out of their money for at least one year longer. After a great deal of argument back and forth between the Senate and the House conferees, it was finally agreed that the sum of $30,000, if that were the sum, should be inserted in the bill for the Nutt claim.

I agree with the Senator from Mississippi, who was also a member of the conference committee, that there was no express agreement on the part of the committee that that sum should be taken and considered in full payment or settlement of the claim; but I understood—I do not know what the understanding of the other members of the committee was—that it was a full and final settlement and satisfaction of the claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. When was the bill passed; at the last session?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. At the last session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. July 5, 1884.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. But I certainly did not expect that the Nutt claim would ever again be pressed in Congress for any sum whatever.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is the amount?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is very large—several hundred thousand dollars—perhaps $250,000. There was a part payment made upon the claim under an appropriation made by Congress ten or fifteen years ago. It was not stated at the time that it was in part payment of the claim, but it was taken and the money paid over to the claimant, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, the claim presented in the last Congress was for a large amount, $200,000 or $300,000. After carefully considering it, the Committee on Claims reported in favor of the payment of $80,000. That is the bill which is now on the Calendar. But the Committee on Claims became satisfied that this bill would not be reached, and if it were reached in the Senate it certainly would not be in the House, and for the purpose of bringing the matter to a final determination the Committee on Claims, when the general bill for the payment of Southern claims was before the Senate, put this bill on as an amendment, and it was the only additional amount that was placed upon the bill.

I myself am not in favor of allowing anything further on this claim, and am in favor of indefinitely postponing the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in view of the position taken by the chairman of the committee, and also in view of the provisions of the act itself, to which my attention has just been called by the Chair, to this effect—

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the several persons in this act named, the several sums mentioned herein, the same being in full for, and the receipt of the same to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of, the several claims examined and allowed by the proper accounting officers under the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, since January 6, 1883—

I will not now press the matter. I would be glad, however, if the Senator from Wisconsin would, instead of having the bill indefinitely postponed, make a motion to lay it upon the table.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Suppose the Senator from Mississippi objects to the further consideration of the bill, and let it go on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. I will do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is objected to.

LOST LAKE AND MOUNT HOOD IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1303) to grant the right of way over the public lands of the United States to the Lost Lake and Mount Hood Improvement Company.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any written report with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not.

Mr. DOLPH. There is no written report. The only purpose of the bill is to grant a right of way to a wagon-road company to build a wagon-road in the Cascade Mountains from the gap in the mountains through which the Columbia River passes up to Mount Hood and to a lake called Lost Lake.

Mr. COCKRELL. How wide do they want that road?

Mr. DOLPH. The bill calls for a right of way three hundred feet in width.

Mr. COCKRELL. A pretty large wagon-road to be kept up at private expense.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose the Senator understands that a grant of a right of way would confer no right upon the company except to build and maintain the road within the limits. The United States, in such a case, remains the owner of the fee and the owner of everything on the top of the soil and under it except what is necessary to be used.

Mr. COCKRELL. But it prevents anybody else from occupying the same surface, does it not?

Mr. DOLPH. No; any other road can be built across it or along it; but, if the Senator will wait a moment, I propose to offer some amendments. Although the bill was reported by the unanimous direction of the committee, after consultation with my colleague who is upon the Committee on Public Lands, I have concluded to offer some amendments which will obviate the objection now suggested, and which I will have read at the desk. I will also say that a much greater width of right of way will be required to build a road through mountains of the character of the mountains through which this road will run than to build an ordinary wagon-road over prairies or agricultural lands. I offer the amendments, and when they are made I think there will no objection to the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the first amendment proposed by Mr. DOLPH, which was to insert, in line 8, after "State," the words:

Of such width as may be necessary for the purpose of the construction and maintenance of said wagon-road not less than sixty nor more than——

Mr. DOLPH. I think that obviates the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is situated in Oregon, is it not?

Mr. DOLPH. In Oregon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it is the first instance I have known of a private corporation coming to get the right of way for a mere public road. It is not a railroad; and I should like to know some necessity for this. I should like to know why it is that this company wants to get a right of way from the United States especially. It is organized under the laws of Oregon, and I suppose nobody on the part of the United States will say a word if they go to work and construct a public road for the benefit of the public over the public lands. I never have heard of such an objection in any State of the West; I have never heard of the United States officers objecting to the construction of a public road over the public lands. Everybody travels over them at will and pleasure, and I do not think there will be any objection made to a road over them. I should like to know why it is that this company comes in here asking this special privilege.

Mr. DOLPH. The State has no power to grant a right of way over public lands of the United States. The probability is that the entire line of this road will be over the public lands and over unsurveyed lands, because, as I have stated, it is to be constructed through the Cascade Mountains up to the foot of Mount Hood, if constructed at all.

I will state that it has been the practice to grant not only rights of way, but to make grants of public land for the purpose of constructing wagon-roads. Several grants of that kind have been made to the State of Oregon and in other States. In the present case no grant of land whatever is asked, but simply the right of way of sufficient width for the construction of the road. The amendment now suggested limits that width to sixty feet where that is sufficient, but allows it to go to the extent of three hundred feet where the road is to be built on the side of the mountain or in other places where it is necessary to occupy the entire three hundred feet to construct the road.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the distance?

Mr. DOLPH. It may be twenty miles. Perhaps my colleague can state. It is, as I have stated, through the Cascade Mountains from the Columbia River to Mount Hood.

Mr. SLATER. If my colleague will allow me a moment I will say that I am not familiar with that locality, but, as I understand, the proposed road runs from the Columbia River into the Cascade Mountains beyond the settlements.

I can see no evil in the bill itself. I do not know the ground and do not know what effect it may have, but according to my knowledge of the State I should suppose the company could get the right of way by usage, if not otherwise, from the State itself. I know we have many public roads in that way and many roads controlled by corporations that are over the public lands. I know where questions arising therefrom have got into the courts the courts have held that the right could be so acquired. I can say that I see nothing in the bill that can be reasonably objected to. It does not create a corporation, but simply grants a right of way to a corporation already in existence in the State of Oregon to build a road through the public lands of a certain width.

Mr. INGALLS. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] informs us that this road or proposed right of way is over the public lands of the United States that are unsurveyed and extends upward to the snow-line of Mount Hood. If these lands are public lands and unsurveyed they are unpeopled; there can be no population there. I assume that above the snow-line on Mount Hood there are no extensive improvements, that there can be no commerce, that there are no manufactures, that there are no inhabitants, and I confess that in the light of the statements made by the Senator from Oregon I am unable to see any good reason why a right of way three hundred feet wide should be granted through a region where there are no people to a point where population is impossible. Might there not be extensive groves of timber in that region, to which this would give the people in the low lands more convenient and ready access?

I hope that before we are called upon to act in this way with regard to the public domain, to endow a private corporation with this extraordinary right under the peculiar circumstances disclosed by the statement of the Senator from Oregon, we shall have more definite and specific information than is conveyed to us by the terms of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has once spoken on this question. Under the eighth rule he is not entitled to speak again.

Mr. HAWLEY. I hope he will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Oregon be allowed to proceed.

Mr. DOLPH. Have I spoken on the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood from the Senator from Connecticut who had occupied the chair that the Senator had once spoken. Is there objection to the Senator from Oregon proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not understand that I was concluded from again occupying the floor when I spoke on offering the amendment.

This is a very little bill. Congress has been in the habit of making, as I said before, grants of the right of way for the purpose of constructing railroads and wagon-roads, and of making grants of land to aid in the construction of both railroads and wagon-roads. Here is a corporation under the laws of Oregon that comes to Congress and asks that it may have a grant of the right of way only over the public lands for the purpose of constructing a road. The bill was favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands after it was scrutinized there. After consultation with my colleagues, I have offered an amendment in regard to the right of way which will restrict it to sixty feet and to so much additional land, not exceeding three hundred feet, as is absolutely necessary for the construction of the road. Now comes the Senator from Kansas and suggests that there is no necessity for the construction of this road. I do not know that the Senate ought to constitute itself the guardian of the people who propose to construct this road——

Mr. INGALLS. We are the guardians of the public domain, however.

Mr. DOLPH. I will come to that in a moment—and say that because there is no apparent necessity for constructing this road we shall prevent parties from going on the public lands and constructing it. Mount Hood is a place of public resort. There is a lake lying near the snow line on Mount Hood, mentioned in this bill, which may become a place of public resort. I suppose that the parties who projected this road desired it for the purpose of reaching some place of that kind, so as to accommodate the Senator from Kansas or any other persons who shall hereafter visit the State of Oregon and who shall desire to visit Mount Hood. It is proposed to accommodate them by constructing a road over which they can do so. Certainly, if it is not likely to be needed, it will not be buiit.

So far as the effect on the public domain is concerned, as I said before, this bill will only grant a right of way over the public land. It does not grant the timber; it does not grant the stone or the minerals; it does not grant anything except what may be necessary for the construction of the road, or to be removed from the land in the construction of the road, nor will it give this company any exclusive right over this ground.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator why it does not give an exclusive right. Nobody else is granted the privilege, and this company has it therefore solely.

Mr. DOLPH. Because Congress by this act will only grant to the company the right to use this ground for the specific purpose of building their road over it. Whenever any other road can be built over it without interfering with that right; whenever any other company——

Mr. COCKRELL. Would not Congress have to grant the right to anybody else? Can anybody else possess any right there unless Congress grants it by specific act?

Mr. DOLPH. That does not constitute a monopoly in this company. Congress can grant the right of way to other roads, or any other road may be laid out over this right of way under an existing law. The fact that the right is granted to this company for the purpose of building this road does not give the company a monopoly.

As I said before, the grantee would not be entitled to anything growing on the land or found under the earth's surface that is not necessary for the construction of the road, and if it should afford the means of access to timber lands, I can see no objection to that if they are purchased under the laws for the disposal of the public domain.

As I before remarked, this is a very little bill. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands, and I can see no objection to it. I do not see any good reason why objection should be raised to it.

Mr. MCPHERSON rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Oregon before he takes his seat answer a question I desire to propound? The right of way three hundred feet in width, as I understand, is asked for in this bill to be granted to a private company. The meaning of it is that after they locate their road they have possession and have all the rights granted and rights which can not be interfered with except by compensation to this company. We will suppose—I do not say that is the case, though I have a case in my mind which may perhaps resemble it—we will suppose the road is in a valley, the only possible route for a future railroad to develop that country unless the railroad could be built in some other location at great cost. Would it not be in the power of this wagon-road company to so take possession of the narrow valley through which a railroad might desire to locate in time as to require large compensation from the railroad to be built for the use of the land on which it is located?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Oregon has again expired.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not say that is the case in this instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey is now speaking in his own right.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have not got through with my question. I only ask the Senator from Oregon, if he will be good enough to give me the information, if that would not be the result of granting this right of way of 300 feet in width?

Mr. DOLPH. May I answer the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is not entitled to occupy the floor without unanimous consent.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. May he not answer in the time of the Senator from New Jersey the question that Senator propounded?

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Oregon may have his time extended five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Oregon be allowed to continue for five minutes. If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. DOLPH. I will answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey by saying that in the first place there never can be any railroad built over any part of the lands which will be occupied by this right of way; in the second place, that by the act of March 3, 1875, granting to railroads the right of way, the precise case is provided for which is suggested by the Senator. In that act it is provided that if it is necessary in constructing a railroad through a narrow gorge or mountain pass to occupy a wagon-road, the ground may be occupied and the railroad company shall construct a wagon-road in place of the one occupied outside of the railroad. So I answer by saying that in the first place this land will never be wanted for a railroad; and in the second place, if it should be, the railroad company could occupy it and reconstruct the wagon-road under existing law.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I consented that this bill should be reported, but it does not seem to me that it involves the question which is suggested here. We have on the statute-book of the United States a general law which grants to all railroad companies which were then or might subsequently be incorporated the right of way through the public domain for the purpose of building railroads. I presume if this had been a bill to grant the right of way to a railroad there would have been no discussion about it whatever and no objection. In Oregon, by reason of the topography of that country, there are localities that can not be reached by railroad. Congress recognized this fact at an early period and made grants of land to companies to construct wagon-roads in the then accessible portions of the Territory of Oregon. There are portions of the country which are not yet reached by wagon-roads to which that class of roads can now be built with profit, but whether with profit or not is a question, I take it, to be settled in the first instance by the companies seeking to build the roads. This wagon-road, as all other wagon-roads in that country and all railroads, will be the precursor of settlement; and if the adventurous people who are seeking this privilege of building a road to stop at Mount Hood or elsewhere in the unoccupied portions of Oregon, and thereby invite new settlements at an expense to themselves, undertake a work which is not compensated by reasonable profit, that will be their own lookout, but it will be for the benefit of the State and of the localities through which the road is built. It is a privilege which I think should not be withheld, but it should be granted cheerfully as one calculated to develop the remaining portions of the public domain in Oregon, make them accessible, and at the same time contribute to the convenience and comfort of the people of that State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend that by striking out "not less than sixty nor more than three hundred," and inserting "not less than sixty nor more than one hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed at the end of the amendment to insert "one hundred feet;" so as to read:

Not less than sixty nor more than one hundred feet in width.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems from this bill that there is now a public highway there. This raises a very interesting question. There is already a road there that the public probably are using, and this is to be located right on the top of that, and then this company will determine who shall travel there. It is an exclusive right, because no one else can go there without a special authorization from Congress. Therefore, so far as this bill is concerned, as to everybody else it is exclusive, and this company is to take possession of probably the only practicable route up to the snow-line on this mountain, and may drive from the route now used every one who may wish to frequent that place.

I can not see any reason for this. Here is a private corporation which can now go on and build roads, as every man knows, over the public domain; it is done in all the Western States. It can build a road there and nobody will interfere with it; but it wants an exclusive right. There must be something at that point on the mountains to induce them to want to build a road there. There must be expected to be some travel up the mountain or something to bring down from the mountain, or they would not want to construct such a road. However that may be, they want an exclusive right. I confess that I can see no reason on earth for granting them the right. We do not know whether they have any capital or not; we do not know whether they will build this road, and it may be simply a grant to prevent any one else from going on; it may be a grant to drive the public from a road already used. It ought to be confined down to a narrow limit. As it is now over six hundred acres of land are given to this company. There is no reason why it should be given, and I hope that it will be restricted to not less than sixty nor more than three hundred feet wide. No public highway is ever wider than that, and there is no occasion for it. Then we should have some amendment in regard to the length of time they shall have to construct this road.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose I am entitled to speak on the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. There might be a great many things true in regard to this bill and the objects of the promoters of this enterprise, but I suppose something is due to the statements made by the Senators from the State. There is no wagon-road running in the direction in which this wagon-road is projected. The wagon-road mentioned in the bill is a wagon-road down at the station of the road of the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company, which runs down the Columbia River through the gap in the mountains. That is the starting point. From that point up through the Cascade Mountains to the snow-line of Mount Hood it is proposed to construct this wagon-road. Mount Hood is over 11,000 feet high above the level of the sea, and the mountains between Mount Hood and the Columbia River are of various heights, from 5,000 to 7,000 or 8,000 feet. This road will have to be constructed along the declivity of the mountains, and there are places there where it would be impossible to construct a road with a right of way of only one hundred feet in width. The road can not be graded on the side of the mountain so as to obtain a sufficient width of road without disturbing more than one hundred feet of the surface, and I hope the right of way will not be limited to one hundred feet.

I repeat again, this road will not occupy the ground already occupied by any other road, nor will the bill if passed grant an exclusive right, nor will it grant any other right in the land within the limits of the right of way except the right to construct and maintain the road.

Mr. PLUMB. I want to call the attention of the Senate, and especially the Senator from Missouri, to the act granting the right of way over the public lands for the benefit of railroads. Chapter 152 of the act of 1875 provides:

That the right of way through the public lands of the United States is hereby granted to any railroad company duly organized under the laws of any State or Territory, except the District of Columbia, or by the Congress of the United States, which shall have filed with the Secretary of the Interior a copy of its articles of incorporation, and due proofs of its organization under the same, to the extent of one hundred feet on each side of the central line of said road—

That is, a right of way of two hundred feet in width—

also the right to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road material, earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, not to exceed in amount twenty acres for each station, to the extent of one station for each ten miles of its road.

For reasons which the Senator from Oregon has stated there may be places where the limit fixed by the Senator from Missouri would not answer the purpose at all. For instance, on the side of a mountain a cut may be necessary where it would take two hundred or three hundred feet in order to get a track wide enough for a wagon to pass and make the cutting on the side of the mountain to carry the material forward to make the basis for the wagon-track.

I hope the Senator from Missouri and the Senate also will consider this question not in a spirit of captiousness but in that catholic spirit in which matters of public enterprise which have not called on the Treasury for money to aid them, but only ask the poor privilege of entering the public lands, have usually been treated. Without this, of course the road can not be built. Without this, every person engaged in building the road on the public lands would be a trespasser, and could be so treated by any one who should make an entry of any portion of this public domain and attempt to use his power for any purpose of delay or obstruction or blackmail. Therefore this has become necessary; but, like all other works of this kind, if another public-improvement company, organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, shall have reason to condemn the use of this track for public purposes, I suppose it can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I now offer another amendment. I move to add to the bill:

And said road shall be completed within ten years from the date of the passage of this act; and as to all uncompleted portions of this road, at the expiration of ten years from the date of the passage of this act, all rights granted to the said company under this act shall be forfeited.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to add another section in the following words:

SEC. 2. Congress reserves the right to alter, modify, amend, or repeal this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

On the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading a division was called for, which resulted—ayes 22, noes 3; no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 39, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allison,	Hale,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Blair,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Sheffield,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Coke,	Hoar,	Pike,	Slater,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Jackson,	Plumb,	Vest,
Cullom,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Dolph,	Lapham,	Sabin,	Walker,
Frye,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,	Wilson.
George,	Manderson,	Sawyer,

NAYS—6.

Brown,	Cockrell,	Hampton,	Harris.
Butler,	Edmunds,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,
Bayard,	Farley,	Kenna,	Palmer,
Beck,	Garland,	Lamar,	Pendleton,
Bowen,	Gibson,	Logan,	Ransom,
Call,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Riddleberger.
Camden,	Groome,	Mahone,	Vance,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hill,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams.
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Miller of N. Y.,

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business coming over from yesterday, being the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Mississippi who is entitled to the floor [Mr. GEORGE] to yield to me that I may report back a House resolution favorably from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent to be allowed to make a report at this time. The resolution reported by him will be read for information.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Saturday, December 20, 1884, they stand adjourned until Monday, the 5th day of January, 1885.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, let that go over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4085) for the relief of Juliet H. Palmer; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that in the print of the pending amendment there is an error in respect of the first proposition offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator, which will be read. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks the Senator from Mississippi to yield until the amendment is read.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after section 1, as additional sections, the following:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various questions relating to commerce between the States, and especially in the matter of the transportation thereof, so far as the same may be necessary to the establishment of a just system of regulations for the government of the same; and said commission, in the prosecution of its inquiries, is authorized to visit such sections of the United States as it may deem necessary to the most effective discharge of its duties.

SEC. 3. That said commission shall make to Congress a complete report of the results of its investigation, and the testimony taken in the course of the same, not later than the first Monday of December, 1885; and it shall accompany said report with a bill presenting a just and comprehensive code for the regulation of the transportation of commerce among the States, which said bill shall embrace provisions for establishing a system of both maximum and minimum charges for transportation, and for the preservation of free competition within the limits so fixed; for the prohibition of discriminations of any kind whatever, either in favor of or against cities, towns, or other localities, whether the same be competing or non-competing points, and for applying the same principle to transportation for individuals, firms, associations, or corporations in all matters relating to commerce among the States; for the preservation and enforcement of the right of shippers to select the lines and parts of lines over which their shipments shall pass, to the end that said commerce among the States may avail itself of the all-rail or part-rail and part-water routes of the country; for the prevention of such pooling arrangements and agreements to refrain from just competition as may tend to impose unreasonable burdens upon said commerce among the States; and for the protection of said commerce against unjust exactions based on a class of securities commonly denominated "watered stocks;" and said commission in conducting said investigation and in the preparation of said bill shall be guided by such rules of action as will be fair, just, and equitable toward all of the interests involved, whether the same be private, public, or corporate, connected with the subject of commerce among the States; and said commission shall cause 2,000 copies of said report, testimony, and bill to be printed by the Public Printer for the use of Congress by the date hereinbefore fixed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, no subject over which we have jurisdiction is more important than that to which this bill relates, and none more difficult to the conscintious legislator. The interest involved concerns not only those persons who have made investment also in railroads, but the hole mass of our people. There is no subject on which wise, temperate, yet effective legislation is more demanded by the public interests. Ill-advised, crude, or passionate legislation must be avoided. I am deeply impressed with the embarrassments surrounding the subject and with my own inability to solve the many problems it presents. We have no precedent in our legislation to guide us. The power this bill seeks to exercise has hitherto lain dormant in the Constitution, but I do not doubt that it exists. At all events, I shall not discuss that question now. The occasion and necessity for its exercise are of recent growth.

At the formation of the Constitution the means of transportation and intercourse in interstate commerce mainly consisted in the navigation of our rivers, lakes, and the ocean on our borders. That this navigation should be free, free to all, free to an open and unrestricted competition by all, was one of the main and most beneficent ends sought to be attained by the Constitution. Intercourse and transportation between the States were placed under the jurisdiction and control of the Federal Government in order that there should be no unjust discriminations or restrictions under the sanction or cover of State authority, or through the instrumentality of State action. The first attempt to interfere with this unrestricted freedom and to grant a monopoly on our navigable rivers was promptly decided to be unconstitutional in Gibbons vs. Ogden in the year 1824. The principles then settled have again and again been reaffirmed and applied in numerous cases, and have received the sanction and approval of the country.

Since then a new instrumentality of interstate commerce has grown up, under State authority, with State charters; and it has so grown and expanded that now it has become the principal means of interstate transportation and interstate intercourse. And it continues to expand yearly, having now reached the enormous dimensions of about 125,000 miles of railroad track; and it is destined at no distant day to grow with our increasing population to much larger dimensions.

So much of the commerce over these roads as is interstate, or foreign, this bill, with others which have been introduced, seeks to bring under the regulation of Congress.

The total mileage of railroads in the United States in 1883 was 121,592, of which 6,753 miles were constructed in that year. I have no later statistics. The total capital stock in that year of all railroads in the United States amounted to $3,708,060,583, and their total indebtedness, funded and floating, was $3,787,410,728, making a total investment, or apparent investment, in these roads of $7,495,471,311, an amount equal to 45 per cent. of the total assessments of all the property in the Union in 1880. In the last-named year there were 12,331 clerks employed in railroad offices, and their other employés amounted to 236,058, and in addition there were 2,069 officers of these companies. To these may be added officers and employés in express companies, mainly engaged in railroad transportation, making a grand total of persons employed in and about transportation on railroads of 265,318. The increase in number of these employés in the decade from 1870 to 1880 was over 60 per cent. At the same rate of increase (60 per cent. for ten years) the number now would be about 329,000.

These statistics show the magnitude of the interests involved directly in these companies, and the large number of persons also directly interested in them for their daily employment. Besides these the number also directly interested in them as stockholders, creditors, attorneys, and persons having arrangements for discriminations in their favor in freight and passenger charges must also be very large. I have no means of ascertaining their number. I think I would not err on the side of exaggeration if I were to assume their number to be at least one-half million—probably the number is much larger.

Any legislation we may adopt on the subject-matter of this bill will more or less affect this large pecuniary interest, and will also affect or will be thought to affect the interests, or at all events the prejudices, of most of this large number of persons. This consideration should admonish us to proceed with deliberation and care in any legislation we may adopt; and it should also remind us of the obstacles which are thrown in the way of any legislation whatever, however just and conservative.

On the other hand, the interests demanding proper legislation are immense. The tonnage moved by all these roads in 1883 amounted to 400,453,439, which, at $25 per ton, the valuation assumed by Poor's Manual, a very high authority, amounts to over $10,000,000,000. For carrying this the railroads received $549,756,695, being about one-third of the whole currency in circulation in this country; their receipts from all sources of railroad traffic being $823,772,924, or about one-half of the whole currency of the United States. The total number of passengers carried by the railroads in the United States in 1883 was 312,686,641, being about six times our population. While it is clear that many of these persons were transported several times, yet we know also that a large portion of our people, largely more than one-half, were transported at least once. There is scarcely a human being in the Union whose interests are not more or less affected by the charges of railroad companies on either passengers or freights, and the mode in which such transportation is effected.

Omitting reference to minor interests, I will call special attention now to the immense stake which the farmers of the country have in a proper regulation of interstate traffic, and especially the grain and cotton-growers and meat-producers. All these commodities are produced here largely in excess of the demand for consumption by our people. In all such cases the price of the product is fixed by the foreign market to which the excess must be shipped. This foreign price is fixed by the demand and supply in the world at large. The price, therefore, which the producer in any country will receive will necessarily be less than the foreign price, as fixed by the world's demand, by so much as the cost of transporting the product from the fields on which it is raised to the regulating market of the world; in which cost are included transportation as the main item and all other charges of middlemen.

The exports from the United States of agricultural products for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, consisting chiefly of cotton, animals, breadstuffs, and provisions, amounted to $536,315,318 in value, while all our other exports, excluding gold and silver and including products of mines and forests, amounted only to $188,649,534—agriculture furnishing about two-thirds of all, except gold and silver. The net price which the farmers received for this large amount of their products was fixed by the rates paid for transportation over the railroads in the United States; and not only this, the net price they received for all their products transported from State to State, or wholly in one State, being their proportion of the four hundred millions and over of tons of freight transported in the year over railroads, is fixed in the same manner. How much this may be I am unable to state definitely. But when we reflect that all the population of our large cities are wholly fed by our agricultural products, and that a very large percentage of the food supply of the rural population, especially in the South, is furnished from other States, we may well conceive that the transportation of agricultural products over our railroads is immense.

While the price at home to the producer is thus fixed by the foreign market, it by no means follows that the consumer in our own country gets the benefit of this low price. For it so happens, under the rule adopted by the railroad companies of charging "all the traffic will bear" between non-competitive points, that while the producer gets far less than the value of his goods the consumer pays an exorbitant price, and the difference goes to the carrier or middlemen. The practice of high local freights and differential rates as against the small shipper has prevented all commerce and traffic between the producer and consumer and made necessary the concentration of these products in large cities, where they become the subject of speculation in futures and gambling by corners, whereby the price is run up or down at the will of large speculators. From some observation of these matters I feel justified in saying that high local rates and discrimination against retailers have caused the consumers in the South dependent on railroad transportation to pay higher for the wheat, corn, flour, and meat of the West than those products are sold for in Europe. And thus these high charges rob with an equal hand both producer and consumer.

These facts give us some faint idea of the immense power which the railroad companies of the Union have over the fortunes and welfare of that portion of our population—about half of it—who are engaged in agriculture; a power so great, so absolute, that it enables these companies to fix at their own will the proportions of these products which shall be taken by them or left to the producer. As the share or charge of the railroad companies goes up the share of the farmer goes down, and vice versa. The railroad companies thus become the partners of every farmer in the Union, with autocratic power to say what shall be the separate share of each, without consultation with the other associate.

The partnership may well be called leonine in which the lion's share is at the absolute dictation of that regal beast as represented by the transportation companies. Such a relation between the two parties is condemned by both human and divine laws; yet in spite of this it exists here to-day all over the land. The common law declares that the charges of the common carrier shall be reasonable, yet in actual practice the reasonableness of the charge is the unbridled discretion of the carrier. The rule adopted by the carrier as the guide for rates has no reference whatever to the cost of transport or the acquisition of a reasonable gain upon his actual investment. The rule is to charge "all the traffic will bear," which means that the charges go to that point where in the judgment of the carrier he would lose money if they were still further advanced. Hence the excessive charges which have characterized railroad transportation in this country, except only between competing points, and there they are reasonable only where there has been no opportunity for combination between the carriers.

As a cover, sir, for these charges the railroad companies have invented and pursued a system by which stocks are watered, and their debts have been enormously increased as to their nominal amount; and railroads which under exceptional and sometimes under dishonest circumstances have cost greatly more than they are now worth or would now cost are made to earn dividends on this dead excess.

I have some statistics which will be interesting and instructive on this point. The total of stock and debts of the railroad companies in the United States in the year 1879 was $4,872,017,517, being at the rate of $57,730 per mile; in 1880 it was $5,402,038,257, or $58,624 per mile; in 1881 it was $6,278,565,052, or $60,645 per mile; in 1882 it was $7,016,750,109, or $61,303 per mile; in 1883 it was $7,495,471,331, or $62,176 per mile.

The Senate will observe that for these five years there has been a steady increase in each year over the preceding in the stock and debts of the railroad companies, until in 1883 they amounted to $62,176 per mile, a sum more than double what the best railroad authorities estimate as the cost of the roads. And yet since 1879 the cost of construction has steadily decreased, and during the last three years all materials for construction and maintenance have been unusually low, and no expensive lines have in that time been built. This great outrage upon the people will be made still more clear when we consider the increase in debts and liabilities of the year 1883 over 1882 and the mileage constructed during the former year. This increase was $477,721,202, and the mileage constructed amounted to 6,753, the increase being at the rate of $70,727 for each mile constructed. These figures are suggestive both of watered stock and of fraudulent or improvident debts to a very large amount; for it is almost certain that the cost could not fairly have exceeded $30,000 per mile. The statistics for the three years 1881, 1882, and 1883 show a similar result of excessive debts and liabilities as compared with the cost of the constructed roads in these years. In that time there were constructed 28,405 miles of railroad, which at $30,000 per mile would cost $852,150,000, yet the increase in capital and debts in those years was $2,093,433,054, largely more than double the cost.

Under the rule of charging "all the traffic will bear," adopted by the railroad companies, the people of the United States are made to pay profits on this enormous excess over the true value of the roads. And here I will notice a fallacy sometimes advanced in support of these high charges, namely, that the railroad companies should have profit on the amount actually expended many years ago, when the cost of construction greatly exceeded the present cost, notwithstanding the subsequent large and permanent decrease in the cost; that is, if a road many years ago actually cost $50,000 per mile, but owing to the general depreciation and fall in cost of construction it would now cost only $30,000 per mile to duplicate it, still the company may rightfully charge the public such rates as will be a fair profit on its actual excessive cost. If this were allowed, Mr. President, it is the only case in business affairs in which the public are called on to make good a depreciation in the value of property. Whoever has built a house, or a machine, or a vessel, and whoever has purchased any species of property at times when the cost of these things was high, is bound to submit to such loss as is occasioned by a cheapening of the process of construction or by a depreciation in the price given. Nothing can be justly said to be worth more than the cost of duplicating it.

If the owner of depreciated property attaches to it a pretium affectionis; if he will cherish the delusion that while all things else are subject to the law of change, his property, with all its incidents and accidents, is immutable, there can be no objection to it, so far as he is content to consider himself worth so much when he is only worth half that amount; but when he, having a public duty to perform for a reasonable charge, insists on his delusions as realities, insists that the public shall buy them and pay for them in real money and at his fancied valuation, I submit he is guilty of criminal extortion, unless excused on account of lunacy.

Delusions can not be coined into money or converted into actual property. The potentiality of redemption in coin, in real money, is even essential to the value of a greenback note.

This fallacy which I have thus exploded, if allowed by us as the true rule for the regulation of freights, would bind the people of the United States to the hard circumstances of the dead past, and prevent them from reaping any of the advantages arising from the inventions of the age and the cheapening of processes in production and construction which in all other walks of life have so benefited them and the rest of mankind.

It is thus seen that the basis on which the charges rest is wrong, exceeding the true basis by about double. The charges are also excessive, and will remain so unless Congress shall prevent it by legislation.

The next cause of complaint is, that these companies make undue and unjust discrimination in their rates, not only as between places but as between persons in the same place. The power to do this is dangerous and its exercise exceedingly unjust. By it a railroad official can build up and does build up his friends and favorites and destroys their rivals. By it also cities and towns in which the officials are interested, or for which they have a partiality, are also built up, and rival towns and cities crippled and destroyed.

There are provisions in the bill reported by the committee intended to correct these evils in part and to prevent unreasonable charges and to prevent discrimination between persons. There is no provision to prevent discrimination between places, though in my judgment it is equally important.

Very little can be accomplished by the provision intended to secure reasonable rates owing to the absence of a provision preventing what is called "pooling," and this is one of the most serious defects of the bill.

The mere enactment that charges shall be reasonable is of no value. It merely declares what the common law already is. To make it of any value whatever there must be provisions which can be enforced, and which when enforced will compel reasonable charges by the railroad companies. It is utterly impracticable to enforce this provision as it stands in the bill. If a suit be brought for a violation of this provision, by what standard shall the court and jury be guided in measuring the reasonableness of the charge? The bill furnishes none. If we resort to the common law as it was applied and enforced in cases of other common carriers, we find that the standard there was the reasonable and customary charges of the whole body of carriers doing the same business. That presupposes that there were a body of carriers engaged in like business, and engaged also in competition with each other in it. The standard by which the charges of one was measured was and could be only the average of the prices charged by the others.

No court ever undertook to look into the amount of the carrier's investment to ascertain the cost of doing the work and then fixing a reasonable profit as the measure of the charge. Such a proceeding is beyond the province of a court, and is a pure invasion of the domain of active business. Where competition is free, it is certain, by an inexorable law of trade, that exorbitant charges and unreasonable profits will be reduced to the proper standard by such additional investments in the business as will make it no more profitable than capital and labor employed in other callings. This competition will soon regulate the prices on the basis of a reasonable profit; and this can be done in no other way. In the same way charges by railroads will be made reasonable between points where there is free competition, unless there should be combination between the companies to prevent it. If competition be free and there are several railroads, then the excessive and unreasonable charges of one may by a court be ascertained by comparison with the charges of the others for similar service. If there be a combination between the companies to fix rates, by pooling or otherwise, then it is clear that unless we adopt the rates thus fixed as reasonable there can be no other measure.

To adopt the rates thus fixed is to leave the shipper as much at the mercy of the companies as if only one existed. It would be but the will of two conspirators instead of the will of one. The combination would eliminate from the charge all consideration as to the smallest sum at which the work could be profitably performed, and substitute for this essential element the will and greed only of the companies which by the combination had secured themselves from the effects of the law of competition. It is thus clear that the provision of the bill prohibiting unreasonable charges is of itself of no value, mere brutum fulmen, if there be no sure standard provided capable of easy application by a jury by which the charges can be measured.

The just provision in the bill against discrimination between shippers will not furnish this standard, for if the general charge be so much to the public, and there be a less charge to one or more favorites of the company, the presumption would be rather that these favorites got their freights too low than that the general charge was excessive and unreasonable. Besides, the provision against discrimination is not based on the idea that others than favorites are charged too high, but that favors injurious to business and the public should not be allowed. Nor will a remedy be found in the provision for a commission, for the commission is not authorized to determine and fix what are reasonable charges. They have no judicial power; they can settle nothing; they can determine nothing; they can order nothing except alone to direct the district attorney to institute in a court a profitless and expensive lawsuit in the name of a private party to see if possibly the railroad company can be convicted of making an unreasonable charge with no standard whatever by which the issue can be determined.

Mr. President, this is so clear, that I wonder why the committee deemed it necessary to introduce into the bill a provision against unreasonable charges, without at the same time incorporating in it the only provision yet devised, so far as I know, which could make it effective. It is the provision incorporated in the House bill and also in Judge REAGAN'S substitute prohibiting pooling. I deem such a provision essential to any bill which undertakes to deal with this subject.

That provision about pooling, as contained in the House bill, is as follows:

And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons carrying property as aforesaid to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, by dividing between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion of them.

I shall not now discuss this provision at any great length. What I have already said in relation to competition expresses in a great measure what I consider as the necessity for this prohibition against pooling. It seems to be absolutely essential to any effective legislation in restraint of unreasonable charges. I am unable to perceive any valid objection, either as to its justice or its policy. That there can be no real competition, and by it a just fixing of reasonable rates is beyond controversy if competing railroad companies are allowed to combine in a pooling of freights in whole or in part. That such combination will take place in the absence of strong and effective prohibitory legislation is certain. The argument that pooling is necessary to prevent an undue cutting of rates will not stand the test of examination. That railroad companies organized for the purpose of making money are exempt from the ordinary influences which control men in business, and will therefore pursue a policy which will result in loss and financial ruin, is incomprehensible.

The assumption that these companies, if they are not allowed to combine in aggression against the public, will necessarily resort to measures for mutual destruction, is contrary to our experience of the motives and actions of mankind. In all other business there is competition without loss or destruction. Merchants compete; manufacturers compete; all other common carriers but railroads compete, with the result of cheap goods and cheap service to the public and reasonable pecuniary gains to themselves. There is no reason why railroad companies should not do likewise. If they will not, if they refuse to obey the laws which govern mankind in their business relations, this willful misconduct on their part gives them no claim on us to relieve them from just restraint necessary for the public good. The argument plainly stated is this: that they must be allowed to combine in order to extort unreasonable charges from the public, lest, being disappointed in this, they turn upon each other for mutual destruction.

I admit, sir, that they are guilty of a reckless disregard of their own interests, beyond other men, in their efforts to destroy and cripple each other when they have been unable to combine their forces in a concerted and allied warfare on the public. There is a reason for this anomalous and unusual conduct. It is not difficult to find this reason. It comes from their unrestricted power to make good their losses incurred in this warfare from that portion of their business in which they are without competition, in which they are pure monopolists. On the longest of the trunk lines there are but few points which are under the law of competition. On all the remainder of the road each company is an autocrat, a pure monopolist, charging such rates "as the traffic will bear." The unjust gains thus made constitute the fund with which the war of rates is carried on, and the ability to make them furnishes the motive for war, the animus bellandi. Destroy their power to acquire these unjust gains, to recuperate losses incurred in a war of rates by an unjust assessment upon innocent parties, and no such wars will be waged. The same motive—the desire of gain—will produce the same action in railroad transportation as in other pursuits of life. Competition in the struggle for business will fix rates at that point where they are reasonably profitable, and there they will remain.

Mr. President, this brings me to another provision found in Judge REAGAN'S substitute and not contained in this bill, and which, besides being eminently just in itself and a proper protection to the public using railroads between non-competitive points, also furnishes the remedy against cutting rates between competitive points, and makes legislation on this subject harmonious, consistent, and effective. This provision consists in a prohibition to railroad companies to charge more for a shorter haul than they do for a longer one. The Senate will note and the country will note that the provision is not that railroad companies shall charge in proportion to the mileage. Such a provision would be eminently just if in addition there could be ascertained and allowed a just recompense for the difference in cost and profit per mile in long and short hauls. But this intricate if not insoluble problem is not raised by the provision. It does not say that the railroad companies shall charge only a quarter or a half of the whole rate for hauling a quarter or half the whole distance. It merely enacts the mathematical axiom that a part is not greater than the whole. It, however, permits the absurdity that a part shall be equal to the whole.

Now, sir, how any company or any reasonable man can object to so mild, so generous a proposition I can not understand. It is certain that when a train passes over the whole line it not only performs the work of passing over each separate part and division of it, but also of passing over the whole of the several parts combined. It is impossible to conceive that it is worth more to carry the train over one-fourth the distance, any one-fourth part of it, than over the whole, since the latter involves necessarily a carriage over each fourth part, and does exactly the work of the shorter haul and three times as much more. But I have seen the argument pressed that on one part of the road there may be an expensive bridge, or a costly tunnel, or a high mountain to be graded, causing the cost of construction or operation there to be greatly in excess of the cost in other parts; and therefore it is unjust that the charge for a haul over part of the whole distance should not be greater than over the whole line. The plain answer to this is, as before stated, the long haul passes over all of this expensive part, as the short haul does, and in addition over the balance of the road.

But if it be insisted that in making short hauls over different parts of the same road this provision would prevent the company from charging less for a short haul over that part which was cheaply constructed than for a still shorter haul over the expensive part, the answer to that is equally plain and conclusive. In the first place I answer that railroad companies do not regulate their charges according to the cost of construction, or even of operation. The watered stock, the excessive debts, which I have pointed out, the greater charge for a haul over half the road than for a haul over the whole show this. The further notorious fact that these greater charges for shorter over longer hauls do not result from nor are regulated by any such considerations, but only by "what the traffic will bear," and the presence or absence of competition, also demonstrate it. The railroad companies, therefore, have no right, in order to break down just legislation, to invoke a rule which has no existence in their own practice, and which they habitually violate and condemn.

There is another answer equally conclusive. A railroad is an entire thing; it is a single and complete enterprise. Its separate parts are but links in the same chain, each being essential to all others. That one link costs more than another makes it no more valuable than the other, for each performs an equal part of the work of the whole. That a high hill has to be cut down or perforated by a tunnel results only from an operation of nature in placing more obstructions there than elsewhere on the plains; when the hill is so cut, or so perforated, it becomes as to the road but the plain which nature has made in other places. A single link in a chain of the same metal and uniform with the others is worth no more than they, because it may have happened as to it that the ore out of which it was made was mined at greater depths and at a more inaccessible place, and was prepared by more costly processes, than in case of the others.

I repeat, with emphasis, that this provision is essential to any effectual remedy of the ills which this bill condemns. The provision against pooling may be evaded by a combination or understanding, express or tacit, by which rates are fixed. It will be difficult, however, to maintain such a combination, as each road will seek to secure to itself all the business it can transact, and this struggle will lead to a violation or evasion of the agreement. This will almost certainly be the result if the through rates be made the standard by which local rates are to be fixed. But, sir, its greatest efficacy will be in its tendency to fix all rates, through and local, at a reasonable point. It certainly will prevent the destructive war of rates so much feared if pooling shall be prohibited, for it will be impossible for such wars to be initiated or carried on when the low competitive rates can not be exceeded by the local charges. To make war with the certainty of self-destruction is a very different thing from waging it with the assured power of turning all its destructive forces against others.

Mr. President, having answered the objections to this provision, as well as stated some of the good to come from its adoption, I now proceed to some other considerations, which demand, in my judgment, favorable consideration by the Senate.

The practice of railroad companies in hauling freight between competitive points, which are generally large cities, at greatly cheaper rates than are demanded for much shorter hauls over other parts of their lines is in itself an injustice, and injustice wherever it exists is a wrong not to be tolerated. Railroads are in a great measure public institutions as well as private property. They do a public work. They exist in virtue of special and peculiar grants by the State of franchises and privileges not allowed to the balance of the community.

The excuse for this is that they are a public necessity and confer a public benefit. In their public character they have been the recipients of bounties from Congress and State Legislatures, and subsidies raised by heavy taxation from counties, cities, and towns. In that character they are grantees of the power of eminent domain, under which they condemn against the will of the owner his property to their use. That this can only be done for public uses is well settled. Being thus created as public agencies, with powers and privileges granted by the people, it is a great wrong that these powers and these privileges should be perverted to the injury of one portion of the people who gave them in order to confer an exceptional benefit on another portion. Private men in transactions strictly personal and private are under no legal obligation to dispense their favors equally to all. They may have their friends and favorites and may reward them. They may have their enemies, and if they may not punish them by positive acts of aggression they may at least refuse them the benefit of favors.

There is no just power to prevent a manufacturer or merchant from selling to one cheaper than to another. But when a man or a company is clothed by the State with public power to perform public duties, there is no room for inequality in benefactions or burdens. The inexorable law of all public trusts is absolute equality in all dealings with each individual of that public. The practice of giving extremely low rates between certain points and making up the loss by high charges on other communities is simple robbery under the forms of law, if the law permits it. It is not in the power of human reason to successfully controvert this. No amount of ingenious sophistry can even obscure it.

But, independent of its abstract injustice, the consequences to the public are pernicious in the extreme. One city or town is built up at the expense of another. One community is enriched or favored by unjust and unequal impositions on another. Jealousies are engendered and illegitimate and baneful rivalries fostered. The struggle for advancement and superiority between rival communities is degraded from an honorable competition in which success is sought by superior energy and business management into a reliance upon favors to be received from railroad companies and dishonorable and unmanly subserviency in order to gain them.

Mr. President, it is a marked tendency in modern economic and industrial life that population and business of all kinds concentrate in large cities. Much more than one-half of the population of Great Britain is crowded into cities and towns. The tendency in our country is in the same direction. I do not regard this as desirable. On the contrary, I think it would be far better for the happiness and prosperity of my countrymen if wealth and enterprise—all kinds of business—were more diffused all over the land. Producer and consumer should be brought nearer together, that the interchange of commodities, the barter and exchange of the products of agriculture and manufactures should be carried on with as little intervention of middlemen as practicable. The profits of the workers would be increased and the cost to consumers diminished. There would also be more homogeneousness in our population; a greater knowledge of economic processes would be extended beyond the limits of the class engaged in each particular business. There would be fewer specialists, with little or no information outside of the particular work in which they are engaged. There are many considerations connected with this subject worthy of the attention of the Senate. I do not propose to go further now. I may on some other occasion state some of them.

Now, Mr. President, the practice of railroad companies in violating the provision I am now discussing, charging discriminating rates as between different places, tends greatly to this aggregation and concentration of population, wealth, and business in a few favored places, and for that reason should be prohibited. The result I condemn, it must be remembered, is not the creation of new wealth by railroad companies, but is merely the concentration and aggregation of wealth created by others at favored places and in the hands of favored individuals at the expense of other places and other persons, and that, too, in many instances by the ruin of those who created it.

Mr. President, I come now to discuss some of the details of the bill under consideration, and to point out some of the defects in its provisions. And in the outset I will state that its defects are rather of omission, of inefficiency than of positive wrong in its provisions, and while I should prefer to have the defects remedied, yet if they are not I find merit enough in the bill as it stands to command my vote if I do not find some of its minor provisions unconstitutional.

I have already pointed out how vain and ineffectual is the main provision of the bill prohibiting the charging of unreasonable rates unless there be some efficient provisions to enforce it. This bill contains no such provision. As to that, if the bill becomes a law as it now stands it will be but glittering words, holding out a hope sure to be disappointed and a promise never to be redeemed. I have already pointed out its assured failure from the want of a standard by which to measure the reasonableness of the rates. The powers of the commissioners furnish no substitute. Their powers as to this point extend only to ascertaining the existence of wrongs already well known and the institution of suits certain to fail. If they give advice to railroad companies they have no means to compel its adoption. Laws are not made to give wholesome advice, but to prohibit wrongs and compel obedience to the right. Of mere advice and denunciation of wrong the railroad companies have already a surfeit. They refuse to follow the one or to be influenced by the other. But it is said the commissioners will expose to the light of day and subject to the censure of an enlightened public the wrongs in railroad management. But these wrongs have already been exposed, and of censure and complaint the whole land is full.

A great railroad-man is reported to have said, "Damn the public!" and the public in turn deals verbal damnation to the railroads, and yet the evils continue to exist. If it be thought that light thrown on this subject through the agency of a railroad commission because it is official, and because further the railroad companies may regard it in that form for fear of remedial legislation to follow it, I answer that a fear of a restraint upon future acts of wrong to be performed after restrictive legislation shall have been passed has never been efficacious to prevent misconduct precedent to the enactment of the law. The tendency of such a fear is directly the reverse, it stimulates the wrongdoer "to make hay while the sun shines," to make the most of a profitable license which may in the future be revoked. You may possibly stop wrongdoing under a law already enacted by a threat to enforce its punitory provisions unless the wrong shall cease; but it is an anomaly in administration to say to a wrongdoer, "If you do not mend your ways, hereafter when I have more time to devote to the business, more accurate information as to your misdeeds, I will give the matter consideration and see if something can not be devised to arrest your career. I regard you as an amiable and useful, even essential, public agent, and I am awfully afraid if I act at all I shall do you a wrong." And that, sir, is the plain English of this bill so far as it relates to reasonable charges by railroad companies.

The section relating to discrimination I regard as unobjectionable. The provisions of the bill relative to the commission deserve criticism.

In the first place three commissioners are preferable to five. Small bodies are more efficient. I also regard the salary as too low. I would prefer $10,000 to the amount named in the bill, namely, $7,500. As a general rule I am opposed to high salaries. But in this case, if we are to have commissioners at all, we ought to have the best talent and qualifications the country affords. The men selected should, in pecuniary compensation, be placed beyond the temptations and blandishments which will continually beset them. They must be men of the highest character for honor and integrity, of commanding talents, and of great business qualifications and experience. Their work is not attractive. It is not such as men covet, except for gain. If there be no sufficient gain in the salary, the fear is that it may come from largesses and benefactions bestowed by those who have so great an interest in maladministration. They, as the representatives of the Government and of the people, will be brought in contact and collision with the shrewdest and ablest business men in the country, and also with the highest paid of all officials. I do not want to put a seventy-five-hundred-dollar commissioner against a fifty-thousand-dollar railroad president. Besides, on the score of economy, three commissioners at $10,000 will be less expensive than five at $7,500.

The interests which these men are called to supervise and to aid in regulating are of immense magnitude. We have already seen that the gross earnings of the railroads in the United States amount annually to over eight hundred millions, and it is with gross earnings that these commissioners will have to deal, so far as they deal at all. I shall not charge or suspect that the men to be appointed will be liable to either corruption or the seductive influence of the great wealth with which they come in contact in their official action, but I can not shut my eyes to the possibilities in that direction. I would guard as far as possible against such a possibility, for if non-action or bad action come the disaster and wrong to the people will be incalculable. I do not forget, sir, that we live in an age wherein has occurred the very apotheosis of money. I do not forget that a commission from the United States or a State is no absolute guarantee either of efficiency or purity in the recipient. I do not forget that sales of appointments in the Military Academy have been made. I do not forget that the administration of one of the great Departments was the subject of an impeachment before this body, which was defeated by the resignation of the officer. I do not forget that the administration of another great Department was darkened by charges and suspicions, that the great public trust committed to it was prostituted for the purpose of enriching its head and its favorites, and that the American Navy was sacrificed to the greed of politicians; and that a high, though subordinate, official in another great Department habitually discharged his duties to advance the fortunes of himself and confederates by a pillage of the public Treasury. Nor do I forget that in some way these and similar misdeeds have so debauched the opinions of many, that they have become in some degree tolerant of the practice of public men using the opportunities afforded by their offices of enriching themselves and their favorites. Nor has the country forgotten these things. It is expected, therefore, that in creating this commission every safeguard will be taken to secure efficiency and purity in its administration.

There are also other provisions of the bill, so far as they relate to this commission, which deserve criticism. In the first place, the jurisdiction of these commissioners is too broad. Their supervision is declared by the bill to extend "to all matters pertaining to the regulation of interstate commerce." Their powers of supervision as thus defined embrace the whole subject of regulating commerce among the States—just as broad, sir, as the constitutional grant of power to Congress on that subject. Everything connected with this vast subject is brought within their jurisdiction. Look at our statutes on that subject, and we can imagine how broad and extended this subject is. The manning and sailing of vessels, regulating of seamen, steamboats, improvement of rivers and harbors, marine hospitals, pilotage, building of bridges over and obstruction of navigable streams, and an infinite number of other things, defying all attempt at enumeration. While their jurisdiction is infinitely vast, their efficient powers are almost nil. The bill invites them to a feast, inscribing on the bill of fare all things either edible or potable, and sets them down to a banquet of crumbs which the railroad companies have thrown to the dogs. It commissions them to go forth and conquer the world with no equipment for the war more destructive than impotent advice and unavailing solicitation.

While this is true, Mr. President, of the provisions of this bill so far as they relate to any agency of these commissioners to remedy existing evils, admitted by all to exist, yet the tenth section, which prescribes the inquiries which they shall make and the information they are to acquire and report to Congress, is the best provision on that subject I have seen. If the duties therein imposed on the commissioners shall be intelligently and honestly performed a mass of valuable information on this subject will be acquired and given to the public, which will show how derelict we have been in the discharge of our duties, if we fail to enact efficient legislation to remedy the great wrongs suffered by the people at the hands of the railroad companies; and it may also serve to show to our successors a clearer path to pursue on this intricate subject, and to stimulate them to the exercise of remedial powers, which we abdicate if we enact nothing more efficacious than this bill. For these reasons I regard this section so valuable as to justify the enactment of the bill, if no better one can be agreed on, if only there be sufficient provisions in it to enable the commissioners to carry it out. But, sir, I fear these provisions are also wanting.

The ninth section of the bill contains the only additional provisions designed to carry out the tenth. In this ninth section the commissioners are authorized to summon witnesses, require their attendance, and require the production of books, papers, and documents; and in the tenth section they are empowered to require annual reports from the railroad companies. They may indeed summon witnesses, but how can their attendance be required? How can these annual reports be enforced? If the witnesses refuse to obey the summons, if the companies refuse to produce the books and documents and make the reports, what then? On this important subject the bill contains no other provision than that the commissioners shall require this attendance, shall require this production, and shall require the reports. I respectfully submit that these can not be effectually done except by a court; a United States court can only be where the judges hold their office during good behavior and these commissioners hold their office for the term of six years. They can exercise no judicial power whatever, and therefore can not punish for a contempt or a refusal to obey their orders.

If it is the true intent of this bill, as I think is certain, that these commissioners shall exercise these judicial powers, then the bill is, I fear, unconstitutional; and if not, then the bill is equally ineffective in not providing a mode in which the attendance of witnesses, the production of books and documents, and the making by the railroad companies of the annual reports can be enforced. Without such provision the ninth and tenth sections are utterly valueless. The fifth section makes it a misdemeanor on the part of the railroad company to refuse to produce a book or document, but it contains no provision for their compulsory production; but this does not include the attendance of witnesses or the making of the annual reports.

The tenth section is also fatally defective in the failure to provide any security whatever for the truth of the matters contained in the annual reports of the railroad companies. It is manifest that if the reports be either willfully or negligently erroneous they are of no value. A provision should be inserted requiring these reports to be verified by the oaths of the president, secretary, treasurer, and chief book-keeper of the several companies, and imposing the penalties of perjury for any falsehoods contained therein. As the section now stands the companies may make just such reports as suit either their convenience or interest, not even the formality of a certificate of their correctness being required.

On the whole, because of the defects I have pointed out, this machinery which the committee has devised for the protection of these great interests of the American people is but a search-warrant given to five blind men to hunt for iniquity, with such effect that if they should haply stumble on a discovery, either through awkwardness in management or contempt for their authority on the part of the railroad companies, the commissioners would be equally as powerless to prevent the wrong or punish the wrongdoer as they are to discover any wrong which the companies might desire to conceal. The commissioners are but missionaries to preach the new gospel of peace on earth to wrongdoers and good-will not to men but to those incorporeal and intangible entities recognized by the distinguished chairman of the committee as "corporations having no souls and very short memories" with pardon already granted for past offenses and an indulgence for limitless sin in the future.

The bill also needs amendment, I respectfully submit, in the last paragraph of the fifth section. This section authorizes the commissioners to assess damages in favor of a complaining party against a railroad company for a violation of the provisions of the bill. Singularly enough, it gives no effect to this assessment, not even making it evidence as against the railroad company; but as against the complaining citizen the last paragraph gives the assessment the force of a judgment, if only the railroad company will acquiesce in and pay it. The litigation provided for in the bill is of this unequal and unjust character, that only one of the parties is bound by the judgment of the tribunal. As to the railroad companies, they may treat the complaint before the commissioners with contempt; they may refuse to answer, or they may answer, take the chances of a favoring decision, and if, when it is made, they do not like it, they may treat it with like contempt; or if they like it, they may accept and satisfy it, and thereby, in the language of the bill, "be relieved of liability for any other penalty for the particular act complained of."

The distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], in the able and instructive speech he made on yesterday in support of the bill, spoke of the commissioners as a board of arbitrators, from whose action he expected great benefits to the country. As a legal description of their office and functions I think the term is singularly erroneous. The law knows nothing of an arbitration where the award is not equally binding and conclusive on both parties. The law recognizes no trial wherein the judgment shall bind and fetter the hands of one party and leave the other free to act according to his own will and discretion. This bill does this; and in so far as it does it is as much beyond the power of Congress to enact as would be a provision that a party might be a judge in his own case. As to the railroad companies, it is but a board of advisers, with full license on their part to treat its advice with contempt, as they certainly will do if it shall be at all unpalatable or injurious to their interests. I respectfully submit that the need of the hour is for punitory, not for hortatory, legislation.

There are other defects in the frame of the bill, but I have detained the Senate long enough on this subject.

Mr. President, I have criticised the bill freely according to the lights afforded by my humble abilities. I disclaim all disrespect in what I have said to the committee who reported the bill. I do not doubt that they have discharged their duty faithfully and conscientiously. The subject is extremely difficult and intricate. I do not profess to understand it better than they. It is one on which Senators will differ. It is my fortune to be unable to agree with the work of the committee, and what I have said has been said only in the discharge of my duty as a Senator, without the slightest design to impute anything improper to others; for I confess that if I had been called on to frame a bill it would in all probability have been more liable to criticism than the bill now before us. I shall offer some important amendments as a substitute for the most of the bill, but in doing so I shall not offer my own work. I have availed myself of the work, of the judgment, and the researches of far abler men than I am. The amendment to be offered as a substitute is based upon and framed from bills introduced into Congress by others, including the tenth section of the bill now under consideration. I may offer some independent amendments of my own, and if I do the fact will be thus stated.

I admit, Mr. President, that no measure that can now be passed can be perfect. Time and experience will point out defects. We have not sufficient information, either as to all the evils or all the proper remedies, yet there is sufficient known on this subject to justify us in assuming that there are at least three great evils which call aloud for remedy.

First. Excessive charges.

Second. Unjust discriminations between persons and places.

Third. The destruction of competition by the practice of pooling.

We have also sufficient information to enable us to legislate intelligently, so far as the substitute goes, to prevent these evils. Whether a bill embracing the provisions I approve shall pass or not, I am certain that something ought to be done on this subject. It would be a great misfortune to the country if by disagreement as to details among the friends of supervision there should be a failure to legislate at all. For my own part, after making proper efforts to secure the adoption of what is in my judgment a proper bill, if I shall fail I shall support any measure which promises any substantial relief to the people.

The substitute, which has been printed and laid on the desks of Senators, does not go as far in the way of direct regulation as in my judgment would be proper. I think it goes as far as is likely to meet the sanction of Congress. It furnishes the means by which excessive charges and unjust discriminations may be prevented. These means, as I have before pointed out, are in the main the prohibitions to charge more for a longer than for a shorter haul and against the practice of pooling. It attempts to secure reasonable charges through competition. If it shall be found that these provisions are unavailing, I do not doubt that we will be able to provide other remedies still more efficient for these wrongs, which in the end, without being unduly burdensome on the railroad companies, will yet make their service to the people fair and equal, and at such rates as will materially advance the public welfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, and to establish it as a post-route; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HALE submitted the following report, which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7510) making temporary provision for the naval service, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

EUGENE HALE,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SAM. J. RANDALL,
W. S. HOLMAN,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. I think it is proper in this exigency to explain to the Senate the attitude of the two Houses upon the bill.

As Senators well know, the regular appropriation bill for the naval establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, was hung up in conference at the end of the last session, and an emergency bill, as it is called, was passed, which gave to the Navy Department 50 per cent. of the previous year's appropriation for the half year closing on the 31st day of the present month. By the necessity of the case that had to be done. Everybody realizes that it is not a good thing in our appropriation bills to go back to the previous year, where the conditions may be entirely different, and make that the measure of the necessities for the present year; but under the circumstances, with a session running out, that temporary bill, that emergency bill, was passed, and the Navy Department has been running on those appropriations since, the regular naval appropriation bill being suspended, to be taken up at this session. That is the bill which was matured for the present year for its purposes.

When the House ten days ago sent to the Senate another emergency bill, another temporary bill, simply giving to the Navy Department for the rest of this fiscal year 50 per cent. of the appropriations of last year, the Senate Committee on Appropriations amended that by substituting the regular appropriation bill that was prepared for this year and presented it to the Senate. The Senate sustained the action of the Appropriations Committee of this body. The Senate took the attitude, first, that any emergency bill, any temporary bill, which goes back to another year for the measure of appropriations for the present year is bad; that each year's appropriations ought to be scrutinized by themselves, and not be carried back to the law and the rule and the circumstances of another year, and therefore presented the regular appropriation bill for the present year. The Senate conferees in the conference which met this morning took ground upon that amendment and presented it to the conferees of the other House, asking what reason there was why that bill should not be considered, as the Senate had amended it and sent over.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to inquire what is the difference, if any, between the amounts appropriated by the Senate substitute and the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. HALE. I was coming to that in a moment. The House conferees took the ground that the Senate must take their bill, their bill being, as I have said, a general bill giving to the Navy Department for the next six months, from January 1 to June 30, 1885, 50 per cent. of the appropriations that were prepared and matured and passed nearly two years ago. The House conferees insisted that the Senate must take that bill. The conferees of the Senate said, "This is objectionable; the rule of last year is not the rule for this year; the measure of necessity for last year is not the measure for this year. We offer you, not our bill, but the bill which your House prepared and matured and sent to us as the naval appropriation bill for this year, deducting from the several items what we have already given in the emergency bill of July last." Moreover, we said, "As there are large differences in amounts, as the bill which was matured last session contains the provision for the new cruisers and all the extra expenditure involved in that enterprise, the Senate is willing here to say that it recognizes the fact that we do not agree to give up these cruisers, but if the House insists that it will not put them on the appropriation bill, the Senate conferees feel that they can not drive the House on this subject, so that there would be, if we could consider and confer upon all the items, probably no difficulty."

Aside from that, in answer to the question of the Senator from Tennessee, I may say that the differences between the two bodies are small. There are some items which are not very material. Provided we could get into a fair conference, and provided the House conferees would consent to consider our amendments, I believe we should have no difficulty in coming to an agreement; but we can not get into a conference upon the items that the Senate has sent to the House because the House conferees insist that we must take their bill.

Under these circumstances the Senate conferees have felt that although it may be attended with grave results, and although if the two Houses adjourn for the holidays it may leave the Navy Department on the 1st of January without any appropriation, still that it was just and right and a duty to insist upon their grounds. I believe that myself, sir. I think the Senate should maintain its attitude, should insist upon its amendments until the House conferees will consent to consider them. Then, when they come up in detail, as I have said, I do not believe there will be any difficulty in coming to an agreement. But I did not feel, and my fellow-conferees did not feel, that the House of Representatives had the right to say that we must consider their bill alone, and thereby give up what the Senate is trying to compass—analysis and scrutiny and vigilance over every appropriation bill the year in which it is passed.

Therefore I hope that the Senate will accept the report. It will go to the House. I can not say—it rests with that body of course—whether they will ask for a new conference. If they do, I presume the Senate will be willing to go into another conference, but under the rules the motion must come from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is whether the Senate will at this time consider the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a few words before the vote is taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question as to whether the Senate will at this time consider the report is not debatable. Senators favoring the consideration of the report will say "ay," the contrary "no." [Having put the question.] The "ayes" have it, and the report is before the Senate.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have very little to add to what the Senator from Maine has said, except that, being one of the conferees on the part of the Senate, I agreed with him, and I confess that I was somewhat astonished to find that we were not able even to make a beginning. The proposition that we made seemed to me obviously fair. It was that we would take the bill which the House had prepared, and had agreed to and had sent over to us, as the basis of our action, based upon the estimates for the current fiscal year, and that we would consult with them as to whether the amendments placed by the Senate upon the bill that they had sent to us should be agreed to or not. If the amendments were right we assumed that they would agree with us; if they were wrong we were prepared to advise the Senate to surrender the amendments that were made to the bill. But we were told at once that they would not be considered; that they had given one-half of the amount that was appropriated for the year 1883, and were willing to give the other half of what was appropriated for that year, and that they would not consider their own action for the current year. I did not think that was intelligent legislation, nor an appropriate mode of considering such a measure, because estimates had varied. I will take one example, which is a small one, but which illustrates the whole perhaps as good as any other: In the bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, approved March 3, 1883, 50 per cent. of which was given for the first half of the current fiscal year, this provision was made:

Commutation of quarters for officers where there are no public buildings, $10,000.

By the lumping bill passed last July we gave for this item $5,000 for half the current year. It is proposed now to give the other $5,000 for the next six months of the current fiscal year. The Senate and House for the current fiscal year, in the bill that both Houses agreed to, made this provision:

Commutation of quarters for officers where there are no public buildings, $4,000.

We have already given $1,000 more for that item for six months than the House and the Senate in the bill that both Houses agreed to said was necessary for the whole year. The Department have made changes no doubt, and do not need that amount of money, yet the House will not even consider it and we can not even get that looked into. Although it was agreed by the House and Senate that $4,000 was enough for this year and we have given $5,000 for the first six months of the current fiscal year, they say $5,000 more must be given, and they can not consider anything else. That is a specimen.

I confess to some sort of annoyance in regard to this matter. The same men who passed the bill that I hold in my hand for the current fiscal year are here now, and if they have made any mistakes they can correct them, but they will not even consider their own work and say that we must go back to the work of a past Congress, a Congress that is now extinct. Many of the Senators perhaps of the last Congress which passed the bill of 1883, one-half of which was given for the current fiscal year, are not upon this floor. If I may allude to it, as I said, I was annoyed. The fact that a Democratic House with a Democratic committee should be unwilling to consider its own work, which the Senate was willing to consider and act upon, and should say, "No; you must hang to a previous Congress, and take up the work of a Republican House and a Republican committee," annoyed me a little bit, for I thought they ought to have as much respect for their own work as they had for the work of a past Congress, and I think so yet. At any rate I was not willing to say that the action of the House and the Senate during the present Congress based upon the estimates for the current fiscal year should all be thrown aside and that the work of a former Congress upon a former set of estimates, no matter what political party then controlled, should be taken up in preference, and that we should blindly, right or wrong, give 50 per cent. of that year's appropriations, much of which was not wanted now.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator right there, as illustrating what time has passed to change the conditions, is it not now about two years since the bill which the House wants us to take was matured?

Mr. BECK. It lacks only two months of it.

Mr. HALE. So the House is asking us to go back to the conditions of two years ago.

Mr. BECK. That is the fact, and that is one of the objections; but the serious objection at last is, whatever we may be compelled to do when the exigency arises, as was the case last July, or whatever we may have been compelled to do on the legislative bill in the dead-lock five or six years ago, we have time now to do what we always maintained we ought to do, to keep the Departments under our control as well as we can and act upon the estimates that they send us for the year in such form that we shall know precisely what they have done and fix the responsibility for not doing right as well as we can.

We all know that there will be a change in the administration of the Navy Department on the 4th of March, and we ought to have details of its work based upon estimates, to know, if any wrong occurs, if any deficiency occurs, whether it was created by the present administration of the Department or by the administration of the Department that may follow it after the 4th of March, and not give a lumping sum, whereby all the responsibility would be concealed from us and whereby Congress would lose its control over the appropriations. If we are going to do this with no exigency arising, with plenty of time to do otherwise, we might just as well for all the other Departments say, and the Senate might very well say, "If you have a change of administration after the 4th of next March we will give you what we gave last year and make a lump sum for that, for the Army, for the Navy, in the sundry civil bill, in the legislative bill, taking no account of the changed condition of things or of exigencies which may have arisen. We may have given money this year for things not needed next year. There may be things that all men might say would not be needed the next year, or things needed next year which are not needed now because of a changed condition, and if Congress gives up its intelligent hold on the action of the Departments it can not hold them responsible, because it has placed them in a position where the responsibility can not be fixed.

The tendency of our legislation for many years has been to go more and more into detail, to be more and more accurate and specific, so as to prevent the Departments from taking advantage of such loose general action as is now proposed to us by the other House. We have passed laws at as early a date as 1872 that no expenditure of money should be made except for the purposes for which appropriations were made and in accordance with the objects for which they were made, and we have narrowed them down year by year so as to stop the former habit of the Departments; and the position of the House now is a return to the worst condition of things we ever had.

That is all I care to say about it. It may be right and I be wrong, but I am stating the reasons why as one of the conferees I thought it was best to report back a disagreement and let the Senate do what it deems best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question on this bill before the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate further insist on its amendments to the bill. The question is on that motion.

Mr. FRYE. I am in favor of insisting for the reasons given by both of the conferees who have spoken; but suppose the Senate insists by a united vote and then to-morrow adjourns for three weeks.

Mr. HAWLEY. We will not adjourn.

Mr. FRYE. That was the suggestion I desired to make, that if the Senate insists and really means to insist and the House holds its position, as a matter of course, to be consistent, we can not adjourn, because on the 1st day of January there will be no appropriation available for the Navy.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the vote is about to be taken upon sustaining the committee of conference of the Senate in refusing to submit to what I may call—I will not say unreasonable, but certainly unreasoned demands on the part of the House. From what has fallen from the chairman in charge of the bill, and from my friend from Kentucky, it is perfectly obvious that the Senate is asked to abdicate its scrutiny over a bill of supplies which, although under the Constitution it must originate in the House, is unquestionably equally and as fully submitted for the approval of the Senate, and the responsibilities for its wisdom or unwisdom are quite as great upon this branch of the Legislature as they can be upon the other. Therefore, sir, I hope that the question will be put by yeas and nays upon this report, and that there may be upon a question of this kind an unbroken front of judgment presented by the Senate in respect to this case. Therefore I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to concur in the report of the Senate conferees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware on this question demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Maine is that the Senate further insist on its amendments to this bill, and on this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall vote with the committee; at the same time I desire to do myself the justice of saying that I do not approve of all the amendments in the bill which are insisted on, and I want that distinctly understood.

Mr. McPHERSON. I only want to say that I do not understand the question, or else I misunderstood the Senator from Missouri. I understand that the vote affirmatively upon the motion of the Senator from Maine commits every Senator to the amendment.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. By no means. It is simply to get a conference upon them.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understand that you have already had a conference, and for reasons—perhaps such reasons as we learned from Senators when the bill was passed by the Senate—the House may have decided not to yield to the amendments. For one I did not agree with the Senator from Maine. I do not agree to all the amendments.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that so far from that to which he refers being a subject-matter on which we could not agree, the intimation given by the Senate conferees was that when we ever did come to those questions the Senate conferees realized that we could not drive the House, but we said that we desired a conference upon the other items, and the report is presented because the House conferees refused to consider the Senate items, and said that we must take their bill and their method of appropriating. In this condition of things I do not consider that any Senator has in the least degree committed himself to pushing all the amendments, but that the Senate does take its ground that for the purpose of a full and fair conference its amendments must be considered by the conferees. That is all.

Mr. McPHERSON. Well, Mr. President, I still think that I am right in the matter. As I understand, there has been a conference on the House bill passed by the Senate with amendments. The House refused to accept those amendments. Now the bill comes back to the Senate, and the Senator from Maine rises and asks that the Senate still further insist. Insist upon what? The Senate amendments made to this appropriation bill. I agree with the Senator from Maine mainly as to the appropriations in the bill as amended, that the appropriations should be made. I should be glad to vote for the appropriations proper. I should have been as willing and as anxious for the passage of this bill as the Senator from Maine, or any other Senator, if those appropriations could have been made with suitable restrictions. But the Senate did not see fit to do that. Therefore I will not vote in favor of insisting further upon amendments which I do not approve of.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to make a remark to him which will perhaps change his conclusion? All that the conferees are asking is that the House shall regard its own bill sent to us at the last session as the basis of our conference. The House conferees said: "No; we will only consider the provisions of a bill which was passed two years ago, whose provisions expired a year ago, and give the other half of what that bill appropriated, although some of the items are not included in the estimates of the present year." The question is, shall we take the bill the House itself passed during the present Congress, or shall we go back to a bill of a former year? That is all there is in the question.

Mr. McPHERSON. In other words, if I understand the Senator from Kentucky aright, the bill now under consideration and in the possession of the Senate was a House appropriation bill, amended by the Senate. Now the Senate conferees want authority to consider that House bill with all the amendments.

Mr. BECK. We are not committed to any one amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senate should now insist upon its action, and should so instruct its conference committee, I wish to know what authority they would have from the Senate to reject any part of the amendments or to subtract any part of them.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator know that the fact that either of the bodies insists upon its amendments does not make anything like a pitiless instruction to the conferees, but such action is for the purpose generally of maintaining the attitude of the co-ordinate branch of the Government? Let me ask the Senator if he agrees with me and with the committee that has made this report, that our method of appropriation is the best, that we ought to have a scrutiny of every year's appropriations upon the circumstances of the year—if he agrees that the Senate is right in that, how can the Senate maintain its position except by insisting?

That tells the House that the Senate is determined that the House shall consider these propositions. When you get into conference, if the House will consent to that, as I believe upon firm action by the Senate it will, then the consideration of the respective items is a question of fair arrangement between the two sets of conferees, and each must yield something if necessary, and there are certain things that the Senate realizes now that it can not force the House upon. So the Senator need have no fear that he is committed to the text of the provisions of all these specific amendments or any of them. Nobody expects that. But the Senate can not maintain its attitude with reference to the method of appropriating in appropriation bills if it does not insist.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maine if the Senate does not further insist is not all conference at an end?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARRIS. And the bill inevitably fails?

Mr. FRYE. That is it.

Mr. HALE. Of course the Senate can entirely abandon its ground and take the House general bill. That is the only thing. Otherwise it would fail.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate has refused to take the House bill by adopting a substitute?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. That is the disagreeing vote between the two Houses. The conferees have failed to agree. They report that failure. Now, if the Senate fails to further insist, the conference is at an end and the bill utterly fails.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. It does not go at all. It has no hope for action without this vote. I should be glad to see the Senate unanimous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the Senate further insist on its amendments to the bill of the House. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALKER (when Mr. GARLAND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GARLAND] is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Senator from Arkansas if he thinks his colleague would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. WALKER. I do not, and withdraw the announcement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont is paired with the Senator from Arkansas upon any question where it would be thought they would differ; and the Senator from Vermont has voted "yea." If the Senator thinks his colleague would vote "nay" the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his vote.

Mr. WALKER. No, sir. I withdraw the announcement.

Mr. MILLER, of New York (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME] on all political questions, but as this is not one of that character I vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 55, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—55.

Allison,	Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Dolph,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Frye,	Logan,	Sawyer,
Brown,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Butler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sheffield,
Call,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Slater,
Camden,	Harris,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Vest,
Coke,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Conger,	Jackson,	Platt,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Jonas,	Pugh,

NAYS—0.

ABSENT—21.

Aldrich,	George,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Groome,	Miller of Cal.,	Williams.
Fair,	Hill,	Palmer,
Farley,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,
Garland,	Kenna,	Plumb,

So the motion of Mr. HALE was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, and to establish it as a post-route, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

SURVEY OF NICARAGUAN CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 2112) to establish a commission to regulate interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator withdraw that motion?

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. VEST. Yesterday I offered a joint resolution in regard to the proposed naval expedition to make a survey of the Nicaragua Canal route. I desire now to make a modification of that, and ask that it lie upon the table and be printed, and to give notice that to-morrow morning I shall ask the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator have it read?

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course. I will say in this connection that I gave notice yesterday that I would call up the resolution to-day, but at the request of the Senator from Maine I did not do so, but I expect to make the motion to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri ask leave to offer this as an original resolution or as an amendment?

Mr. VEST. As an amendment to the joint resolution I introduced yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to present at this time, for future consideration, an amendment intended to be proposed to the joint resolution (S. R. 106) declaring the action of the Secretary of the Navy in sending an expedition to Nicaragua to be illegal. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The amendment will be printed if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. Let us have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the joint resolution so as to make it read:

Whereas, in response to a resolution of inquiry on the part of the Senate, the Secretary of the Navy states in his official reply of date December 17, 1884, that orders have been issued by the Navy Department to Civil Engineer A. G. Menocal, Civil Engineer R. G. Peary, and Ensign Washington I. Chambers to visit Nicaragua in order to make a survey of the route for the proposed Nicaragua Canal, and that these orders have been issued in the exercise of the general powers of the Department under the President to issue such orders to all officers of the Navy as may be deemed for the public interest; and

Whereas the reply of the Secretary also states that the cost of the arrangements made and contemplated in addition to the pay and mileage of the naval officers is expected to be $1,000 as an outfit and about $1,000 a month during the stay of the party in Nicaragua:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That under existing circumstances it is not expedient to send an expedition into the territory of Nicaragua for the purpose of surveying a route for the proposed Nicaragua Canal and to expend or to make arrangements involving the expenditure of public money for such purpose without consent or authority from Congress. That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to discontinue the arrangements for such expedition and not to enforce the orders made as to the same until definite and final action by Congress upon the treaty between the United States and Nicaragua now pending.

Mr. VEST. I give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to consider the resolution.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 19, 1884.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a personal explanation. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1884.

DEAR SIR: I find in the RECORD of this morning the following statements made by you in the House yesterday in the debate on the Department of Agriculture:

"As a matter of fact it is well known that those petitions were printed in the city of Washington, under the direction of the Commissioner of Agriculture, and sent through the mails all over the country to be brought back here with signatures, for the purpose of influencing Congress." * * * "But from the time this proposition has been broached the Commissioner of Agriculture—the present Commissioner as well as other Commissioners—has been about this body and the Senate Chamber asking that this thing be done."

Allow me to assure you that I have at no time urged the passage of the bill under consideration, have neither prepared nor printed nor circulated petitions in favor of the bill, nor have I urged its passage upon any member of the House or Senate; and only when urged to do so have I given any opinion on the measure, or any advice with regard to the structure of a bill. I have no knowledge whatever that such petitions have been circulated. I have scrupulously refrained from all personal effort or solicitation in the matter, and have devoted my energies solely to the work of enlarging the usefulness of the department as now organized, and of securing for it public confidence and respect.

Truly, yours,

GEO. B. LORING,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Hon. JAMES H. BLOUNT,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, the petitions referred to in my remarks antedated the official term of the present Commissioner of Agriculture. In what I said on that subject I had no reference to him; for I had never heard of anything affecting him in that regard, and I did not intend to be so understood by the reporter, although my remarks may have borne that construction.

As to my statement that the present Commissioner and others had exercised their influence for the purpose of having the office of Commissioner of Agriculture erected into the head of a department, I stated what was my information. But in this letter the Commissioner disavows any such action, and as he is an officer for whom I entertain the very highest respect, I feel it my duty to place on record his own statement in regard to the matter.

ROCK ISLAND BRIDGE.

Mr. MURPHY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 6760) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi river at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, and to establish it as a post-route.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I am bound to object to the consideration of that or any other bill to-day. I desire we shall dispose of the unfinished business which comes up this morning as the regular order.

Mr. MURPHY. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his objection, as the bill has been nearly read through.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the reading of the bill has been nearly finished, and I will therefore withdraw my objection.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be lawful for the Davenport and Rock Island Bridge Company, a corporation duly created and organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, to build a bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa, as may accommodate the Moline, Rock Island and Southern Railroad, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, on the east side of said river, and the Davenport, Iowa and Dakota Railroad, a corporation created under the laws of the State of Iowa, on the west side of said river, and for the accommodation of any railroads that are or may hereafter be built, and to lay over said bridge a railroad track for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or may be constructed to the said river, on either side thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and provisions hereinafter provided: Provided, That Congress may at any time prescribe such rules and regulations in regard to toll and otherwise as may be deemed reasonable.

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be built with a draw, so as not to impede the navigation of said river; said draw shall be a pivot draw, over the channel of said river usually navigated, and with spans giving a clear width of water way of not less than two hundred feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and the next adjoining span or spans shall give a clear width of water way of not less than three hundred feet, and said spans shall not be less than ten feet above extreme high-water mark, and not less than thirty feet above low-water mark, measured to the bottom chord of the bridge, and the piers of said bridge shall, as nearly as practicable, be parallel with the current of said river: Provided, That said draw shall always be opened promptly upon reasonable signal; and said company, or its successors and assigns, shall at all proper times keep and maintain all proper lights on said bride during nights, so that its presence may always be noticed by vessels and crafts navigating the channel of said river. And all plans for the construction of said bridge and approaches thereto must first be submitted to the Secretary of War for his approval, and when the same shall be approved by said Secretary the work thereon may be commenced and prosecuted to completion: And provided further, That said bridge shall be constructed with such aids to the passage of said bridge in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or suitable and proper structures for confining the flow of water to a permanent channel and for the guiding of rafts, steamboats, and other water-craft safely through the draw and raft spans as the Secretary of War shall prescribe and order, to be constructed and maintained at the expense of the company owning said bridge: And provided further, That said bridge shall, as nearly as may be, be constructed at right angles with said river or the current thereof: And provided further, That any change in the mode of construction of said bridge shall be first submitted to the said Secretary for his approval, and when approved the said company may then proceed with the construction according to said change: And provided further, That if said bridge, when constructed, shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, be a substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river, the said Secretary shall require said company to change the construction thereof so as to avoid any serious and substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river, at the expense of the owners of said bridge.

SEC. 3. That the bridge hereby authorized shall be a lawful structure, and shall be a post-route, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation of the mails of the United States and the troops and munitions of war, or for passengers or freight passing over said bridge, than the rate per mile paid to railroads and transportation companies leading to said bridge.

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches thereto, upon payment of reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War, upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties: Provided, That the provisions of section 3 in regard to charges for passengers and freight across said bridge shall not govern the Secretary of War in determining any question arising as to the sum or sums to be paid to the owners of said bridge by said companies for the use of said bridge.

SEC. 5. That this act shall be subject, except as above mentioned, to the limitations and provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the town of Clinton, in the State of Iowa, and other bridges across said river, and to establish them as post-roads," approved April 1, 1872.

SEC. 6. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in such structure, or its entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever Congress shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does the bill come from any committee?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes; from the Committee on Commerce.

There was no objection, and the House Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MURPHY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. YAPLE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 4085) for the relief of Juliet H. Palmer; when the Speaker signed the same.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from W. W. Corcoran, chairman of the Joint Commission for the Completion of the Washington Monument, transmitting the annual report of that commission; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

STATE DEPARTMENT PRINTING, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing letter from the Secretary of State asking an appropriation of $5,000 to supply a deficiency in the allotment for printing and binding for the State Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Interior Department of an appropriation for the protection and improvement of the Yellowstone National Park for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COAST SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing statement of expenses on account of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRA POLICEMEN, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates from the commissioners of the District of Columbia of an appropriation for extra policemen at the dedication of the Washington Monument and inauguration ceremonies; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, HARRISONBURG, VA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the House of the 17th instant, calling for information relative to the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Harrisonburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN G. THOMPSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter, accompanied by a memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose the memorial by me to the Senate and House of Representatives of Congress, asking that an appropriation be made by Congress to pay the judgment against me rendered by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in the suit of Hallet Kilbourn against me, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary; and also to reimburse me the expenses incurred by me in defense of said suit, and to pay me reasonable compensation for my time and trouble, with the request that you lay the memorial before the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN G. THOMPSON.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the letter and accompanying memorial will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in order that this Sergeant-at-Arms may be able to relieve himself of the judgment rendered against him while carrying out the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought it would be better to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary, inasmuch as the memorial asks for reimbursement for expenses which the Chair supposed have not yet been ascertained by competent authority.

Mr. KEIFER. There is a judgment against Mr. Thompson as Sergeant-at-Arms, and he asks that judgment be paid. The Committee on the Judiciary can hardly make appropriation to do that. The amount has been determined, and in my judgment it is in the nature of a claim against the Government, and, therefore, I think it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have no doubt about its reference to the Committee on Appropriations if it asked for no more than the payment of the judgment rendered against a former officer of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I think, Mr. Speaker, it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary as to the general merits of the case.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is where it was before.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio makes the motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations, the Chair will submit it to the House.

Mr. KEIFER. Then I move the reference of the memorial and accompanying letter to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Or to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEIFER. If it is ever to be paid it should go the Committee on Appropriations, which is the proper committee to make provision for its payment.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not appropriate to any appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have this whole judicial proceeding examined into by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say this is a judgment rendered against the Sergeant-at-Arms after a long litigation, and he asks to be reimbursed. The judgment was rendered against him because he did that which the House of Representatives required him to do. He simply executed the order of the House, which resulted in violating the law of the country under the judgment of the Supreme Court and other tribunals which have passed upon it.

He is now burdened with the judgment of the court when the House compelled him to do that which rendered him liable to the judgment of the court. We ought, in my judgment, to refer the matter to the Committee on Appropriations, so as to provide for the payment of the judgment and for the relief of this officer of the House; but it is now proposed to send it elsewhere for some further investigation. It ought to be paid at once, unless some fraud shall be alleged against it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on the Judiciary can determine whether it should be paid or not.

Mr. KEIFER. It never will be paid during this Congress if it goes there.

Mr. RANDALL. This Congress has nothing to do with determining that matter. It should be in the nature of a judicial proceeding. It is well understood that the Committee on the Judiciary can make recommendation for reference to the Committee on Appropriations after that committee has determined exactly what should be done in the premises. In my judgment, the Committee on the Judiciary is the proper committee of this House to settle whatever amount shall be paid.

Mr. KEIFER. I would not persist if I supposed the Committee on the Judiciary had the power to grant the relief which is asked.

The SPEAKER. The impression the Chair had about it is that the reference to the Committee on the Judiciary would be proper, because the memorial asks in the first place the ascertainment of the amount of his expenditures and the value of the time he had been compelled to devote to the suit. The Chair thought the Committee on the Judiciary could make investigation of that matter and make recommendation to the House which could be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on the Judiciary is vested with ample power to report a bill covering the whole question. It can be done as well through that channel as by reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a judicial matter connected with proceedings in court, and should have the judgment of the Committee on the Judiciary before any action is taken in the House.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is an expenditure not authorized by law, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations has no power over it. It is subject to the point of order, but I suggest it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. KEIFER. I take issue with the gentleman from Massachusetts, as I believe it is authorized by law, at least so far as this House is concerned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves by unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary have power to report back at any time.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on his motion?

Mr. KEIFER. I feel reluctant to do so, and I will now only say in answer to what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is a statute of 1878 which requires us to protect such officers.

The letter and accompanying memorial were then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with power to report at any time, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. HATCH, of Michigan, until January 10, on account of important business.

To Mr. FINERTY, until after the holiday recess.

To Mr. CLAY, for ten days, on account of sickness and important business.

To Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, indefinitely.

JAMES M. WATSON.

On motion of Mr. CARLISLE, by unanimous consent leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of James M. Watson, without leaving copies, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADDITIONAL PAGES.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution, namely—

"Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to employ three additional pages during the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $2.50 per day"—

respectfully report that the purpose of said resolution is to provide for the employment of the same number of pages as in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress; that your committee believe such additional employés are required for the proper transaction of the business of the House, and therefore recommend the passage of said resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPOONER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LABORERS IN CLERK'S DOCUMENT-ROOM.

Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the following resolution with the recommendation that it do pass.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Clerk of the House be empowered, and is hereby authorized, to continue in the service of the House the two laborers in the Clerk's document-room authorized under the resolution of June 13, 1884, to arrange, sack, and ship the reserved calf-bound and special-bound documents belonging to members and to arrange the files, the said laborers to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the same rate heretofore named, under the supervision of the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I now demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to close debate on the pending amendment and section under consideration in five minutes.

Mr. REED. Are we not entitled to the morning hour on private bill day?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that point?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. ANDERSON. It comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine raises the question that this is private bill day.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is not the point of the gentleman from Maine made too late, as the Chair has already stated what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes the gentleman from Maine could not know what business the House was about to proceed with until it was stated by the Chair.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the inquiry whether the morning hour can prevent us from taking a vote when the previous question has been asked.

The SPEAKER. It would not, but the previous question has not been demanded.

Mr. REAGAN. But it has been called for and the yeas and nays ordered on that vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion was to move to close debate on this amendment and on this section in five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. On the section and amendment.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman did not demand the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Whatever words I used, that was what I meant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made a motion, which was authorized under the rule adopted by the House on yesterday, to close debate on the amendment and section under consideration in five minutes. That, however, is not the previous question. The previous question, if ordered, would close debate at once.

Mr. REAGAN. I used the words "close debate," when I should have said the previous question. My object was to get a vote without unnecessary delay.

The SPEAKER. That, of course, would not compel the House to proceed at once to a vote upon the question, which would be the case if the previous question had been demanded and ordered.

But the Chair has not yet decided this question, nor does the Chair mean to decide now, without hearing further upon the subject or without further examination, that private business can cut off the consideration of the special order to-day. The Chair desires to examine, in the first instance, the order under which the House is acting upon this particular measure, and also the rule of the House bearing upon the question of private business. The Chair will cause the Clerk to read the order which was made by the House on the 1st of March last under a suspension of the rules—the rules being suspended to make the order—and the subsequent order of the 18th of March.

The Clerk read as follows:

March 1, 1884. A bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce, and to regulate such commerce.

Tuesday, March 18, 1884, in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and the consideration thereof to be continued from day to day until finally acted on, not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this order when made interfered evidently with prior orders under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Except in so far as it excepted from its operation the consideration of appropriation and revenue bills.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And further, it provides that this particular bill is to be considered from day to day until disposed of. It made no provision for the Private Calendar on Fridays having precedence and power to interfere with its consideration on private bill day. I am not disposed to occupy the time of the House in debating points of order, even when I do not think they go the way they might. But the country is looking for legislation upon this subject, if upon anything.

Mr. REED. As I can not reply to the last observation of the gentleman from Iowa because it does not strike me as being pertinent to the point of order, I shall say nothing upon it.

It is entirely immaterial to me how the Chair decides the question.

But the point I suggest is that the order which has been read only refers to the continuation of this subject from day to day when business of this character is properly in order. It does not interfere with or make any exclusion of the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It does not say that it shall not interfere with it.

Mr. REED. Nor has it ever been held that such an order would interfere with private bill day.

The SPEAKER. It has been held both ways, the Chair thinks.

Mr. REED. Then I have nothing further to say upon that point, and withdraw my observation about what the gentleman from Iowa said, not being parliamentary.

The SPEAKER. If the order made on the 1st of March had contained no exceptions at all, the question presented now would assume a very different form. But it will be observed that it does except revenue and appropriation bills and nothing else, thereby indicating the purpose of the House to make no other exceptions. And as it provides that its consideration shall proceed from day to day until disposed of, the House must have had in mind the exclusion of the Private Calendar.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Speaker if that order would cover the special session of to-night?

The SPEAKER. It would not, because we have another special order of the House which sets apart a particular evening for particular purposes.

Mr. REED. But that order was prior to this one, and this does not except it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Texas that there is a way which has been proposed by some members who desire to leave the city this evening, after having taken a vote on the propositions embodied in this bill, which may obviate all difficulty, and that is that we substitute to-morrow for private bill day, and consider the unfinished business to-day. That will enable them to go this evening without missing a vote on the Reagan bill if they are disposed to omit attendance when the Private Calendar is under consideration. It will give them an opportunity of leaving the city to-night. Quite a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House have made that suggestion, and I hope there will be no objection to adopting it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I should certainly object to any such arrangement, for it is my intention to call up the Mexican pension bill as soon as the interstate commerce bill is disposed of, and I will make no arrangement that would prevent me from exercising that privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under the special order of the House the interstate-commerce bill is entitled to consideration to-day.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. As against the consideration of the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. REED. Are we not entitled to a morning hour?

The SPEAKER. The order of the House fixes no hour. The order does not provide that this shall be taken up after the morning hour. In point of fact, the gentleman from Texas has been calling the bill up from day to day immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Did it not require unanimous consent on last Friday and Friday a week ago to proceed with the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill instead of the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. That question was not raised. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] on last Friday simply rose in his seat and stated that he would not insist upon the consideration of private business on that day.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Then I raise the question of consideration. I hold that we should give the Private Calendar at least one day; that private business is entitled to the consideration of the House one single day before adjournment for the holidays.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is raised.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does it not require a vote of two-thirds to set aside the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is the question before the House; and it has always been held to be in the power of the House to say whether it will or will not proceed with the consideration of a matter by a majority vote.

The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the interstate-commerce bill?

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 105, noes 49.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No announcement of the vote has been made.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The vote has been announced and no quorum has voted. I insist upon the point of order, because every agreement that has been made upon the floor of the House and in the Committee on Commerce has been violated.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. REAGAN were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 144, noes 26.

So the House agreed to consider the bill (H. R. 5461) to establish a board of commissioners of interstate commerce and to regulate such commerce.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] to limit debate on the pending amendment and section to five minutes; and on this question the yeas and nays were ordered by the House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I would like to have the amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The question is not on the amendment, but on the motion to limit debate.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 58, not voting 108; as follows:

YEAS—157.

Alexander,	Ferrell,	Miller, J. F.	Springer,
Anderson,	Follett,	Mills,	Stewart, Charles
Bagley,	Forney,	Mitchell,	Stockslager,
Barksdale,	Fyan,	Money,	Storm,
Beach,	Geddes,	Moulton,	Struble,
Bennett,	Gibson,	Murphy,	Sumner, C. A.
Blanchard,	Glascock,	Murray,	Thompson,
Blount,	Green,	Neece,	Throckmorton,
Boyle,	Greenleaf,	Nicholls,	Tillman,
Bratton,	Guenther,	Oates,	Townshend,
Breckinridge,	Halsell,	O'Ferrall,	Tucker,
Brown, W. W.	Hammond,	O'Neill, J. J.	Tully,
Browne, T. M.	Hanback,	Payne,	Turner, H. G.
Buchanan,	Hancock,	Pierce,	Turner, Oscar
Buckner,	Hardeman,	Peel,	Van Alstyne,
Burnes,	Henderson, D. B.	Peters,	Van Eaton,
Cabell,	Henley,	Post,	Wallace,
Campbell, Felix	Hewitt, A. S.	Potter,	Ward,
Campbell, J. E.	Hill,	Pryor,	Warner, A. J.
Campbell, J. M.	Holman,	Pusey,	Warner, Richard
Candler,	Holmes,	Randall,	Weaver,
Cassidy,	Hopkins,	Ray, G. W.	Wellborn,
Clardy,	Houseman,	Ray, Ossian	Wemple,
Clements,	Hunt,	Reagan,	Wilkins,
Cobb,	Hurd,	Reese,	Williams,
Converse,	Hutchins,	Riggs,	Willis,
Covington,	James,	Robertson,	Wilson, James
Cox, W. R.	Jones, B. W.	Robinson, W. E.	Wilson, W. L.
Culbertson, W. W.	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, J. H.	Winans, E. B.
Deuster,	Jordan,	Rogers, W. F.	Winans, John
Dibble,	Kleiner,	Rosecrans,	Wise, G. D.
Dibrell,	Lamb,	Ryan,	Wolford,
Dowd,	Lanham,	Scales,	Wood,
Dunn,	Le Fevre,	Seney,	Woodward,
Eaton,	Lewis,	Shelley,	Worthington,
Eldredge,	Lore,	Shively,	Yaple,
Elliott,	Lowry,	Singleton,	Young.
Ellis,	McAdoo,	Skinner, C. R.
English,	McMillin,	Smith, H. Y.
Ermentrout,	Matson,	Spriggs,

NAYS—58.

Adams, G. E.	George,	Long,	Seymour,
Barr,	Harmer,	Lyman,	Smalls,
Bisbee,	Haynes,	McComas,	Smith, A. H.
Boutelle,	Henderson, T. J.	Morrill,	Spooner,
Brewer, F. B.	Hepburn,	Nutting,	Stephenson,
Brewer, J. H.	Hitt,	O'Hara,	Stone,
Brumm,	Horr,	O'Neill, Charles	Strait,
Budd,	Howey,	Parker,	Talbott,
Cannon,	Jeffords,	Payson,	Taylor, E. B.
Chace,	Johnson,	Perkins,	Taylor, J. D.
Cutcheon,	Kean,	Phelps,	Thomas,
Davis, G. R.	Keifer,	Poland,	Wadsworth,
Dingley,	Ketcham,	Price,	Wait.
Evans,	Lacey,	Rockwell,
Everhart,	Laird,	Rowell,

NOT VOTING—108.

Adams, J. J.	Culberson, D. B.	Hoblitzell,	Patton,
Aiken,	Cullen,	Holton,	Pettibone,
Arnot,	Curtin,	Hooper,	Rankin,
Atkinson,	Dargan,	Houk,	Ranney,
Ballentine,	Davidson,	Jones, J. K.	Reed,
Barbour,	Davis, L. H.	Jones, J. T.	Rice,
Bayne,	Davis, R. T.	Kelley,	Robinson, J. S.
Belford,	Dockery,	Kellogg,	Russell,
Belmont,	Dorsheimer,	King,	Shaw,
Bingham,	Dunham,	Lawrence,	Skinner, T. G.
Blackburn,	Ellwood,	Libbey,	Slocum,
Bland,	Fiedler,	Lovering,	Snyder,
Bowen,	Findlay,	McCoid,	Steele,
Brainerd,	Finerty,	McCormick,	Stevens,
Breitung,	Foran,	Maybury,	Stewart, J. W.
Broadhead,	Funston,	Millard,	Sumner, D. H.
Burleigh,	Garrison,	Miller, S. H.	Taylor, J. M.
Caldwell,	Goff,	Milliken,	Valentine,
Carleton,	Graves,	Morgan,	Vance,
Chalmers,	Hardy,	Morrison,	Wakefield,
Clay,	Hart,	Morse,	Washburn,
Collins,	Hatch, H. H.	Muldrow,	Weller,
Connolly,	Hatch, W. H.	Muller,	White, J. D.
Cook,	Hemphill,	Mutchler,	White, Milo
Cosgrove,	Herbert,	Nelson,	Whiting,
Cox, S. S.	Hewitt, G. W.	Ochiltree,	Wise, J. S.
Crisp,	Hiscock,	Paige,	York.

So the motion to limit debate was agreed to.

Mr. LAMB. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. BELFORD.
Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. HOOPER.
Mr. KING with Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. BLAND with Mr. VALENTINE.
Mr. FIEDLER with Mr. STEELE.
Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. JOHN S. WISE.
Mr. MULLER with Mr. DUNHAM.
Mr. MORGAN with Mr. BAYNE.
Mr. BLACKBURN with Mr. BOWEN.
Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, with Mr. YORK.
Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. FINERTY.
Mr. SKINNER, of North Carolina, with Mr. MCCORMICK.
Mr. DARGAN with Mr. WASHBURN.
Mr. VANCE with Mr. WHITING.
Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, with Mr. RUSSELL.
Mr. AIKEN with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. HART, on the interstate-commerce bill.
Mr. HILL with Mr. CHALMERS, on the interstate-commerce bill.
Mr. RANKIN with Mr. OCHILTREE, on the interstate-commerce bill.
Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. MCCOID, until December 21.
Mr. MILLARD with Mr. MULDROW, on all questions.
Mr. HATCH, of Michigan, with Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, on the interstate-commerce bill, except on its final passage.
Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. RICE, until January 5.
Mr. HERBERT with Mr. REED, until January 5.
Mr. MORRISON with Mr. HISCOCK, until January 5.
Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. BREITUNG, for this day.
Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee, with Mr. WAKEFIELD, for to-day.
Mr. CRISP with Mr. MILLIKEN, for this day.
Mr. COSGROVE with Mr. PETTIBONE, for this day.
Mr. GOFF with Mr. SNYDER, for this day.
Mr. CONNOLLY with Mr. LAWRENCE, for this day.
Mr. CLAY with Mr. KELLOGG, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. By virtue of the vote just taken all debate upon the pending amendment and the section under consideration is limited to five minutes.

Mr. REAGAN. Of the five minutes allowed for debate I allow three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HANCOCK, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 7676, a bill (H. R. 7785) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the bill by striking out the second section and inserting what I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that by the order of the House just made the debate is limited to five minutes on the pending amendment and the section. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, however, can proceed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Of course I assert my own right as a member of this House acting as a Committee of the Whole to offer an amendment. I must, however, thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] for his liberality, now shown for the first time, I believe. If any one can tell me when the gentleman has shown any liberality heretofore in connection with this bill I would like to know it.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment which I offer in lieu of the second section is the section as agreed upon by a majority of the Committee on Commerce; and the understanding in that committee was that each member of the committee should have the opportunity (if not by the allowance of the gentleman from Texas at least by the permission of this House) to offer in the House such amendments to the bill as he might deem proper, and that of course he should have the opportunity to explain them.

Now, I propose to strike out the second section of this bill and insert the section relating to this question of rebates as agreed upon by a majority of the Committee on Commerce. The section of the gentleman's substitute is an iron-clad section. The section as agreed upon by the majority of the Committee on Commerce permits rebates, provided there is no discrimination—permits them when they are accorded to all persons under similar circumstances.

I hope the House will in its judgment accept this amendment and vote it in, striking out the section of the substitute bill. I want, if I can, to assist in the improvement of the substitute bill, which needs a great deal of improvement; and I hope it will be greatly improved before we get through with this question, which has occupied the House for two or three weeks to the exclusion of much legislation—to the exclusion of the Private Calendar for three Fridays, the interests of individuals being thus neglected, though in many instances individuals are as much justified in asking Congress for action as is the gentleman from Texas, for the gratification of whose personal feeling with regard to this bill and his ambition to pass it we have, I think, done enough. I think now we ought to amend the bill, removing its imperfections wherever we can.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] thinks me very illiberal in reference to this bill because I do not allow amendments. So the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] thought yesterday, after we had spent two days on one section of the bill amending it.

Now, while it was understood, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests, that this bill was to be reported subject to the offering of amendments by any member of the committee, as showing all the members were not satisfied with the details of the bill, it was not understood that the right to amend and debate should be so unlimited as to prevent the House from acting on the subject. I think the gentleman, anxious as he is to defeat this bill, ought to be satisfied with two days on one section.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I took no time in those two days. This side of the House was trying to extend human liberty; the gentleman and his followers were trying to contract it.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman knows, though he talks about "extending human liberty," that there has been no proposition made here that would affect human liberty in any way. Perhaps he is like a good many others on both sides of the House; whenever the "nigger" is mentioned they shy like a moon-eyed horse at a black stump. [Laughter]. There is nothing in this attempt to bring that subject in here, and I have already said so. I hope gentlemen will not scare so badly. I have been accustomed to the "nigger" all my life, and he does not scare me at all.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is not easy to scare the gentleman from Texas about anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.) The Chair trusts the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not interrupt the gentleman from Texas without his consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I think that in the arraignment of myself and the House for the action taken upon this bill the gentleman indicates what I have said before, that he is opposed to the passage of the bill. I believe I am not mistaken in that. Mr. Speaker, I have no further remark to make, and I desire a vote.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask that my amendment may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the second section of the substitute bill and insert the following:
"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as aforesaid directly or indirectly to allow any rebate, drawback, or other advantage, in any form, upon shipments made or services rendered as aforesaid by him or them which under similar circumstances are not allowed to all other persons."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If it be in order, I desire to offer that amendment at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in order. The first question, however, is upon an amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to strike out the last word of the section.

The amendment of Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky, was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL], which has just been read.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask the Clerk to read the second section as it stands which my amendment proposes to strike out.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the transportation of property as aforesaid directly or indirectly to allow any rebate, drawback, or other advantage, in any form, upon shipments made or services rendered as aforesaid by him or them.

Mr. BUDD. Before the proposed substitute for the section is voted upon I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text of the section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in order. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. BUDD].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after the word "them," in line 5, the following:
"Except for the purpose of assisting in the development of an industrial enterprise, and which shall under substantially similar circumstances be allowed to all persons."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. BUDD, there were—ayes 30, noes 80.

Mr. BUDD. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point having been made that no quorum has voted on the amendment of the gentleman from California, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BUDD. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been withdrawn, the amendment is not agreed to. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 52, noes 87.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 73, nays 130, not voting 120; as follows:

YEAS—73.

Adams, G. E.	Greenleaf,	Libbey,	Smith, A. H.
Barr,	Guenther,	Long,	Smith, H. Y.
Bingham,	Hanback,	Lyman,	Spooner,
Bisbee,	Harmer,	Morrill,	Stephenson,
Boutelle,	Haynes,	Nutting,	Strait,
Brainerd,	Henderson, D. B.	O'Hara,	Struble,
Brewer, J. H.	Henderson, T. J.	O'Neill, Charles	Taylor, E. B.
Burleigh,	Hepburn,	O'Neill, J. J.	Taylor, J. D.
Cannon,	Hewitt, A. S.	Payne,	Thomas,
Chace,	Hitt,	Perkins,	Tillman,
Culbertson, W. W.	Holmes,	Phelps,	Wadsworth,
Cullen,	Holton,	Poland,	Wait,
Cutcheon,	Howey,	Potter,	Warner, A. J.
Davis, G. R.	Jeffords,	Price,	White, J. D.
Dibble,	Johnson,	Ray, Ossian	Wilson, James
Dingley,	Kean,	Robinson, J. S.	Woodward.
Evans,	Keifer,	Rockwell,
Everhart,	Ketcham,	Seymour,
George,	Lacey,	Smalls,

NAYS—130.

Alexander,	Dowd,	Lowry,	Skinner, C. R.
Anderson,	Dunn,	McAdoo,	Springer,
Bagley,	Eaton,	McComas,	Stewart, Charles
Barksdale,	Eldredge,	McMillin,	Stockslager,
Beach,	Elliott,	Matson,	Storm,
Bennett,	English,	Miller, J. F.	Sumner, C. A.
Blackburn,	Ermentrout,	Mills,	Talbott,
Blanchard,	Ferrell,	Moulton,	Thompson,
Blount,	Follett,	Murphy,	Throckmorton,
Bratton,	Forney,	Murray,	Tucker,
Breckinridge,	Fyan,	Neece,	Tully,
Brewer, F. B.	Geddes,	Nicholls,	Turner, H. G.
Broadhead,	Gibson,	O'Ferrall,	Turner, Oscar
Brown, W. W.	Glascock,	Payson,	Van Eaton,
Browne, T. M.	Green,	Peel,	Wallace,
Buchanan,	Halsell,	Peters,	Ward,
Buckner,	Hammond,	Pierce,	Warner, Richard
Budd,	Hardeman,	Pryor,	Weaver,
Burnes,	Henley,	Pusey,	Wellborn,
Cabell,	Hill,	Ranney,	Wilkins,
Campbell, Felix,	Hoblitzell,	Reagan,	Williams,
Campbell, J. E.	Hopkins,	Reese,	Willis,
Campbell, J. M.	Houseman,	Riggs,	Wilson, W. L.
Candler,	James,	Robertson,	Winans, E. B.
Cassidy,	Jones, B. W.	Robinson, W. E.	Winans, John
Clardy,	Jones, J. H.	Rogers, J. H.	Wise, G. D.
Clements,	Jordan,	Rogers, W. F.	Wolford,
Cobb,	Kleiner,	Rosecrans,	Wood,
Converse,	Laird,	Ryan,	Worthington,
Covington,	Lamb,	Scales,	Yaple,
Cox, S. S.	Lanham,	Seney,	Young.
Cox, W. R.	Le Fevre,	Shively,
Dibrell,	Lewis,	Singleton,

NOT VOTING—120.

Adams, J. J.	Dockery,	Jones, J. T.	Rankin,
Aiken,	Dorsheimer,	Kelley,	Ray, G. W.
Arnot,	Dunham,	Kellogg,	Reed,
Atkinson,	Ellis,	King,	Rice,
Ballentine,	Ellwood,	Lawrence,	Rowell,
Barbour,	Fiedler,	Lore,	Russell,
Bayne,	Findlay,	Lovering,	Shaw,
Belford,	Finerty,	McCoid,	Shelley,
Belmont,	Foran,	McCormick,	Skinner, T. G.
Bland,	Funston,	Maybury,	Slocum,
Bowen,	Garrison,	Millard,	Snyder,
Boyle,	Goff,	Miller, S. H.	Spriggs,
Breitung,	Graves,	Milliken,	Steele,
Brumm,	Hancock,	Mitchell,	Stevens,
Caldwell,	Hardy,	Money,	Stewart, J. W.
Carleton,	Hart,	Morgan,	Stone,
Chalmers,	Hatch, H. H.	Morrison,	Sumner, D. H.
Clay,	Hatch, W. H.	Morse,	Taylor, J. M.
Collins,	Hemphill,	Muldrow,	Townshend,
Connolly,	Herbert,	Muller,	Valentine,
Cook,	Hewitt, G. W.	Mutchler,	Van Alstyne,
Cosgrove,	Hiscock,	Nelson,	Vance,
Crisp,	Holman,	Oates,	Wakefield,
Culberson, D. B.	Hooper,	Ochiltree,	Washburn,
Curtin,	Horr,	Paige,	Weller,
Dargan,	Houk,	Parker,	Wemple,
Davidson,	Hunt,	Patton,	White, Milo
Davis, L. H.	Hurd,	Pettibone,	Whiting,
Davis, R. T.	Hutchins,	Post,	Wise, J. S.
Deuster,	Jones, J. K.	Randall,	York.

So the amendment was rejected.

On motion of Mr. BAGLEY, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, with Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, for this day.

Mr. POST with Mr. FUNSTON, on this vote.

Mr. OATES with Mr. RANNEY, on all political questions until after the recess.

Mr. DAVIS, of Missouri, with Mr. KELLEY, until further notice.

Mr. MONEY with Mr. ATKINSON, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. COSGROVE with Mr. PETTIBONE, for this day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say when this vote was taken I was absent on a conference committee by order of the House. If present, I should have voted "no."

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. I am requested to state that my colleagues Messrs. BRUMM and CURTIN are paired on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. EVERHART moved the following amendment:

And no railroad company or companies shall grant free passes allowing persons to ride free from one State or Territory into another: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to officers or employés of railroad companies or to the United States supervisors or commissioners of railroads, to cases of charity, nor prevent the issuing of excursion or commutation tickets at special rates.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons engaged in the carriage, receiving, storage, or handling of property as mentioned in the first section of this act to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, by changes of schedule, carriage in different cars, or by any other means, with intent to prevent the carriage of such property from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination, whether carried on one or several railroads. And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons carrying property as aforesaid to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights, or to pool the freights, of different and competing railroads, by dividing between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion of them.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move to strike out all after the word "and," in line 9, to the close of the section relating to pooling. I ask that the words be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be unlawful for any person or persons carrying property as aforesaid to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination for the pooling of freights, or to pool the freights, of different and competing railroads, by dividing between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of sch railroads, or any portion of them.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly this provision is based upon the idea that pooling is an evil which ought to be abated; that it is against the public interest, and therefore should be prohibited. Pooling may be an evil, Mr. Speaker. There are a great many evils in this world which are remedies for other evils still greater. This class of remedial evils constitutes a large portion of the existing legislation of every civilized country. Now, the evil that pooling was intended to remedy became intolerable. It was the evil of competition, of unlimited competition, leading to discrimination, to private bargains, to fluctuations in the transportation of goods. Not a single consignment could be carried from one point in this country to any other point without a private bargain being necessary on the part of the shipper and the railroad company. Great houses were compelled to employ clerks whose sole business it was to go from railroad office to railroad office and make bargains. More than that, the companies themselves who were intended to be the common carriers for the commerce of the country found themselves reduced to the position of hucksters, and compelled to have a corps of officers and an army of clerks to regulate freight on every invoice of goods which might be shipped over their roads. This evil was so enormous both to the public and the railroad companies that it led to the only practical remedy, which was pooling.

Pooling, if honestly conducted, gives stability in the rate of freights and equal terms to every customer, and is in fact carrying out the great right in common carriage of equal rights to all men. But pooling has not always been honestly managed; hence railroad companies in their own interest were compelled to attempt to regulate pooling, and they have regulated it by the appointment of commissions and commissioners. The evil of competitive and uncertain rates has therefore to a large extent been overcome by a pooling arrangement. How shall the evils of a pooling arrangement be overcome?

The gentleman from Texas tells us by the abolition of pooling, and then he sends us back into the very situation from which the privilege of pooling extricated us.

Mr. Speaker, legislation should not be retroactive. It should proceed upon a careful study of the conditions under which we are trying to do business, and the indications of the situation should be carefully studied. Let me tell these gentlemen, and I suppose I utter a familiar truth to the legal luminaries in this House, that first we get experience, out of experience comes custom, and out of custom comes the common law. So when we are trying to legislate let us see how things are tending toward the establishment of custom; and instead of trying to crush and break it down, let us by legislation enact the coming custom, if we know it earlier, into law. You will thus anticipate what is to be the common law by the common consent of the citizens of this country. Therefore when the railroad companies and the public consented, in view of the common interest of all, to the establishment of this system of pooling, they did it by a commission, and it should be an indication to us that we should also regulate pooling by the establishment of a commission. A bill brought in here to establish a commission would be one approved by the general judgment and experience of men familiar with business. A bill to prevent pooling will be against the experience and general judgment of men familiar with business.

But I see that my time is about to expire, and I hope that some gentleman will take the floor and yield to me.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REAGAN. I must object, Mr. Speaker, to farming out the floor. I think we have had a long enough debate upon this bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I wish to remind the gentleman from Texas that the views of New York have not been heard in this debate, and if the gentleman from Texas chooses to paralyze that voice in this House and not give it expression let him take the consequences upon himself and on his bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas object to the extension of the time of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman can go on and utter the voice of New York. I shall not object.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I said, sir, that the voice of New York, that great emporium of commerce, had not been heard in this debate. Its voice has been silent because the men of business in New York despair of wise legislation upon these great commercial questions from this House. They have seen this House resist the resumption of specie payments. They have seen this House thrust the silver bill down the reluctant throats of an unwilling community; and now they behold this House and this side of it forcing reactionary measures upon the commerce of the country which will paralyze the business of the port which is the throat of the commerce of this country.

Fifty-seven per cent. of all the commerce of this country passes through the city of New York. The pulses of commerce all over the civilized globe are felt by thousands of fingers in that great mart. The influences that determine prices are there known and from there they radiate to every hamlet in this land. New York registers the conditions upon which the foreign commerce of this country should be done. It registers them every hour and minute of the day, and yet here come gentlemen who propose that no alteration in the conditions of commerce shall be made except upon five days' notice. They have an impression that they can determine the conditions upon which business shall be done. I tell them that all their remedy will do will be to prevent the Western, the Southern producers, who have corn, provisions, and cotton for sale, from getting access to the open markets of the world.

The congestion which now prevails in every part of this country—congestion of products, congestion of labor, congestion of capital, so that there is no profit in production, no adequate and remunerative employment for labor and no compensation for the use of capital; congestion due to the fact that the channels of commerce have been obstructed and dammed up by protective laws—these gentlemen propose to increase by saying you shall not carry your goods from the producers to the consumers of the world except you give five days' notice of any change of schedule rates.

Do these gentlemen suppose that the price of grain is made by Congress? Do they suppose that it is made by the men who deal in it in Chicago? Do they suppose that steamship companies determine prices? Nothing of the kind. The prices are all made in the exchanges of Mark Lane and Leadenhall street. They are telegraphed every day and hour all over the globe. We know what we can get for a bushel of grain delivered in Liverpool. We know what we can buy it for in Chicago. The steamship company and the railroad company can co-operate together and divide the difference between prices in Chicago and Liverpool, and the waiting ship can take its cargo out of the elevators which in turn receive the grain ordered to fill up the vacuum. But if this bill passes that process becomes impossible; steamships must go unloaded, and the commerce of your great port, which is but the outlet of the commerce of the country and its expression, will be utterly paralyzed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REAGAN. The principal point of objection made to this section by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] was that without the privilege to the railroads of pooling shippers would be driven to the employment of large numbers of clerks and to special contracts with railroad companies, as he says they were before pooling was adopted as a system by the railroads. Just how much truth there might be in the gentleman's position, if this were the only section of the bill that was to be acted upon, I do not know. But if the gentleman had gone a little further and looked at other provisions of this bill he would have seen that it provides that schedules of rates shall be posted up, and that it gives both a criminal and a civil remedy for charging more or less than schedule rates. We propose by law to remedy the evil which the gentleman proposes to remedy by giving the right to the railroads to pool.

The gentleman from New York speaks of the channels of commerce being blocked up. They have not been blocked up by the prohibition of pooling, for that is in full operation, and the country was enjoying the blessings of pooling to which he invites us when that blockade took place.

I will tell you what this section will do. It will restore to the people the right of competition. It will cheapen their rates of freight, and in connection with other provisions of this bill, it will drive railroad corporations to ordinary business methods, such as control other great branches of business in this country. It will take from them that monopoly power which is used to enrich themselves and to impoverish the remainder of the country. And that is what it is intended for. It will take from that gentleman the power by pooling on railroads to secure terms on his freight which perhaps he would not secure if it was open to free and fair competition in the markets.

